SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 1937

Rev. W. L. Darby, D. D., executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and loving Lord, we approach Thee in humility and reverence, for Thou art our creator and preserver; Thou alone art worthy of our worship. We come with gratitude for the multitude of Thy mercies upon us as a people through the years of our national life. May we increasingly deserve Thy grace and favor. Cleanse us from selfishness and greed, from envy and covetousness. Forgive our individual and collective sins and help us to seek those great moral and spiritual ideals which alone will assure our stability and permanence.

In these times of stress and strain, when we know not what a day may bring forth, we pray for wisdom to be given the President of the United States, his Cabinet and other advisers, and the members of our courts. In this hour we ask Thy blessing upon the Congress and especially upon this body, the Senate of the United States. Give Thy servants here vision and judgment, so that, devoted to the welfare of their country, they may act for the highest interests of its citizens.

Aid us also to maintain our place helpfully in the family of nations to which we belong. Grant us the spirit of peace and good will, not that of hatred and strife. Let us all labor together for the common good and the coming of Thy kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood.

Today give Thy servants here the consciousness of Thy presence and guidance in all their discussions and actions. This we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, March 22, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Joint memorial of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Utah to the Congress of the United States of America, urging the passage of H. R. 5028, by Mr. DEEN

Whereas there is now introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill known as H. R. 5028, by Mr. DEEN, providing for an appropriation of $125,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, and June 30, 1939, for the purpose of increasing employment by providing for emergency construction of public highways and other related projects; and

Whereas under the terms of this bill the States would not be required to match with State funds any portion of these appropriations; and

Whereas any portion of the said appropriations which might be necessary may be used for matching Federal funds already authorized to be appropriated to the States for highway purposes; and

Whereas there is also made available the sum of $25,000,000 per year for the construction of farm-to-market and feeder roads under the same terms as set forth above; and

Whereas the State of Utah has plans and surveys for projects sufficiently advanced so that these funds could be put under contract without undue delay; and

Whereas the State of Utah at the present time is unable to match all of the funds now allocated for expenditure during the present year; and

Whereas the large amount of work that could be done through the expenditure of these funds would result in the employing of a large number of needy persons: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Utah respectfully and earnestly memorialize and request the Congress of the United States to give serious consideration to the passage of this bill; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Utah in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Memorial requesting that the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States pass S. 1375, which provides punishment for persons stealing cattle moving in interstate commerce

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Utah, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States S. 1375, which is "A bill to provide for the punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas stealing of animals is rapidly reaching alarming proportions and the apprehension and conviction of persons engaged in stealing of animals is becoming increasingly more difficult because of modern means of transportation and the inability of State governments to afford protection to citizens beyond the borders of the State; and

Whereas the passage of S. 1375 would enable the Federal Government to apprehend and convict persons stealing animals who are now able to evade punishment; and

Whereas the passage of S. 1375 would be extremely beneficial to the State of Utah and all of the States in the United States which are concerned with the establishment and protection of the livestock industry of the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the twenty-second session of the Legislature of the State of Utah, That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give every consideration to S. 1375 to the end that it may be speedily enacted into law; be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Utah in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to give their support to, and vote for, the aforesaid measure, and that the secretary of state forward copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to Senators and Representatives of the State of Utah in said Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the O'Mahoney sugar bill so that said measure, while retaining all its meritorious provisions, will not discriminate against the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas on March 4, 1937, there was introduced before the Federal Congress the so-called O'Mahoney sugar bill, under which the quota provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act are intended to be extended and a new excise levy is imposed on all sugar processed in the United States; and

Whereas while the purpose underlying this measure is concededly to benefit the small producer and is sincerely advocated by the national administration, yet the bill, as framed, contains provisions of great injustice to and discrimination against Hawaii:

(1) In failing to classify this Territory as a domestic producer of sugar similar to other American sugar-producing areas, and in failing to accord the Territory the same treatment as to quotas as is accorded the producers in other parts of the United States, but, on the contrary, in classifying the Territory of Hawaii with foreign and other areas which are not, like this Territory, integral parts of the United States;

(2) In limiting the quantity of refined sugars which Hawaii may ship to other parts of the United States, while other domestic producers are not so restricted; and

(3) In providing for benefit payments only for cane harvested after June 30, 1937 (while our Hawaiian cane is practically all harvested prior to that date), so that our Territory must bear its burden of the excise tax, while receiving virtually no benefit payments for 1937; and

Whereas such discrimination and injustice is wholly undeserved and by reason of same this Territory and its citizens are denied the equal protection of the laws and equality of treatment with their fellow Americans in other parts of the United States, while bearing all the obligations with respect to taxation and otherwise which are borne by other domestic producers of sugars: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, memorialized and respectfully requested not to pass the said O'Mahoney sugar bill in its present form, but to so amend said measure that, while retaining all the merits of the bill and its sincere underlying purpose, it will not discriminate against the Territory of Hawaii and its citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Utah, favoring an appropriation by Congress of $100,000 for the purpose of erecting and equipping a junior college at a site now selected in the city of Roosevelt, Duchesne County, Utah, to be jointly used by both white and Indian children, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. THOMAS of Utah on the 22d instant, p. 2536, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. AUSTIN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That, as representing the sovereign State of Vermont, and speaking in its name, they deplore any attempt to weaken the independence of the Supreme Court of the United States, whether by enlarging its membership or in any other way making it dependent on or subservient to the executive or legislative branches of the Government, and declare that the safety of our institutions and Government depend upon the maintenance of the severance of executive, legislative, and judicial powers, without any branch of the Government attempting to encroach upon the powers or dictate the action of another; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Senators and to the Representative from Vermont in the Congress of the United States by the secretary of state.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens, being farmers of Morris County, Tex., praying for the adoption of the President's Court proposal, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of several citizens and also of members of Baptist Churches of West Bowdoin and vicinity, all in the State of Maine, praying that no law be enacted disturbing or abridging religious rights and privileges, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GIBSON presented a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 789, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, of Rutland, Vt., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by an annual town meeting of citizens of Barnard, Vt., protesting against the enactment of legislation to change the personnel or powers of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference certain resolutions from New York City endorsing and approving the so-called low-cost housing bill introduced by me in the Senate and by Representative STEAGALL in the House. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, March 21, 1937.

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a general meeting of the Mid-Town Tenants' Association on the evening of Friday, March 19, the following resolution was passed by unanimous vote:

"Whereas the Mid-Town Tenants' Association is an organization of tenants primarily interested in the improvement of housing conditions of its membership and persons of the lower-income groups: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it go on record as heartily endorsing the Wagner-Steagall bill; that it urges the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and representatives from this section in both the House of Representatives and the Senate to give active support to this bill; and, further, that it urges an amendment to the above bill providing a maximum rental of $5 per room per month."

Respectfully,

MID-TOWN TENANTS' ASSOCIATION,
LEE ROSENTHAL, Secretary.

[The above letter has been addressed to the following: HENRY B. STEAGALL, chairman, House Committee on Banking and Currency; HUGO L. BLACK, chairman, Senate Committee on Education and Labor; ROYAL S. COPELAND, Senator from New York; THEODORE A. PETSER, Representative, Seventeenth District of New York; JOHN J. O'CONNOR, Representative, Sixteenth District of New York; copy to National Public Housing Conference, 112 East Nineteenth Street, New York City.]

Resolved, That the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York does strongly urge the Congress of the United States to enact at the earliest possible date "the United States Housing Act of 1937", known as the Wagner-Steagall housing bill (S. 1685; H. R. 5033); and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Senator WAGNER, Congressman STEAGALL, and the chairmen of the House and Senate committees having jurisdiction thereof.

TALKING BOOKS FOR THE BLIND

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Presient, I present a letter from M. C. Migel, president of the American Foundation for the Blind, of New York City, with reference to pending legislation pertaining to talking books for the blind, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 15, 1937.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR:

* * * * * * *

I was very sorry to miss you in Washington last Saturday. Senator WAGNER, who is away on a little vacation, wished me particularly to see you on the matter of H. R. 168, talking books for the blind, regarding which Dr. Helen Keller recently had a conference with you, and which, after a hearing in the House, was reported out by the Committee on the Library and passed in the House.

I might inform you that in your own State of Massachusetts there are now between 500 and 700 talking-book machines in the hands of the blind, who are eagerly awaiting talking-book records.

Owing to preparations required for mechanical production of talking books, we are hoping that this bill will be reported out from your Committee on Education and Labor during the present week, and we also hope that, owing to the extended hearings had in the House, it will not be necessary for your committee to hold a hearing.

If you personally would be good enough to request consideration of this bill, in conjunction with Senator BLACK, in order to expedite reporting same, the blind of the entire country will be most grateful to you.

Thanking you in advance, and with warm personal regards, believe

Sincerely yours,

M. C. MIGEL, President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1631. A bill for the relief of Commander William I. Causey, United States Navy, and Lt. Comdr. Earl LeRoy Bailey, Supply Corps, United States Navy (Rept. No. 225); and

S. 1632. A bill for the relief of Capt. Benjamin Dutton, Jr.; Capt. C. H. J. Keppler; Commander Leo H. Thebaud; and Lt. Comdr. Gordon S. Bower, Supply Corps, United States Navy (Rept. No. 226).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 436. A bill for the relief of the owners of property damaged by high waters in the Blackfoot Reservoir (Rept. No. 229);

S. 1721. A bill authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma (Rept. No. 232);

S. 1831. A bill to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds (Rept. No. 233); and

S. 1901. A bill to amend the last two provisos, section 26, act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248) (Rept. No. 234).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1902. A bill to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 230); and

S. J. Res. 64. Joint resolution defining the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the act approved April 25, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 137), and for other purposes (Rept. No. 228).

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 323) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California", approved March 4, 1913, as extended by the acts of April 11, 1916, June 30, 1919, and March 10, 1928, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 231) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1621) to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 235) thereon.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. POPE. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 1397) to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 227) thereon. I will state that the report is unanimous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ELIGIBILITY OF JOSEPH P. KENNEDY FOR MARITIME COMMISSION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. COPELAND. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) limiting the operation of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, with respect to qualification of member of the United States Maritime Commission, and I submit a report (No. 224) thereon.

This is the joint resolution which was introduced yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I ask the Senator from Oregon if he will permit action to be taken on the joint resolution today?

Mr. McNARY. What is the joint resolution?

Mr. COPELAND. It is the joint resolution which we had under consideration in the Committee on Commerce this morning regarding the eligibility of Mr. Kennedy for appointment to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. McNARY. Does it relate to his eligibility or provide for the repeal of the statute? I did not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Both, perhaps.

Mr. McNARY. And what is the request?

Mr. COPELAND. The request is that immediate consideration may be given to the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Of course I am interested, but I am a little amazed at the size of the request. I certainly shall object to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, I ask that the joint resolution go to the calendar for consideration tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 1958) for the relief of Anton C. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. DUFFY introduced Senate bill 1959, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 1960) to prohibit the mailing of certain classes of unsolicited merchandise; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

A bill (S. 1961) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. William Hollister; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1962) relating to charges for quarters and subsistence made to certain members of the Soldiers' Home; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 1963) increasing the fees of jurors in United States courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1964) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands for the use and benefit of the Museum of New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. DAVIS:

A bill (S. 1965) for the relief of James A. Lyons; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1966) further amending the World War Adjusted Compensation Act; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 1967) to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 1968) for the allowance and payment of certain claims for wages for labor performed in excess of 8 hours per day in national armories and arsenals; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 1969) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. C. Owen; to the Committee on Pensions.

REAMORTIZATION OF MORTGAGES UNDER HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION ACT

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which would amend in certain respects the act creating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the general purpose being to permit in certain cases an amortization of loans of those who after they borrowed were unemployed. A serious situation has developed. I believe the bill, if enacted into law, would bring relief to a number of people who are now employed and who are unable to take up the deficiency of the amount in which they are in arrears. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, which is very brief, may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1959) to provide for the reamortization of mortgages by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for the reamortization of mortgages by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out "1952" and inserting in lieu thereof "1955."

SEC. 2. The fourth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That the Corporation may at any time reamortize any such home mortgage or other obligation or lien by means of a fixed number of payments sufficient to retire the unpaid balance of the then existing obligation of the home owner to the Corporation for principal and interest within a period of not to exceed 18 years from the date such home mortgage or other obligation or lien was acquired by the Corporation."

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—PRINTING OF ADDRESSES, ETC., IN RECORD

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD the statement made by Mr. Justice Ferdinand Pecora, of New York, last Saturday afternoon before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to inquire the nature of the request the Senator from Indiana made a moment ago.

Mr. MINTON. I asked to have published in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement made by Mr. Justice Pecora last Saturday afternoon before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no objection to granting the request, but I am going to insist that I be permitted to read the memorial to the Congress submitted by certain lawyers of San Francisco. A few days ago this question arose when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] presented an address by a distinguished lawyer of his State. I offered for publication in the RECORD a memorial of distinguished lawyers of my State. The result of the discussion then had was that both were denied publication in the RECORD. I have no objection to the publication in the RECORD of the matter now presented by the Senator from Indiana, but I want the opportunity then to present a similar request for my particular locality.

Mr. MINTON. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the result which was somewhat unfortunate was probably brought about by the objection I made to the offer submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. Inasmuch as the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] makes the request in the absence of the Senator from Kentucky I ask that the address presented by him, which was kept out of the RECORD by my objection, may also be printed in the RECORD, in order that both may be treated alike.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California supplemented by the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the addresses and memorial will be printed in the RECORD.

[The address of Justice Pecora, presented by Mr. MINTON, the memorial presented by Mr. JOHNSON of California, and the address heretofore presented by Mr. LOGAN appear in the Appendix.]

LABOR RELATIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

[Mr. POPE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Labor Relations, delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah on the evening of Mar. 22, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BURKE

[Mr. CONNALLY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, delivered by Senator BURKE on Mar. 20, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—STATEMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

[Mr. BYRNES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the statement made before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on Mar. 10, 1937, by Hon. Homer Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, in reference to the proposed reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESS BY JAMES H. WOLFE

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of the proposed reorganization of the Supreme Court, delivered by James H. Wolfe, associate justice of the Supreme Court of Utah, on Mar. 7, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM—ADDRESS BY L. R. EDMINSTER

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject The Trade Agreements Program in Retrospect and Prospect, delivered by Lynn Ramsay Edminster on the evening of Mar. 13, 1937, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, which appears in the Appendix.]

Resolved, etc., That the employees of the United States Government in the District of Columbia and the employees of the District of Columbia who come within the provisions of the act approved June 18, 1888, and who, under the provisions of said act, did not work on Wednesday, January 20, 1937, due to the closing of their places of employment on account of the holiday, shall be entitled to pay for said holiday.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY—JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 102) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1937, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the four next orders of business on the calendar, being Senate Joint Resolution 23, Senate Joint Resolution 24, Senate Joint Resolution 33, and Senate Joint Resolution 74, which relate to the same subject matter, be also passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On request of the Senator from New York, the joint resolutions will be passed over.

VICTOR M. RUIZ C AND LUZ ELENA ROBLES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1038) for the relief of Victor M. Ruiz C and Luz Elena Robles, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of liability, the sum of $266.50 to Victor M. Ruiz C and the sum of $490.15 to Luz Elena Robles, both of Panama City, Panama, in full and final settlement of all claims whatsoever against the United States for compensation for damages arising from personal injuries sustained in the collision between a United States Army truck and the Chevrolet touring car of Victor M. Ruiz C, on March 26, 1935, near Arraijan, Republic of Panama: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JORDAN ROBERTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1471) for the relief of Jordan Roberts, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps"; in line 7, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$300"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Jordan Roberts, of Murfreesboro, Ark., the sum of $300 in full satisfaction of his claim for damages arising out of personal injuries sustained by him when the truck upon which he was riding was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck, driven by an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps, on Highway No. 26, near Murfreesboro, Ark., on December 14, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

P. S. EVEREST

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1402) for the relief of P. S. Everest, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to P. S. Everest, former superintendent and special disbursing agent for the Lac du Flambeau Indian Agency, Lac du Flambeau, Wis., the sum of $515.14, said sum to be in full settlement of his claim against the Government on account of the fraudulent acts of W. H. Shawnee, deputy disbursing agent, at the time of his superintendency at the Lac du Flambeau Indian Agency: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACK J. WICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1414) for the relief of Jack J. Wick, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "West Virginia", to strike out "there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,483.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim" and to insert "The sum of $3,483.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of the sum made available to the President, for making loans for and otherwise aiding in the purchase of subsistence homesteads, by section 208 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, as amended and extended, is hereby made available for payment of such claim", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of Jack J. Wick, of Morgantown, W. Va., for $3,483.50 for the installation of a heating plant in the factory at the subsistence homestead project at Arthurdale, W. Va. The sum of $3,483.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of the sum made available to the President, for making loans for and otherwise aiding in the purchase of subsistence homesteads, by section 208 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, as amended and extended, is hereby made available for payment of such claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. FOX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1753) for the relief of James A. Fox, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $328 to James A. Fox, of West Plains, Mo., in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for damages sustained by him as the result of personal injuries received on July 27, 1936, when a dynamite explosion on Works Progress Administration project no. 976 blew a large segment of stump through the top of the automobile in which he was riding: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT O. BROWN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1589) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Brown, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$200" and insert "$147.21", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Brown, of Avery, Idaho, the sum of $147.21 in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States for damages to their household effects caused by debris thrown upon their home as a result of blasting operations on April 4, 1936, by the Forest Service in connection with an Emergency Conservation Work road-construction project in the St. Joe National Forest: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMELIA CORR

The bill (S. 784) for the relief of Amelia Corr was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation "Pay of the Navy, 1937", to Amelia Corr, mother of Frederick Andrew Corr, late chief pharmacist's mate, United States Navy, the sum of $945 in full settlement of her claim against the United States for 6 months' pay at the rate said Frederick Andrew Corr was receiving at the date of his death, October 1, 1932: Provided, That said Amelia Corr shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that she was actually dependent on her son, Frederick Andrew Corr, at the time of the latter's death and that the determination of such dependency by the Secretary of the Navy shall be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Government.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CIVILIANS AT HAMPTON ROADS NAVAL BASE

The bill (S. 1320) to provide for the reimbursement of certain civilians employed at the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., on May 4, 1930, for the value of tools lost in a fire on pier 7, at the naval operating base, on that date was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $245.17, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, certain civilians employed at the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., on May 4, 1930, for the value of tools owned by said civilians, lost as a result of the fire which destroyed pier 7 at the naval operating base on that date: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MARINE BAND AT CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION

The bill (S. 1330) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1937 Reunion at Jackson, Miss., June 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1937, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Marine Corps to attend and give concerts at the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Jackson, Miss., on June 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1937.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of such band in attending and giving concerts at such reunion there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That in addition to transportation and Pullman accommodations the leaders and members of the Marine Band be allowed not to exceed $5 per day each for actual living expenses while on this duty, and that the payment of such expenses shall be in addition to the pay and allowances to which they would be entitled while serving at their permanent station.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS IN ALAMEDA, CALIF.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 43) to amend Public Law No. 780, Seventy-fourth Congress, to authorize the acqusition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, for the purpose of making a correction therein, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 of Public Law No. 780, entitled "An act to authorize the acquisition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon", approved June 24, 1936, is amended by inserting after the words "free from all", before the colon and preceding the proviso, the word "encumbrances."

RETURN OF COMMISSION OF JOHN BAPTISTE ASHE

The bill (S. 1507) authorizing the return of the commission of John Baptiste Ashe as a major in the Continental Army to Martha B. Rogers, nee Ashe, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to deliver to Martha B. Rogers, nee Ashe, great-granddaughter of the late John Baptiste Ashe, formerly a lieutenant colonel in the Continental Army, the commission of the said John Baptiste Ashe as a major in such Continental Army, signed by John Jay, President of the Congress, in 1779, which commission is now a part of the permanent records of the General Accounting Office.

TRANSFERS OF FIREARMS—EXEMPTION FROM TAX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1905) to amend the National Firearms Act, approved June 26, 1934, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the National Firearms Act, approved June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 1236), as amended by the act approved April 10, 1936 (49 Stat. 1192), be, and the same is hereby, amended by substituting a semicolon for the period at the end of section 13 thereof and by adding immediately thereafter the following: "(4) to any citizen of the United States for the purpose of design, development, or test upon approval of the Secretary of War."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas to make a brief explanation of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the law requires the payment of a tax of $200 on each firearm transferred in the continental United States. Section 13 of the 1934 act, however, exempts certain transfers of firearms from the payment of the $200 tax. The purpose of the bill under consideration is to extend exemption to American inventors and designers from the payment of this tax who wish to purchase firearms for their use in experimental work in which the War Department has a military interest. Such purchases under the provisions of S. 1905 will have to be made with the approval of the Secretary of War. The measure is recommended by the War Department for enactment, and it has been reported favorably by the Military Affairs Committee with a recommendation that it do pass. In submitting the bill for favorable consideration the War Department pointed out that its enactment will make it possible for American citizens to purchase firearms, without inclusion of the transfer tax, for their use in design, development, or test when such purchase is approved by the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT MYER MILITARY RESERVATION, VA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1212) authorizing the conveyance to the State of Virginia, for highway purposes only, of portions of the Fort Myer Military Reservation, Va., and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the word "corner", to strike out "thereto" and insert "thereof", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Virginia, for highway purposes only, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to that portion of the Fort Myer Military Reservation, Arlington County, Va., and that section of the military road connecting the said reservation with Key Bridge, over which the State of Virginia was granted permission to extend a State highway known as the Lee Memorial Boulevard by instrument dated July 1, 1936: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such deviations in the descriptions of the lands involved as may be necessary to carry out the purposes and intent of this act.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized, upon such terms and conditions as he may consider advisable, to sell or otherwise dispose of that portion of the Fort Myer Military Reservation comprising the northwest corner thereof, containing approximately 2.2 acres, which will be separated from the main body of said reservation by the conveyance to the State of Virginia of one of the parcels referred to in section 1 hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOY SCOUT WORLD JAMBOREE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1473) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the world jamboree to the Boy Scouts of America; and to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to remit the tax on steamship tickets; and further to authorize the Secretary of State to issue passports to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters without fee for the application or the issuance of said passports, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "Holland" and insert "The Netherlands"; on page 2, line 22, after the word "jamboree", to strike out "that" and insert "That, under such regulations as he may prescribe"; and in line 25, after the word "America", to insert "who are citizens of the United States or, if not citizens of the United States, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, for use at the world jamboree, Boy Scouts, to be held in the Netherlands, in the months of July and August 1937, 1,200 cots, 4,500 blankets, tentage for 1,200 Scouts, 25 fire cranes, 25 sets commissary storage shelves, 100 pot chains, 100 cook pots, 25 United States parade-size flags, 50 fry pans, 50 bake pans, 50 reflector ovens, 200 water pails, 250 tin serving pans, 250 pitchers: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the National Council, Boy Scouts of America: Provided further, That the Secretary of War before delivering said property shall take from the said Boy Scouts of America a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized under such rules and regulations as he shall promulgate to remit the tax on steamship tickets to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters certified by the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, attending this jamboree. That, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue passports to bona-fide Scouts and Scouters of the Boy Scouts of America who are citizens of the United States or, if not citizens of the United States, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States upon certification by the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, as to their qualification to attend this jamboree as representing the National Council, Boy Scouts of America, without fee for the application or the issuance of said passports.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. C. YOUNG

The bill (H. R. 448) for the relief of C. C. Young was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. C. Young, of Pulaski County, Ark., the sum of $3,500, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the death of his minor son, Adriel Young, who was killed on September 15, 1932, from the explosion of 37-millimeter shell which had previously been picked up and carried from Camp Pike Reservation, Ark., by Alpha Vint, a minor: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the objection to the consideration of Calendar No. 226, Senate bill 1077. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session of the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I asked that the bill go over. In the first place, in the committee I offered an amendment which I understood was adopted, but which does not appear in the text of the reported bill. I stated to the committee, when that amendment was adopted, that the bill would require some further amendments. I have not yet been able to prepare those amendments, and therefore I asked that the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is now speaking with reference to Calendar No. 226, Senate bill 1077?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; the bill amending the Federal Trade Commission Act. An amendment which I offered, and which I understood had been adopted in the committee, does not appear in the bill as it is reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. And it was not incorporated in the report?

Mr. WHITE. And it is not referred to in the report, so far as I know. I wish to check on it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

OPERATION OF EXPERIMENTAL RADIO STATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3898) to amend section 313 of the Communications Act of 1934, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 318 of the Communications Act of 1934 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 318. The actual operation of all transmitting apparatus in any radio station for which a station license is required by this act shall be carried on only by a person holding an operator's license issued hereunder, and no person shall operate any such apparatus in such station except under and in accordance with an operator's license issued to him by the Commission: Provided, however, That the Commission if it shall find that the public interest, convenience, or necessity will be served thereby may waive or modify the foregoing provisions of this section for the operation of any station except (1) stations for which licensed operators are required by international agreements, (2) stations for which licensed operators are required for safety purposes, (3) stations engaged in broadcasting, and (4) stations operated as common carriers on frequencies below 30,000 kilocycles: Provided further, That the Commission shall have power to make special regulations governing the granting of licenses for the use of automatic radio devices and for the operation of such devices."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this passed the House and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It was recommended by the Communications Commission and simply permits the Communications Commission to authorize the operation of experimental stations, such as the one at Harvard College, without requiring a licensed operator, which they have no authority to do under the present law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, was not a similar bill passed at the last session?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; it was passed during the last session. I think the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is particularly familiar with the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, under existing law a radio station may not be operated without a licensed operator. At Harvard College, in particular, and at some other places, automatic transmitting apparatus has been developed. Such stations operate in the very high frequencies which are not in general use. This bill simply authorizes the operation of automatic transmitting apparatus without the presence of a licensed operator. As the Senator from Massachusetts says, the bill has been approved by the Communications Commission, and I know of no objection to it on the part of anyone.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I inquire whether these experimentations are not very helpful to the radio science.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, Mr. President. These experiments are in the ultra-high frequencies—frequencies above 30,000 kilocycles—and their use at the present time is largely an experimental one. They create no interference with anything else, and they may result in substantial development of the art.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, highway grade-crossing protective devices, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that bill will have to go over, because the wrong report was made on it. I shall file the correct report later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DEGREES TO GRADUATES OF MILITARY AND OTHER ACADEMIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2291) to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "upon", to strike out "all living graduates of the said academies" and insert "such other living graduates of the said academies as shall have met the requirements of the respective academies for such degree", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), be amended by changing the period at the end of the act to a colon and by adding the following words: "Provided, That on and after the date of the accrediting of the said academies by the Association of American Universities the superintendents of the respective academies may, under such rules and regulations as the respective secretaries may make, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon such other living graduates of the said academies as shall have met the requirements of the respective academies for such degree."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar.

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE CAPITOL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1170) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "determine", to strike out "except" and insert "excepting", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the central portion of the Capitol shall be extended, reconstructed, and replaced in substantial accordance with either scheme A or scheme B of the architectural plan submitted by the joint commission of Congress and reported to Congress on March 3, 1905 (H. Doc. No. 385, 58th Cong., 3d sess.), with such modifications as the Commission may determine, excepting so much of said plan as relates to a sculptural group in the pediment of the House wing, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not conversant with the provisions of the bill. I think the same statement applies to other Senators. It seems to me, therefore, that a statement should be made regarding the bill by the chairman of the committee reporting it, the author of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Texas that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] expressed a desire to address the Senate on yesterday, and has again requested recognition for the purpose of addressing the Senate. Does the Senator from Texas desire to complete the consideration of the bill before that is done, or does he desire to yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, I yield to the Senator from Florida. When the Senate proceeds with the consideration of the bill, it will be agreeable to the Senator from Texas, since he is chairman of the committee, to make a brief statement outlining the purposes of the measure; but I have no disposition to interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS. I should like to yield to the Senator from Texas if the consideration of the bill will not consume too much of the afternoon.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Florida, I shall be glad to proceed now. Otherwise, I am perfectly willing that he shall proceed.

Mr. ANDREWS. Can the Senator tell me how long the consideration of the bill will take?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that the Senator from Florida may speak at any time he obtains recognition. If he thinks the consideration of the bill is running on too long, he may take the floor and proceed with his address.

Mr. ANDREWS. I prefer to proceed now. Of course, I am with the Senator from Texas on the bill, having served on the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. It is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Texas for the Senator from Florida to proceed as long as he may desire.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION AFFECTING JUDICIARY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to have Senate Joint Resolution 100 read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) proposing an amendment to section 1, article III, of the Constitution of the United States relating to the judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall become a part of article III, section 1, of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE III

"SECTION 1. The judicial powers of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and judges of inferior courts, shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their offices during good behavior as herein provided, and shall receive at stated times for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. Any person having held a commission or commissions as Justice of the Supreme Court or judge of an intermediate appellate or district court for at least 10 years, continuously or otherwise, may voluntarily retire on full salary upon attaining the age of 70 years, subject to call, however, for such further duties as he may be willing to undertake, and upon attaining the age of 75 years he shall automatically retire and shall, during the remainder of his life, continue to receive the yearly compensation payable to him at the time of his retirement.

"The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and one Associate Justice appointed from territory comprising each of the intermediate appellate courts established by the Congress. No person other than a native-born citizen of the United States shall be appointed a member of the Supreme Court. No person shall be appointed to fill a vacancy in the office of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court which shall occur by reason of this amendment or any cause who has not been for 10 years last past an inhabitant of the territory comprising the highest intermediate appellate court from which no incumbent Associate Justice was an inhabitant at the time of his induction to office. A vacancy in the office of Chief Justice may be filled by appointment from any State or the District of Columbia.

"The Supreme Court may exercise its powers and jurisdiction under such rules as it may adopt, and two-thirds of its members shall constitute a quorum. The concurrence of a majority of all members of the Court shall be sufficient to a decision and judgment of the Court: Provided, That no act of Congress shall be adjudged invalid except upon the vote of not less than two-thirds of the whole Court.

"The membership of each intermediate appellate court, ordained and established by the Congress, shall consist of at least one judge from each State included within the territory comprising such court, one of whom shall be designated by the President as the presiding judge of the court.

"This section shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 5 years from the date of its submission."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, this proposed amendment to the Constitution is introduced to cover the various situations that have arisen with regard to the Supreme Court and the inferior Federal courts during the past half century. I trust that those who are interested in this subject may follow me closely. I hope with due modesty I may say that I have served about 7 years in each of the departments—legislative, executive, and judicial—of my native State. I have served in the lowest trial court, in the highest trial court, and with the highest appellate court at the time when it consisted of six members and three commissioners.

Senate Joint Resolution 100, introduced by me on March 12, proposing an amendment to section 1 of judicial article III of the Constitution, would make no substantial change in the first paragraph of section 1 of that article as it now stands. This proposed amendment in substance seeks to effectuate the following changes:

First. That the Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice, appointed from the United States at large, and one Associate Justice, to be appointed from territory composing each of the 10 circuit courts of appeal, by providing that hereafter no vacancy occurring by reason of this amendment, or for any cause, shall be filled by any person other than a native of the United States who has been for 10 years last past an inhabitant of one of the territories comprising a circuit court of appeal of which no incumbent Associate Justice was an inhabitant at the time of his induction to office; so that, gradually and ultimately, there shall be only one Associate Justice from each of the 10 circuit courts of appeal.

It is clear that if it shall become necessary as our Nation grows to create additional courts of appeal the elasticity furnished by this amendment will permit the adding of other Justices, as business of the Court increases, without the necessity of any further constitutional amendment. The number of Justices, however, can never exceed the number of intermediate appellate courts after being put in full operation.

One of the chief purposes of this provision of the amendment is to democratize our courts by making them nationally representative bodies similar to the Congress and the executive department.

At present the records show that at least 8 members of our Supreme Court were appointed from the northern half of the United States, 5 being from the northeastern industrial section, 2 from the West, 1 from the Middle West, and only 1 from the southern half of the United States.

This country being a representative democracy, it is believed that every section of the United States should have representation on our highest Court in order to insure that its members will be conversant as to the social, economic, educational, and agricultural welfare in each major section of the Nation. This idea is not new; it goes to the very heart of our theory of democracy. Judges, like other men, are by nature creatures of environment, and, naturally, they would be better able to render a more satisfactory service, for the general welfare of the entire Nation, if they were selected from the inhabitants of each major district.

For example, there is a rule applied in the construction of an act of Congress that every act of Congress is presumed to be constitutional, and that it is not the function of the courts to pass upon the question as to whether any statute is reasonable or unreasonable, or whether it be good or bad policy, or whether it be wise or unwise. That is not the function of a court in this country.

A careful examination will disclose that in nearly all of the recent decisions of our Supreme Court in which certain acts of Congress were held unconstitutional, those opinions turned on the discretionary views of individual judges as to the economic, agricultural, and industrial policy. In other words, those acts held to be void turned more upon the wisdom of the legislative intent than upon the fact that they may violate some plain or implied provision of the Constitution, or that they were not within the powers granted by the States to Congress.

The "due process" clause has too often become the morgue for acts of Congress which met their death because they were adjudged to be against public policy. Social-welfare statutes are now contesting the zone heretofore occupied by property rights. Some of the newly organized agencies and activities of the Government rest under legal suspicion at the present time. For example, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Social Security Board, the Public Works Administration, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Labor Relations Board. Any of the acts creating these departments and their functions may involve some legislative provisions which, in the minds of some individual Justices, violate certain established policies of our Federal Government. So it is that there is no telling what may happen when the acts are tested.

It has been asserted as a matter of history that at least upon three occasions the process of constitutional amendment has been used to change the Court. At least five times we have by legislative enactment changed the size of the Court, with resulting changes in the Court's attitude. We find that legislation creating or abolishing positions on the Court is not prohibited by the Constitution, but has more than once been recognized by historical practice as a method of bringing the elective and nonelective branches of the Government into closer coordination. There is no question that its frequent use has postponed meritorious amendments. It is also true that it has always provoked much unnecessary political turmoil and strife.

There is a persistent and well-founded belief in this country that if we are to increase or decrease the number of Justices on our Supreme Court, or prescribe a rule to be followed when declaring an act of Congress void, or designate a given age at which a Justice should retire, that it should be ordained and established by the people themselves through amendment. These are matters upon which sound-thinking men may honestly hold widely divergent views.

The question may be raised that the present phraseology of section 2 of article II of the Constitution providing for the appointment of Justices of the Supreme Court, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate", is sufficient without any amendment to effectuate and require by statute the appointment of Associate Justices from the territory composing the respective courts of appeal. While it is true that the President has no power to appoint Justices except "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate", there is grave doubt in the minds of some as to whether the Senate could, by refusing its consent, ultimately compel a President to appoint a Justice from a particular territory created under statutory authority. If my view is correct only the President can raise the question of the validity of such a statute. On the other hand, if any President should proceed to make the appointments agreeable to the Senate, it is quite certain that no one save a Senator would then have the power to question the validity of the appointments. That doubt might some day bring on much confusion and strife, and it can be entirely obviated now by placing the mandate in the Constitution, where it should rest securely for future generations.

Second. At present the Constitution, of course, provides that a Justice shall hold office for life or during good behavior. The proposed amendment further provides that any person having held a commission on the Supreme Court, circuit court, or district court for at least 10 years may voluntarily retire on his salary upon attaining the age of 70 years, and that upon reaching the age of 75 he shall automatically retire. I might state that that is a policy which has obtained in the Army and in the Navy, and there is no reason why it should not apply to other officers of the United States.

The statutory provision relating to voluntary retirement at 70 years of age, as set forth in the Sumners Act recently passed by Congress, is at best merely directory or permissive and not mandatory in any sense. All agree that the provision automatically retiring Justices at 75 must necessarily be authorized by the Constitution, otherwise we cannot effect involuntary retirement at 75 or at any age.

When the Seventy-fifth Congress convened recently there was no statute in force giving the Supreme Court Justices the privilege of "retiring" at any age. Under the statute amended by the recent Sumners Act they were required to "resign" if they desired to relinquish the bench, and were necessarily thereafter subjected to the will of Congress as to further compensation. For example, after the late Justice Holmes "resigned" from the bench his yearly compensation was reduced by one-half, on which he thereafter took the emergency 15 percent cut and also paid an income tax on the remainder. Just why the "retiring" privilege had heretofore been extended to judges of inferior courts and withheld from the Justices of our Supreme Court is not quite clear nor is it logical, and I do not blame them for not giving up their places under such circumstances.

There appears to be little doubt in the minds of many of those who seem to be best entitled to know that the age of 75 should be the honored and accepted retiring date in the lives of a great majority of men.

When our distinguished Chief Justice was a private citizen in 1927, with a splendid past record of service as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, he delivered a most enlightening and interesting series of lectures at Columbia University. In one of these he expressed his views regarding the proper retirement age, and no doubt he holds the same view today. In one of these lectures he said:

> While Congress could not provide constitutionally for compulsory retirement of a judge during good behavior by fixing an age limit, Congress could and did provide for a voluntary retirement on full pay, at or after the age of 70 when a judge had held his commission for at least 10 years.

The Chief Justice then called attention to the fact that 10 judges of district courts and circuit courts of appeal had retired under that act, and that on the policy of compelling retirement at a given age there were conflicting opinions. He cited the case of Chancelor Kent, who was compelled to retire at the age of 60, and then, at the height of his mental power, proceeded to write his Commentaries, conceded to be one of the outstanding contributions to American law. He then added that:

> Doubtless there is a time when a judge reaches, on account of age, the limit of effective service, but it is very difficult to fix that time. Justice Holmes at 85 did his share of work, or even more, with the same energy and brilliance that he showed 20 years before. On the other hand, some judges have stayed too long on the bench. An unfortunate illustration was that of Justice Grier, who had failed perceptibly at the time of the first argument of the Legal Tender case. As the decision was delayed he did not participate in it. A committee of the Court waited upon Justice Grier to advise him of the desirability of his retirement and the unfortunate consequences of his being in a position to cast a deciding vote in an important case when he was not able properly to address himself to it.

On the policy of "compulsory" retirement, he said:

> Under present conditions of living, and in view of the increased facility of maintaining health and vigor, the age of 70 may well be thought too early for compulsory retirement. Such retirement is too often the community's loss. A compulsory retirement at 75 could more easily be defended.

In Warren's treatise on the Constitution appears a quotation from the diary of John Quincy Adams in which he says that Mr. Wirt commented upon the fact that Chief Justice Marshall had reached his seventy-fifth year, and that Mr. Wirt had serious doubts that the Chief Justice would be able to render opinions in cases which he had already prepared. That brings us to the conclusion that there cannot be any serious doubt that 75 is a proper age for involuntary retirement.

Quoting further from the Chief Justice:

> I agree that the importance in the Supreme Court of avoiding the risk of having judges who are unable properly to do their work and yet insist on remaining on the bench is too great to permit chances to be taken, and any age selected must be somewhat arbitrary, as the time of the failing in mental power differs widely. The exigency to be thought of is not illness but decrepitude. Men who take good care of themselves and live the protected and regular life of a judge are more likely now to be fit at 70 than were their predecessors at 65 under the conditions of 50 years ago.

We naturally must infer from the above expressions, taken from actual experience, that where a Justice is fully competent after he reaches the age of 75 it is more or less an exception, and that the exception should not be made the rule. The involuntary retirement of judges at the age of 75 is desirable, because judges, after years on the bench, naturally sheltered from the everyday life experienced by the ordinary citizen, get out of touch with people. Justice is meaningless unless it involves social justice and unless it is founded on a human understanding of the needs of the times. Law is not static. It must represent the crystallized sentiment of the people and recognize the needs of the day.

It is my understanding that one of our present able Supreme Court Justices, when Attorney General under President Wilson, recommended that when a district or circuit judge failed to retire at the age of 70 an additional judge should be appointed. In February 1919, during the administration of President Wilson, the statute embodying that recommendation of Attorney General McReynolds became a law. As I stated before, I still cannot understand why the same rule should not have been applied to the Supreme Court.

In almost every decade since 1789 changes have been made by congressional enactment whereby the number of judges and the duties of judges in Federal courts have been altered in one way or another. The Supreme Court was established with 6 members in 1789; it was reduced to 5 in 1801; it was increased to 7 in 1807; it was increased to 9 in 1837; it was increased to 10 in 1863; it was reduced to 7 in 1866; it was increased to 9 in 1869. It has so remained at nine for 68 years, although the number of cases presented for review has increased many times.

Let us see, now, just what effect age has upon the number of opinions written by present Justices. By the way, this is perhaps the first time Senators have had that comparison.

If my information is correct, the respective Justices of the Supreme Court during the past 2 years have rendered decisions as follows:

	Age	Number of opinions
Mr. Justice Roberts	61	45
Mr. Justice Stone	64	47
Mr. Justice Cardozo	66	45
Mr. Justice Butler	70	30
Mr. Chief Justice Hughes	74	40
Mr. Justice Sutherland	74	30
Mr. Justice McReynolds	75	31
Mr. Justice Van Devanter	77	5
Mr. Justice Brandeis	80	24

This summary shows that the average number of opinions for the Justices 70 years and younger is 41.75 over the 2-year period, and for those over 70 years of age only 26 for the same period. In considering these facts we must also remember that each Justice nearly always participates in every opinion rendered, whether his name appears as the author or not.

Third. The proposed amendment further provides that the Supreme Court may exercise its powers and jurisdiction under such rules as it may adopt, and that the concurrence of a majority of all members of the Court shall be sufficient to a decision and judgment, provided that no act of Congress shall be adjudged invalid except upon the vote of not less than two-thirds of the whole Court.

Under the proposed amendment, if it should be adopted, it would take eight judges to declare a law invalid.

The provision that no act of Congress shall be adjudged invalid except upon the vote of not less than two-thirds of the whole Court is not now authorized by our Constitution. A statute or rule of Court making such provision would necessarily be without constitutional mandate. This constitutional change, like the two already discussed, is essential in our fundamental law if we are to set at rest forever the belief of many of our best citizens that a mere majority of the Supreme Court should not have the power to veto an act of Congress.

There is a rule, long adhered to, that no legislative act should be declared invalid unless it so appears beyond a reasonable doubt. There certainly is a reasonable doubt where four or even three Justices state in plain terms that it is valid and constitutional. There is no escape from that conclusion.

This question has been so long discussed and debated that there is scarcely any room for doubt that the American people are now ready to place in their fundamental law this mandate, which all seem to agree is fair and just, namely, that at least a two-thirds majority of our Supreme Court should be required to declare invalid the affirmative legislative acts of Congress and the President. The matter should be settled, so that future generations will not be required to face this question periodically.

Fourth. The amendment proposes a further democratization of our Federal courts by providing that the circuit courts of appeal of the United States shall hereafter consist of at least one judge from each State included within the territory comprising such court, one of whom shall be designated by the President as presiding judge. This is a new proposition.

It is generally conceded that under the present Constitution the discretion of a President could not be controlled as to the territory from which he would appoint any Justice of the Supreme Court or a judge of a court of appeals. This constitutional power is likewise necessary in order that the question may not hereafter be successfully raised.

To illustrate the purpose for including the above provision to make our courts of last resort a more representative body, Senators know that the circuit court of appeals of the United States is the court of last resort in 7 cases out of 10. I am using the latest available Federal census of 1930, and the number of cases disposed of in each of the several Federal circuit courts of appeal during the 12 months between July 1, 1935, and July 1, 1936, as reported in the Federal Reporter. For example:

The first circuit, composed of the four States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and the Territory of Puerto Rico, with an aggregate population of 6,199,827, with three judges during this period of 1 year, disposed of 73 cases.

The second circuit, composed of the three States of Vermont, New York, and Connecticut, with an aggregate population of 14,554,580, with five judges during the same period, disposed of 559 cases.

One judge disposed of 24 cases in the first circuit, and one judge had to dispose of over 100 cases in the second circuit. Is that equality?

The third circuit, composed of the three States of Delaware, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, with an aggregate population of 13,911,074, with five active judges during the same period, disposed of 216 cases, less than half those disposed of in the New York district.

The fourth circuit, composed of the five States of Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia, with an aggregate population of 10,691,623, with three active judges during the same period, disposed of 227 cases.

The fifth circuit, composed of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, and the Canal Zone, with an aggregate population of 16,960,094, with four active judges during the same period, disposed of 285 cases.

The sixth circuit, composed of the four States of Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Tennessee, with an aggregate population of 16,720,164, with four active judges during the same period, disposed of 122 cases.

The seventh circuit, composed of the three States of Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin, with an aggregate population of 13,808,183, with four judges during the same period, disposed of 249 cases.

The eighth circuit, composed of the seven States of Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota, with an aggregate population of 15,261,398, with five active judges during the same period, disposed of 249 cases.

The ninth circuit, composed of the seven States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, with an aggregate population of 9,703,702, with five judges during the same period, disposed of 392 cases.

The tenth and last circuit, composed of the six States of Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Utah, and Wyoming, with an aggregate population of 6,468,659, with four active judges during the same period, disposed of 193 cases.

It will be observed that in the second, third, sixth, and seventh circuits there are in each as many or more judges on the respective circuit courts of appeal as there are States within the territorial jurisdiction of such circuits. The first circuit has three judges and includes four States; the fourth circuit has three judges and includes five States; the fifth circuit has four judges and includes six States; the eighth circuit has five judges and includes seven States; the ninth circuit has five judges and includes seven States; and the tenth circuit has four judges and includes six States.

The appointment of one additional judge in the first circuit and two additional judges in the fourth, fifth, eighth, ninth, and tenth, making a total of 11, would make at least one judge on the circuit court of appeals from each State within the respective circuits.

This is one way in which we can democratize our circuit courts of appeal, as well as democratize the Supreme Court of the United States. In the first, second, and tenth circuits there is one circuit judge each above the retirement age. In the third circuit there are two judges above the retirement age, and an additional judge will reach that age this month. In the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth circuits there are no judges above the retirement age. In the ninth circuit one judge will reach the retirement age in May of this year.

I am giving these data so that the Senate may readily understand just what the situation is.

Under the provisions of the proposed act recommended to Congress by the President on February 5, the President would have authority, on a basis of retirement age of 70 years, to appoint immediately one circuit judge each in the first, second, and tenth circuits, respectively, and two in the third, one in the ninth circuit within the present year, and one additional judge may be added to each of the second, fourth, and eighth circuits within 2 years. There would be no additional judges in the fifth, sixth, or seventh circuits under that proposed act within the next 4 years.

It would take many more judges to put into effect the recommendation of the President than would be required if and when the constitutional amendment I have suggested should be adopted.

So it will be seen that neither the number of inhabitants nor the number of States included within the circuits nor the number of judges composing those circuits can be taken as an index of the number of cases disposed of by each of those courts. It therefore appears that experience has demonstrated, for example, that seven judges are not too many to function as an appellate court composed of seven States, as would be the case in the eighth and ninth circuits, or six in case of the fifth circuit, which has the greatest population of all the circuits in the United States.

To make my point clearer, I call attention to the fact that the fourth, fifth, seventh, and ninth circuits, with an aggregate population of 51,163,382, according to the census of 1930, have no direct representation on the Supreme Court. These circuits embrace nearly half of our entire population. The circuit courts of appeal of the above four circuits disposed of 1,239 out of a total of 2,651 cases during the period between July 1, 1935, and July 1, 1936. It is also observed that the tenth circuit, having the smallest population of all except the first, disposed of more than twice as many cases as were disposed of in the first circuit, and more cases than were disposed of in the sixth circuit, which has more than double the population of the tenth circuit.

Today on our present Supreme Court we find:

From the territory constituting the First Circuit Court of Appeals, Justice Brandeis, of Massachusetts; from the second circuit, Chief Justice Hughes, Justice Cardozo, and Justice Stone, of New York; from the third circuit, Justice Roberts, of Pennsylvania; from the sixth circuit, Justice McReynolds, of Tennessee; from the eighth circuit, Justice Butler, of Minnesota; from the tenth circuit, Justice Sutherland, of Utah, and Justice Van Devanter, of Wyoming.

The areas composing the Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuit Courts of Appeals are not directly represented on our Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I have here on another sheet, which I desire to have entered as part of my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD but do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read at this time, the names and the States from which they were appointed, all the men who have been on the Supreme Court since it was first established, with the dates on which they began service and the dates on which they ended their service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Without objection, the list referred to by the Senator from Florida will be printed in the RECORD as part of his address.

The list is as follows:

Alabama (2): John McKinley, 1837–52; John A. Campbell, 1853–61.
Arizona (none).
Arkansas (none).
California (2): Stephen J. Field, 1863–97; Joseph McKenna, 1898–1925.
Colorado (none).
Connecticut (2): William H. Taft,[1] 1921–30; Oliver Elsworth,[1] 1796–1800.
Delaware (none).
Florida (none).
Georgia (3): James M. Wayne, 1835–67; William B. Woods, 1880–87; Joseph R. Lamar, 1911–16.
Idaho (none).
Illinois (2): David Davis, 1862–77; Melville W. Fuller,[1] 1888–1910.
Indiana (none).
Iowa (1): Samuel F. Miller, 1862–90.
Kansas (1): David J. Brewer, 1889–1910.
Kentucky (3): Thomas Todd, 1807–26; Robert Trimble, 1826–28; John M. Harlan, 1877–1911.
Louisiana (1): Edward D. White,[1] 1894–1910.
Maine (1): Nathan Clifford, 1858–81.
Maryland (5): Robert H. Harrison, 1789–90; Thomas Johnson, 1791–93; Samuel Chase, 1796–1811; Gabriel Duval, 1811–36; Roger B. Taney,[1] 1836–64.
Massachusetts (7): William Cushing, 1789–1810; Joseph Story, 1811–45; Benjamin R. Curtis, 1851–57; Horace Gray, 1881–1902; Oliver Wendell Holmes, 1902–32; William H. Moody, 1906–10; Louis Brandeis, 1916–
Michigan (1): Henry B. Brown, 1890–1906.

Mississippi (1): L. Q. C. Lamar, 1889–93.
Missouri (none).
Montana (none).
Nebraska (none).
Nevada (none).
New Hampshire (1): Levi Woodbury, 1845–51.
New Jersey (3): William Patterson, 1793–1806; Joseph P. Bradley, 1870–92; Malone Pitney, 1912–22.
New Mexico (none).
New York (11): John Jay,[1] 1789–95; Brock Livingston, 1806–23; Smith Thompson, 1823–43; Samuel Nelson, 1845–72; Ward Hunt, 1872–82; Samuel Blatchford, 1882–93; Rufus W. Peckham, 1896–1909; Charles E. Hughes, 1910–16; Harlan S. Stone, 1925–; Charles E. Hughes[1] 1930–; Benjamin N. Cardozo, 1932–
North Carolina (2): James Iredell, 1790–99; Alfred Moore, 1799–1804.
North Dakota (none).
Ohio (7): John McLean, 1829–61; Noah H. Swayne,[1] 1864–73; Salmon P. Chase,[1] 1864–73; Morrison R. Waite,[1] 1874–83; Stanley Matthews, 1881–89; William R. Day, 1903–22; John H. Clark, 1916–22.
Oklahoma (none).
Oregon (none).
Pennsylvania (6): James Wilson, 1789–98; Henry Baldwin, 1830–44; Robert C. Grier, 1846–70; William Strong, 1870–80; George Shiras, Jr., 1892–1903; Owen J. Roberts, 1930–
Rhode Island (none).
South Carolina (3): John Rutledge,[1] 1789–91; John Rutledge, 1795–95; William Johnson, 1804–34.
South Dakota (none).
Tennessee (5): John Catron, 1837–65; Howell E. Jackson, 1893–95; Horace H. Lurton, 1910–14; James C. McReynolds, 1914–; Edward T. Sanford, 1923–30.
Texas (none).
Utah (1): George Sutherland, 1922–
Virginia (5): John Blair, 1789–96; Bushrod Washington, 1798–1829; John Marshall,[1] 1801–35; Phillip P. Barbour, 1836–41; Peter V. Daniel, 1841–60.
Washington (none).
West Virginia (none).
Wisconsin (none).
Wyoming (1): Willis Van DeVanter, 1911–.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I find from the foregoing list that 22 States in our Union have never had one of their inhabitants on the Supreme Court, and perhaps may never have unless we democratize the courts of the Federal Union. These States are: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Eleven States have had one member on the Supreme Court. They are: Connecticut, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Utah, and Wyoming.

[1] Chief Justice.

Four States have had a total of two representatives. They are: Alabama, California, North Carolina, and Illinois.

Four States have had a total of three. They are: Georgia, Kentucky, New Jersey, and South Carolina.

Three States have had a total of five. They are: Maryland, Tennessee, and Virginia.

Pennsylvania has had six.

Massachusetts and Ohio have had seven each.

The State of New York has had 12.

Furthermore, of those States which I have just mentioned, whose native sons have, at one time or another, had seats upon the Supreme Court, it has been 76 years since Alabama was represented, 12 years for California, 137 years for Connecticut, 21 years for Georgia, 27 years for Illinois, 47 years for Iowa, 27 years for Kansas, 26 years for Kentucky, 27 years for Louisiana, 56 years for Maine, 73 years for Maryland, 31 years for Michigan, 43 years for Mississippi, 86 years for New Hampshire, 15 years for New Jersey, 133 years for North Carolina, 15 years for Ohio, and 103 years for South Carolina.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In the case of North Carolina there was a nomination some years ago which was not confirmed. Is not that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes; I recall that incident.

It has been 77 years since Virginia, the mother of Presidents, was represented on the Supreme Court of the United States—not since the Civil War. I mention these dates to illustrate that fact.

It will be noted that those three big agricultural and livestock States—Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas—or six, for that matter, since Indiana, Missouri, and Nebraska have never had representation on the Supreme Court—this empire of the Middle West, with great cities like Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines, Omaha, and Indianapolis, to mention only a few—have not had a single Supreme Court Justice from that area during the past 27 historical and all-important years. Also, Michigan, a great State of many varied and great industrial problems, the home of the automotive industry, has been unrepresented for 31 years and is another outstanding example.

To summarize, I contend that the proposed amendment would forever remove any and all doubt first as to involuntary retirement of a Federal judge at the age of 75 years, second as to the mandatory appointment of a Supreme Court Justice and circuit judge from a specified circuit or State, third as to the number of judges that would hereafter be placed on the Supreme Court or a circuit court of appeals, and fourth the retirement of the two-thirds' concurrence in adjudging an act of Congress invalid.

The enactment of any statute at this time without those powers will mean nothing more nor less than that it may not only be declared unconstitutional, but would be subject to repeal by any subsequent Congress, and thus possibly throw the whole matter into controversy again and perhaps at a time when it would be even more disturbing and critical than at present.

I hope that I have given ample supporting reasons why the amendment should be adopted and immediately sent on its way to the States for ratification. This should be done even though the present legislative plans outlined by the administration may be enacted into law before the close of the year.

The four contemplated changes in our Constitution by Senate Joint Resolution 100 are not introduced for the purpose, nor will they have the effect, of impeding the progress of any legislation recommended by the President. It may well be considered as a measure in furtherance of that idea, with the added advantage that it will let the people of the United States themselves have the chance to make those changes. We will thereby incur the confidence needed to secure a more sympathetic and efficient administration of justice throughout the United States.

The amendment should be submitted at once for the further reason that there are 42 legislatures now in session; 18 of them may end with the close of March, 2 in April, 2 in June, 1 in September, and 19 have no limit as to the time of adjournment. There is a belief among some of our Members that it takes proposed amendments too long to effect necessary remedial legislation. That assertion is not always borne out by the facts. For example, of 10 recent amendments submitted to the people, 7 were ratified within 1 year. Certainly the people of the United States, at this time, and especially the members of the legislatures now in session, are as fully conversant on this subject as they will be later, and no doubt are ready, able, and willing to act upon it. There is a far greater reason to pursue the amendment method, for if we are to change the personnel or add to the powers of our courts, the people would feel that they ought to be consulted. In other words, the people of the United States, through their legislatures, ought to be in position to act intelligently and immediately, or as soon as the amendment can be submitted.

Let us remember that any radical change made in the Supreme Court by statute is always subject to repeal by any subsequent Congress, thus renewing an unhappy condition of perhaps far greater consequence than the present.

Truly, the Supreme Court should be democratized—by amendment. Our people want it. The problems of today require it. The echo of history, repeating itself through the years to come, demands it. The Constitution provides a way for us to do it. I think that Associate Justice Holmes a number of years ago aptly described his feelings, now shared by countless thousands, in regard to the Constitution as it applies to the present needs of our day, when he said:

> I think the Constitution should be likened to the bark on a tree, which expands as the needs of the tree increase, and always accommodates the tree and offers full protection regardless of its size or requirements.

Mr. President, if any Senator should desire to ask any questions as to any of the four proposals, I should be glad to answer them at this time or at any time in the future.

STOP THE HIGHWAY SLAUGHTER

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this Congress has been attempting to write into law the greatest possible insurance against the United States being dragged into war, with its attendant loss of life and destruction of property. And rightly so.

But, Mr. President, I say we have other problems to meet, involving still larger losses of life and the destruction of billions of dollars of property.

In six major wars in which the United States has been engaged in more than 150 years, the total loss of life, killed in action or died of wounds, has been 244,357.

In the past 15 years—just one-tenth of the time in which nearly a quarter of million men were killed in action or died of wounds received in action—415,977 have been killed in automobile accidents.

In the past 2 years, 1935 and 1936, accidental deaths in the United States, according to the latest figures from the National Safety Council, numbered 211,000. In the same 2 years accidents—automobile, fire, and medical costs and wage losses from accidental injuries—resulted in property and cash loss damage amounting to more than $7,000,000,000.

Think of it, Senators! The country has been appalled at the high cost of work unemployment relief in the United States. But the cost of accidents, most of them preventable, is higher even than the cost of unemployment relief.

We have the record placed before us daily in the newspapers. I quote from the front page of a recent issue of the Washington Post—and I want to say at this point that Mr. Howard F. Wentworth, of the Washington Post, is doing a most commendable work in calling attention to conditions in the District of Columbia.

I will quote just two paragraphs, typical of similar reports from all over the country:

"Washington's traffic fatality for 1937 rose to 35 last night.

"This is almost twice the number of persons killed during the same period last year."

Mr. President, the Washington situation, as I said a moment ago, is typical, not exceptional. January of this year established a new high record for motor-car fatalities—an increase of one third over the record of January 1936.

It is interesting to note, in connection with the District record, that of the first 26 persons killed in motorcar accidents in Washington this year, all except 1 were pedestrians.

Last year 99 persons were killed in the National Capital in traffic accidents—54 of these were pedestrians. The great majority of these were killed while walking against the lights, or while attempting to cross between intersections.

But while death stalks the pedestrian in our cities, he drives at the wheel, a mile or more a minute, on the rural highways. As a matter of fact, auto fatalities in cities showed a slight drop in 1936, from 11,800 to 11,700. But in rural areas there was an increase of 1,600, the record for 1936 being 26,800 killed in motor accidents, compared to 25,200 in 1935.

Mr. President, I want to put into the RECORD at this time the 1936 and 1935 records of accidental deaths in the United States—211,000 in the 2 years.

With the United States at peace, 111,000 Americans met violent deaths in accidents last year.

The auto's death toll was 38,500; it was 37,000 the year before.

Other public accidents caused 19,000 fatalities; 18,000 the year before.

Home accidents—and few realize this, I believe—caused 500 more deaths last year than motor crashes, 39,000, an increase of 7,500 over the 1935 record of 31,500. Last summer's excessive heat is charged with 5,000 of the increase.

Traffic fatalities, of course, are only a part of the human toll in motor accidents. In addition to the 38,000 reported killed last year, 110,000 received permanently disabling injuries; 1,230,000 received temporary disabilities.

Killed and injured on our streets and highways in 1 year—1,378,000 men, women, and children, equivalent to twice the population of the District of Columbia killed, maimed, or injured by motor vehicles. That is too heavy a price to pay for high speed—and I believe it is safe to say that the greater part of these accidents, especially outside the cities, was due to fast driving.

There are some rays of hope in the 1936 picture of highway tragedies. The 1936 death rate per gallonage of gasoline consumed was 6 percent lower than in 1935. But the death rate per 100,000,000 of population was 27 percent higher than 5 years ago.

In 19 States, including the District of Columbia, the National Safety Council reports, motor-vehicle fatalities were reduced, the reduction amounting to 7 percent, and that on an increase in gasoline consumption of 10 percent. All but two of these 19 States carried on planned safety campaigns during 1936, so that kind of work seems to be very much worth while.

Mr. President, a recent survey by a subcommittee of the President's Accident Prevention Conference gives us a fairly clear picture of the highway-accident situation.

A large majority of the 36,000 annual fatalities—I am using an average figure for the past few years—are shown by the report to have happened in rural sections.

The outstanding cause of these deaths and injuries to more than one and one-third million persons is high speed.

Coupled with high speed is inadequate lighting. Apparently road-surface conditions play only a minor part, although we know that many of our highways lack much in the way of safety for high-speed travel.

Drunken drivers take their toll every year; in some sections of the country Death and Liquor are the back-seat drivers.

I quote from the committee report:

What is happening is that cars are being driven at night in rural sections too fast for lighting conditions.

The average car today is capable of making from 70 to 100 miles an hour; speeds from 60 to 80 miles an hour are not uncommon in rural night driving. These are unsafe speeds and are the cause of most rural night fatalities.

Experiments by experts in many States have demonstrated definitely that night driving under the very best conditions at more than 50 miles an hour is unsafe—

The committee says. And that means that on all except our best planned and constructed highways speeds higher than 35 miles are unsafe at night.

Now the stopping distance at 50 miles an hour, with good brakes in perfect condition and properly applied, is close to 250 feet; at 60 miles an hour, not an unusual night speed, the stopping distance is close to 350 feet. In other words, drivers in cars equipped with the latest in lights and brakes, cannot see objects in straightaway in time to stop before striking the object. The best they can hope for is to slow down and go around, and that is not always possible.

Of course, the danger of driving at these high rates of speed where there are curves or hills is greatly increased.

This committee, headed by Henry H. Heimann, of New York, makes some worth-while recommendations, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country. The job primarily is not a Federal one, but I believe the Federal Government has a responsibility for heading up and pushing such a program. The committee recommends, in part:

Your committee is convinced that new and drastic approaches must be made to the problem of night fatalities in rural sections. Obviously, education and enforcement, the two methods now most generally being tried to solve the problem, will not prove highly effective. They may help in a limited way. Of the two, enforcement, of course, holds out the most hope, but there are not now and never will be highway forces sufficiently large to prevent wholesale violations of speed laws in rural sections. As one correspondent has put it, "It would take all the Army, National Guard, and all the local police" of the United States to enforce speed regulations in rural sections of the country at night.

Thus, engineering—a change in the power and design of cars to protect the reckless motorist against his own folly—appears to hold out the only possible hope of solution. The reason assigned for present high-speed construction is that it enables drivers to extricate themselves from hazardous situations. The soundness of this reasoning can well be challenged when the reports of accidents indicate that the very possession of this additional speed has a tendency to cause some drivers to attempt what might be called abnormally hazardous situations. The record would indicate that high speed is causing more accidents than it is preventing. Slower speeds, better lights, and safer body construction, such as raising seats so as to enable drivers to see farther than the present low type of seat permits, and general strengthening of bumpers and body parts to increase safety in cases of collision would seem desirable.

Your committee is informed that the automotive industry is becoming increasingly aware of the gravity of the high speed and light situations and is making studies in an endeavor to correct these contributions to deaths. As one of the leading industries of the world, possessed as it is of the finest engineering minds obtainable, it is to be presumed, of course, that it will do everything in its power, regardless of cost, to eliminate these outstanding accident hazards. We strongly urge the industry to take united action to eliminate them. We feel that automotive executives will recognize that a correction originating within the industry and voluntarily put into effect will receive general approval; just as we are certain that the industry is conscious of the fact that public opinion is being increasingly wrought up over the larger number of high-speed fatalities and demands action. We believe such voluntary industry action will be more effective than compulsory action from other sources, which a growingly impatient public would demand.

Your committee's survey indicates that, generally speaking, high speed is contributing to accidents in cities to a considerably less degree than in rural sections. This situation undoubtedly is due to effective law enforcement and education, both of which are more intense in the urban sections. The greater number of city accidents are due to the carelessness of pedestrians. This usually takes the form of jaywalking. The pedestrian should be held strictly accountable for taking such chances, but there is a general hesitancy to enforce jaywalking ordinances.

Compulsory and regular inspection of cars, as well as the compulsory junking of dangerously worn cars, would add to general safety. Many authorities contend, however, and apparently with evidence to support their contentions, that old, but sound, cars, unable to make high speeds, are less likely to become involved in accidents than the new cars with their many temptations to go fast.

The statement in the report that automotive manufacturers are becoming aware of the seriousness of the speed and lighting situations is encouraging. I believe that the leaders of this great industry realize that they have an accident-prevention duty toward the public to perform.

Until a little over a year ago the automotive industry had participated in only a limited way in national accident-prevention campaigns. However, in 1936 the Automobile Manufacturers Association announced that it would contribute several hundred thousand dollars to various national organizations interested in safety. The chief of these and the one that obtained the largest amount of the appropriation, something like $150,000, I believe, was the National Safety Council. A great deal of publicity accompanied announcement of this motor-sponsored drive. The National Safety Council announced a program centering on driver education designed to reduce fatalities 35 percent in 5 years. The campaign has been carried on vigorously throughout the last year but apparently there has been little reduction in total fatalities. The council announced at the end of the year that fatalities had increased 4 percent.

These results would indicate that once a driver gets behind his own wheel, it is difficult to change his driving habits.

In the face of the failure of this campaign to date, it seems to me that the automotive industry should take cognizance of the conviction of the conference committee and many students of the accident problem that high speed and poor lights are major causes in the situation, and go after these causes. I am informed that the automobile industry is studying the problem very carefully.

I have emphasized the speed phase of the accident problem, because I believe with the conference committee that it is of outstanding importance. However, there are other corrective steps which should be taken, and I want to mention a few of them briefly. I can do no better, I believe, than call your attention to an accident-prevention program which has just been suggested by Motor, one of the leading automotive publications of the United States. While this program makes speed control first in its recommendations, it lists other important steps. The program follows:

1. Building safer cars, with excessive speeds curtailed, driver visibility enlarged, and headlighting systems improved.
2. Compel periodic mechanical inspections of all vehicles, ruling off the roads all that do not meet rigid safety standards.
3. License all drivers, issuing permits only to those able to pass real tests of driving ability, and suspending or revoking privileges of unfit operators.
4. Make traffic regulations uniform for all States and cities, with simple, understandable definitions of reckless, careless, and ignorant acts.
5. Enforce traffic regulations without political or social favors, eliminating repeat offenders and warning potential offenders by a swift, sure system of punishment. Suppress intoxicated drivers.
6. Curb jaywalking by strict enforcement of adequate regulations.
7. Use safety aisles in center of new highways to prevent head-on collisions and add this improvement to present roads wherever they are wide enough.
8. Improve highway visibility by a progressive program to eliminate steep hills, sharp curves and other blind spots. Make warning and directional signs simpler and plainer.
9. Eliminate parking and expand night freight delivery while curtailing day delivery in congested areas.
10. Develop a uniform national system of investigating and reporting accidents so that real study can be made of their causes.

This program strikes me as being essentially sound, and I think it should have the careful consideration of the entire motor industry and those who are concerned with this great problem. What appeals to me most about it is its practical nature. It gets away from generalities and comes down to causes and remedies. Only by following some such program are we going to reduce the 36,000 annual highway fatalities in the United States. We must and shall reduce them by whatever stringent methods are necessary, regardless of the cost and who is pleased or displeased. The toll of human life due to highway accidents is so great that it must not be permitted to continue.

The mail of every Senator and Representative, as well as that of every other public official, is full of letters daily urging that the frightful highway slaughter be stopped. To many, the high-speed automobile is becoming regarded as more dangerous than a deadly weapon. It is not surprising that drastic action is demanded.

I realize, Mr. President, that it is not enough to say that drastic action is demanded. It is not sufficient to set down a few of the outstanding facts—38,000 killed on the highways in 1 year; 1,340,000 injured the same year; property loss and damage, including costs of medical care, well over $1,600,000,000 in 1 year—it is not sufficient to point to these and say something must be done about it.

The question is, What can be done about it? Has the Congress any power and responsibility to deal with this situation, to reduce this slaughter by wholesale?

It seems obvious that Congress cannot deal with the entire problem. Nor can the State governments do the entire job. Forty million drivers are involved; twice that many passengers and pedestrians. In fact, here is a question the answer to which is essential to nearly every man, woman, and child of our population.

Nor can the automobile industry solve the problem by itself, even if it felt called upon to do so.

Here is a difficult task that calls for cooperation of a number of agencies, and, to make it measurably successful, the voluntary and perhaps to some extent compulsory cooperation of millions of people.

It seems to me the point is to get the right start. I say start because this is going to prove a long-drawn-out and practically ceaseless fight to make our highways safe.

A few minutes ago I recited 10 proposals advanced by a leading magazine. These 10 proposals, if even made measurably effective, would cut down the fatalities, injuries, destruction of property, at least one-half, in my judgment. But simply to list these 10 proposals is to indicate the need of cooperation of a number of different agencies and groups.

The first proposal calls for the building of safer cars, with excessive speeds curtailed, driver visibility enlarged, and headlight systems improved.

This largely will be the job of the motor-car industry. If it cannot solve them, legislation might be called upon to require curtailed speed, set standards for headlighting systems, and driver-visibility requirements.

The second suggestion calls for periodic mechanical inspections, ruling off the roads all cars that do not meet requirements. It seems to me this is largely a job for the States and municipalities; probably the States should take the lead.

Similarly, the third suggestion, calling for drivers' licenses only to those who can pass prescribed tests, also is a matter for State regulation.

There also is the need for uniform traffic regulations. There are some who would take the short cut of Federal legislation to attain this end, but it may be more feasible, though slower, to depend upon a Nation-wide drive to get the adoption of uniform traffic regulations.

Enforcement of traffic regulations is a police function that can best be performed by State and city and local traffic officers. But these will have to be backed by public sentiment to make them effective.

Jaywalking is responsible for a majority of city fatalities these days. Control of jaywalking is a job for the city traffic departments. Again it cannot succeed without the backing of informed public sentiment.

As I see it, there are three general fields in which the Federal Government can take effective steps to promote highway safety. Through Federal aid for State highway systems, the Bureau of Public Roads can insist upon highways constructed in the interest of safety; center aisles on new highways, for instance. The Bureau of Public Roads is in excellent position to obtain cooperation of State highway departments in the construction and maintenance and marking and policing of all highways partly financed with Federal funds.

Elimination of night parking on streets and highways, freight deliveries at night in the larger centers, and such things, can be worked out by local officials and business interests.

Development of a uniform national system of investigating and reporting accidents can be worked out by the Federal Government in cooperation with local governments, and with the aid also of insurance organizations.

Mr. President, I believe I have outlined a program that presents possibilities of really accomplishing results. I believe it is within the province of the Federal Government and within the power of Congress, and that it is the duty of Congress to provide a Federal agency charged with at least these three main functions:

First. To provide for a national uniform system of reporting and investigating accidents. Accurate and intelligently compiled information must be the basis of whatever is attempted on a Nation-wide scale in dealing with the problem of highway safety.

Second. To act as a clearing house and central agency to coordinate the work of the Bureau of Public Roads, the States, and the State highway departments in providing highways as safe as engineering, construction, maintenance, and marking can make them.

Third. Coordinate the work of and cooperate with the National Safety Council, the State safety councils, the motor-car industry, and similar organizations working for the common objective in an unending, Nation-wide drive for highway safety. And last, but not least, this Federal agency would head up a campaign of public education and develop a highway consciousness without which all these other efforts must fail.

Mr. President, I suggest that a Senate committee be empowered to make a real investigation of this subject and recommend appropriate legislation to cover the program I have attempted briefly to outline.

Mr. President, I stated earlier in these remarks that auto fatalities do not comprise all our accident death toll. Even more persons are being killed every year in what are classified as home accidents than on our streets and highways. The remainder of the annual fatalities from accidents, totaling around 35,000, are due to varying causes. About half of them occur in industrial plants. Safety campaigns in these have been very successful, but much remains still to be done. Then there are 17,000 or 18,000 occasioned by drowning, falling, and from miscellaneous causes.

Mr. President, this annual death toll from accidents, most of them preventable, amounts to almost double the number of American lives lost in the World War. It is many times greater than the total number of lives lost in any plague or pestilence which has ever struck this Nation. The picture of the past and present in connection with deaths from preventable accidents is bad. It is terrible. But the prospect of future accidental deaths is even more alarming. I regret to say that despite the many accident-prevention activities now under way there is little indication that present corrective methods are going to prove effective in reducing the ghastly annual death toll.

I say the time has come when this country must face the appalling facts of the situation and resort to new and drastic safety methods if we are to get results. We must attack this problem on a broad front, as we would attempt to repel a foreign invader bent on killing 100,000 of our citizens and maiming and injuring another one and one-third millions of our men, women, and children.

My personal interest in this situation has been increased materially during the last year by my serving as a member of the General Committee of the Accident Prevention Conference. This group, composed of citizens genuinely interested in saving human lives on land and sea and in the air, was called together by Secretary Roper at the request of President Roosevelt to make a study of the general accident situation and recommend ways and means of decreasing the Nation's terrifying total of injuries and fatalities. More than 500 persons attended the organization meeting held here in Washington, and organized several subcommittees headed by and composed of leading men of many parties, businesses, and professions throughout the country, who were determined that accidents should be decreased. Senator A. HARRY MOORE, who as Governor of New Jersey was a pioneer in accident prevention in this country, was chosen general chairman. Additionally, 10 subcommittees were formed and are now functioning. I have the honor to be chairman of the subcommittee on home and rural accidents, and the other officials are:

Causes and remedies: Henry H. Heimann, Niles, Mich.

Urban street safety: Thomas J. Watson, New York City, president, International Business Machine Co.

Cooperation with common carriers: W. Averell Harriman, New York City, chairman of the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Cooperation with the automotive industry: John L. Lovett, Detroit, Mich., general manager, Michigan Manufacturing Association.

Uniform traffic regulations: Representative Emmet O'Neal, Louisville, Ky.

Driver training and law enforcement: Dr. B. L. Corbett, executive secretary, Milwaukee (Wis.) Safety Commission.

Education: Barron G. Collier, New York City, former deputy police commissioner in charge of safety for New York City.

Cooperation with safety groups: Fred M. Rosseland, Newark, N. J., former secretary, Governor's street and highway safety committee.

Safety in the air: Senator W. G. McADOO, Los Angeles, Calif., president, National Aeronautic Association.

Initially, the conference sought an appropriation of $250,000 from the Congress to carry on its work. I regret to say that it was successful in obtaining an appropriation of only $35,000. The largest single item, for $200,000, desired to make an accurate survey of the exact number and types of accidents occurring in the country, and particularly the causes of them, failed to obtain committee approval. This was an unfortunate circumstance because the most effective result cannot be obtained in accident prevention until we have a full and accurate picture of the national situation. The States are collecting this information slowly and in a fragmentary way and supplying it to the best of their ability to the Bureau of the Census. The service is not what it should be and definitely is slowing up accident-prevention work.

Nevertheless, the conference has gone ahead to the best of its ability and during the year has learned and given publicity to many hitherto unrevealed facts about accident causes. This has been accomplished chiefly by setting up key contact men in the 48 States and inducing the Governors to appoint independent accident-prevention committees which serve without compensation. In my opinion, there is a better public appreciation today of the accident situation and more persons and groups are working unselfishly in an effort to solve the problem than ever before in history.

Credit for this improved situation is due in great part to the activities of the conference, and particularly to the cooperative attitude of citizens and public officials of the various States. It was the President's view that the problem should be attacked along State lines and that the chief duty of the conference should be to arouse communities and States to their local duties. He was of the expressed opinion that the Federal Government should not undertake to direct work which obviously was a local responsibility.

As chairman of the committee dealing with home accidents, which resulted in 1,000 more deaths last year than highway accidents, I have learned some astounding facts. The outstanding one is that in great measure the 37,000 home deaths are traceable to seemingly trivial causes and are largely the result of human carelessness. Unfortunately, with the exception of my native State of Kansas, State governments are not doing thorough jobs of investigating and reporting home accidents. From the best figures obtainable, however, we are led to believe that approximately one-half of these fatalities occur at night in sleeping rooms and are caused chiefly by inadequate lighting. Compared with the number of airplane deaths in the country—which in 1936 totaled only 67—they are monumental. Yet the public pays almost no attention to them, because they are largely local and seldom make the front pages of the newspapers.

Solution of this phase of the accident problem is most difficult. The committee is approaching it primarily by enlisting the interest of the manufacturers of electrical equipment in providing better lighting facilities for homes. The committee proposes to go further and arouse the interest of manufacturers of other household equipment such as ladders, bathtubs, and so forth. Finally, of course, solution of the problem rests with the individual and various educational plans, including the cooperation of publications which reach the home, and instruction of school children, which are being attempted. A wise woman who has made a great study of the problem recently suggested that "tidier housekeeping" probably would do more than any other one thing to prevent home deaths. By this she meant teaching housekeepers to straighten out rugs, pick up toys, arrange furniture, and take similar steps so as to prevent persons slipping on or colliding with objects at night and sustaining injuries.

Fortunately, the American Red Cross is paying close attention to this problem and is making constructive advances toward the solution of it. Incidentally, the moment that Admiral Cary T. Grayson, president of the Red Cross, heard of conference activities last year, he cabled from abroad offering the heartiest cooperation of his organization, and it has followed up his offer with splendid performance.

Mr. President, I would be remiss in my discussion of this subject, and also would pass over the fact that systematic organized safety campaigns can and do get results, if I did not call attention to the record of occupational accident fatalities.

Deaths from occupational accidents in 1936 numbered 18,000. This is an increase of 1,500, or about 9 percent, over the record of 1935. There also were reported 70,000 permanent disabilities, compared to 63,000 in 1935, and 1,460,000 temporary disabilities, compared to 1,340,000 in 1935.

But here is the important point in connection with occupational accidents, Mr. President. Despite the increase in 1936 over 1935, occupational deaths were still only about half what they were in 1913. Industry faced the problem of industrial accidents a quarter of a century ago. It organized safety committees. The employers and employees cooperated to reduce accidents in industry, and they did reduce them. Particularly, they reduced fatal accidents.

The National Safety Council estimates that the number of occupational accidents occurring since 1913, in total, has been about 265,000 less than it would have been if the 1913 death toll had been repeated each year since. Incidentally, industry reports a reduction of 10 percent for 1936 under 1935 in its accident rate per million man-hours worked.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I wish to reiterate my position that Congress cannot make a better investment of a small amount of public funds than by providing a more adequate sum for research work by the general committee of the Accident Prevention Conference.

About the only real way to solve the problem is to start with actual information on the causes of these accidents and then work to remove or mitigate those causes. That calls for research, for careful study, and I believe that research and that study are a legitimate field for the Federal Government. I certainly will support any reasonable appropriation for such a worth-while objective as reducing our terrific death toll from preventable accidents.

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE CAPITOL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1170) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be stated.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 1, page 1, line 11, before the word "replacing", to insert the word "excepting", so as to read:

And excepting replacing with white marble the two broad flights of terrace steps on the west of the Capitol, etc.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated earlier in the day that there ought to be an explanation of this measure before the consideration of amendments. They are all part of one subject matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. Let us have an explanation before further amendments are acted upon.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this bill, being Senate bill 1170, provides for the completion of the Capitol Building in conformity with the conception of the architect who served as Architect of the Capitol from 1851 to 1865, and who designed and constructed the House and Senate wings. The bill provides for the appointment of a commission, which, as set forth in the bill, is to be composed of the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the respective Houses and others; and the estimated cost of the repairs and reconstruction is about $4,000,000.

I shall make a very brief statement in explanation of the bill.

The cornerstone of the first unit of the Capitol, known as the Supreme Court section of the building, was laid on September 18, 1793. The north wing of the Supreme Court section was constructed between 1793 and 1804. The south wing, containing Statuary Hall, which was formerly the Chamber of the House of Representatives, was constructed between 1804 and 1812. The central portion, containing the rotunda and the original wooden dome, was constructed between 1818 and 1829. The replacement of the wooden dome with a cast-iron dome, and the construction of the Senate and House wings was carried on between 1851 and 1855.

The hearings reveal that at that time Mr. Thomas U. Walter, the architect who constructed the two wings, had among his plans the subsequent bringing forward of the central section of the building even to a greater extent than the pending bill proposes. He also constructed the iron dome. It was his view that the central portion ought to be extended toward the east in order to provide architecturally a sufficient base for the dome; and the plans of the committee now before the Senate in the main seek to carry out the original conception of Mr. Walter.

In 1904 a joint commission composed of three Senators and three Members of the House was appointed to investigate the subject of the extension and completion of the Capitol. That commission employed a firm of architects, Carrere & Hastings, of New York, to study the whole question. The architects thus employed reported to the commission and proposed two alternate plans. Scheme A provided for an extension of the middle section of the building eastward for a distance of 12 feet 10 inches, and scheme B for an extension for a distance of 32 feet 6 inches.

Scheme B, which seems to be preferred by most of those familiar with the proposal, will provide 54 large rooms, 18 on each of the three floors of the building, available for office use of Senators and Representatives. The commission appointed in 1904 submitted its report to Congress on March 3, 1905.

It appears that the sentimental feeling toward the Capitol Building which now exists in the hearts of some people also existed when Mr. Walter in the period from 1851 to 1865 added the House and Senate wings, and replaced the small wooden dome with the present cast-iron dome. There were at that time those who opposed the addition of the wings. There were those who, on account of sentiment, then opposed the removal of the old wooden dome and its replacement by the cast-iron dome, which, in the opinion of many experts and architects, is the finest dome in the world today, excelling that of St. Peter's in Rome and St. Paul's in London.

But, Mr. President, if Senators will observe the dome from the north wing or the south wing of the building, they will find that from an architectural standpoint it has the appearance of extending over the middle portico so as to present the aspect of an architectural maladjustment; and one of the purposes of this measure is so to extend the front of the building as to complete the harmony and the symmetry of the original construction, so that the dome will appear to be a part and parcel of the structure, rather than to have been superadded on a building too small for its proportions.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Is there any question at all about the safety of the dome in its present condition, or is it just a matter of appearance?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that there is no question as to the security of the dome. It is firmly anchored on the wall, but in order to make the dome complete the skirt apparently extends out over the portico. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the present front walls of the building on the east side will not be disturbed. They will remain and whatever firmness of foundation and support exists in that regard will not in any wise be altered. The addition will consist of building a new wall about 32 feet in front of the present eastern front of the building.

Let me also say to Senators that if they will observe the building from the front they will notice that the middle section is composed of sandstone, whereas the two wings are constructed of marble. The difference in the color is easily discernible to the most clouded eyesight. Testimony before the committee was that sandstone as a building material is quite inferior to marble. As a result, from time to time the middle section of the building must be painted in order to preserve the stone as best paint can, and to harmonize the color of the middle section as nearly as possible with the color of the two wings. That has never yet been accomplished, because the difference in color is easily discernible.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to call attention to the fact that notwithstanding the almost annual effort by repainting to keep the middle section somewhat in harmony with the wings, it cannot be satisfactorily accomplished, because it is perfectly observable that the middle section is covered with paint and has an artificial color. It does not harmonize at all with the marble wings, and the more the central portion is painted the greater the lack of harmony.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky is eminently correct. The testimony also is that the paint peels off the stone, thus requiring frequent application of paint. The testimony before the committee from eminent architects throughout the country is that the sandstone has already materially deteriorated and as time goes on it will deteriorate still more; and regardless of the architectural aspects, and regardless of the conception of completing the original plan, it will so deteriorate that it will have to be repaired either by the replacement of new stone or by refacing with marble or other material.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may be entirely wrong, but it is a tradition around here that painting the central part of the Capitol began soon after the British burned the Capitol in 1814. Is that historically correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot say. I have heard of that tradition—that because of the smoky condition of the building in 1814 by reason of the fire the building was painted in order to remove the smoke stains.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be true, of course, the building of the new wall would conceal all evidence of that unfortunate episode in the history of the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. A good point is made there by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator say that the extension would be on the west side?

Mr. CONNALLY. On the east side, the front of the building. The rear, or west side, of the building will be simply refaced with marble, but with that exception it will not be disturbed.

Mr. POPE. The wall will remain the same?

Mr. CONNALLY. The wall will remain the same; and if the Senator from Idaho will give heed to the plan on the wall, he will notice that the rear portion of the central section already extends far to the rear, whereas the front section does not. So, in order to complete the harmony, it is not necessary to extend the rear section to any degree; it is already extended.

As I was saying a moment ago about the material, I hold in my hand [exhibiting] a photograph of some of the colonnades and other portions of the building which are of sandstone. These photographs reveal the eroded condition of this work, which requires replacements from time to time because of the fact that it is sandstone rather than marble.

Mr. President, there are those who oppose remodeling the central portion of the building because of its historical associations. Some of the gentlemen who came before the committee urged that it not be changed because they did not want the place where Abraham Lincoln stood when he was inaugurated disturbed or moved. Here is a photograph [exhibiting] of the second inauguration of Mr. Lincoln. He was inaugurated on a wooden platform which was long since removed and, of course, long since destroyed. There is no spot now existing where he stood on that occasion.

Others do not want to disturb the building because of other associations of a similar kind; but if that motive had controlled, the Senate wing would never have been built; if such considerations had guided our predecessors, we would not have any dome on the building today; if that kind of consideration had actuated those who preceded us, we would not have any separate wing housing the House of Representatives. We would simply have the remains of the old central section as they were left by the British after they had captured Washington and burned the Capitol in 1814.

So there is nothing violent about this proposal according to the views of the committee and according to the views of every architect who has had supervision of the Capitol. Since the time of Mr. Walter in the period from 1861 to 1865, each Architect of the Capitol has advocated the completion of the central section of the building in conformity in general with the plans now proposed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McNARY. I recall that a bill of similar kind to that now pending passed the Senate last year. What was its fate in the other House?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the bill did not get out of the committee in the House; there was some opposition to it. As I recall, some hearings were held, but I am advised that the committee tabled the measure and that it died in the committee. The bill now pending is practically the same bill as that which was passed by the Senate last year; in fact, it is identical with the exception that we have had to revise the estimates somewhat because of the rising cost of material and labor.

In this connection, some question has been raised about the item of expense as compared with the estimates which the commission made in 1904. Of course, it is going to cost considerably more now than it would have cost in 1904. As indicating the reasons for that increase, let me say that in 1904 plasterers were paid $4.50 a day; now they are paid $14 a day. Carpenters in 1904 were drawing $3.50 a day; today they get $11 per day. Common laborers in 1904 were available at a dollar and a half, whereas today they get $4.80 per day. Bricklayers in 1904 received $4.50 a day, as contrasted with $12 today. Painters in 1904 were paid $3.50, as against $11 today. Tinners in 1904 were paid $3.50, as against $12 today. Electricians in 1904 were paid $3.50 a day, as compared with $13.20 now. Of course, materials have also increased in price. So that answers, I think, the question as to the increased cost.

Mr. President, there are two plans possible under this measure. One is plan A, which would bring forward the central section 12 feet and 10 inches, and the other is plan B, which would bring it forward 32 feet 6 inches. The determination as between the two plans is left, under the bill, to the commission, but still the Senate and the House are not precluded when the appropriation comes forward, of course, from rejecting either one of the plans as they may see fit.

The reason for the bill having an optional plan is that the overwhelming mass of architectural testimony before the committee was to the effect that, while the majority of the architects favored the remodeling, there were some aspects as between the two plans which ought to have very careful and very detailed study by the commission before a plan was adopted. Personally—I speak only for myself, but I think I may speak also for a majority of the committee—I favor plan B, which is the plan that would bring forward the central section about 32 feet.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to hear the Senator say that, because it seems to me that simply to extend the walls 12 feet, in view of the large proportions of the building, would not successfully carry out the architectural scheme which was in the minds of the original architects and of Congress when it added the two wings and put on the dome.

Mr. CONNALLY. I heartily agree with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. POPE. What would be the difference in cost as between the two plans?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am advised that the difference in cost would be very slight, because in building a wall, whether it should be built 12 feet out or 32 feet, the cost would be practically the same. Of course, there would be some difference in the interior.

Mr. President, from a practical standpoint let me point out that this construction would also provide a corridor on the third floor of the Capitol Building from the Senate wing, where the press gallery and other offices are located, over to the House of Representatives. At present there is no such method of access between the two wings. If one is on the third floor of the Senate wing and desires to go over to the House of Representatives, he has to come down to the floor below, walk over, and then go up a flight of steps.

Let me also point out, in view of the fact that the material of which the wings are constructed differs from the material in the central section, that the columns on the central section are not in harmony with the columns on the wings. The wings have marble fluted columns with Corinthian capitals, while the central section has smooth sandstone columns. Our idea is that it shall all be alike and harmonious.

The steps in front of the central section now are narrow and smaller than are the step approaches to the two wings of the building. Architecturally we are told that that is not a proper conception, and that the steps of the central section should be more nearly of the same size or of a preponderating size compared with the steps to the entrance to either wing, which to a lay mind—at least to my mind—seems entirely reasonable from an artistical and architectural standpoint.

So this bill, Mr. President, is offered with the hope that the commission will, after detailed and careful study, report back to the Senate and the House of Representatives one of these plans, which may then be included in the appropriation bill, and we may proceed to complete—not to reconstruct but to complete—the Capitol Building in accordance with the original conception of the great architects who constructed the two wings and who envisioned the time when the central section might be completed in harmony with the two wings and with the great dome which was placed on the old structure.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator has just stated the purpose is to complete the Capitol Building. There is no definite plan for such completion, whether by a 12-foot extension or a 32-foot extension. Is not that true?

Mr. CONNALLY. I tried to suggest a moment ago—perhaps the Senator did not hear me—that there are alternate plans presented by the bill which the commission will study, and one of which it will recommend, with such modifications, if necessary, as it may think desirable; that that recommendation will then come back to the appropriating committees of the Senate and the House, and, if the Senate and the House are not then satisfied with the plan, they have a very easy way of rejecting the appropriation and not going ahead.

Mr. GILLETTE. It is true the plan will have to go before the appropriations committees, but, so far as this bill is concerned, it is an authorization up to the sum of $4,000,000 for the plan to be later submitted, substantially in accordance with either scheme A or scheme B, whichever the Commission may recommend.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I gather from the statement of the Senator that either House of Congress may put a stop to the proposed extension when the plan reaches the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. It may do it if that is the desire.

Mr. ADAMS. As I read the bill in its present form, it authorizes the execution of a contract; of course, if a contract is made, there will be no opportunity for a review; and my inquiry is whether or not we are following the line of our rules in authorizing a contract without a previous appropriation?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that, under the general law, executive officers cannot execute contracts until the money is appropriated for the work.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no question of the power of Congress to authorize contracts if it sees fit to do so without an appropriation, but it does not follow the custom to which we have adhered of always laying the ground work by an appropriation. My suggestion comes from the fact that the Senator from Texas has said that Congress would still have its hand upon the situation. I was merely asking for an explanation as to how that could be if the contract should have been entered into.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the contracting officer cannot execute a contract until the money has been appropriated. That is the custom in connection with all work on the Capitol, and I am given that assurance by the Architect of the Capitol himself. That question was developed in the hearings, and the committee members will bear witness to my statement when I say that the testimony before the committee was that, at least, so far as the Capitol is concerned, contracts are never made until the money is in hand by an appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is perfectly sound; but, as a legal matter, it seems to me the bill authorizes the making of a contract, and such authorization would supersede the limitations which have existed heretofore.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not the purpose of the Senator from Texas to be inconsistent, although I have eminent authority in the Senate for being so; but the Senator from Texas was assured, as were other members of the committee, by the Architect of the Capitol when he testified that his office never makes a contract for any construction work until the money is in his hands, and he is under the impression that the law prevents him from doing so. The Senator from Texas cannot put his finger on the statute which prevents such action, but it is his impression that it does so provide.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I happen to have some information with respect to the course pursued in the building of the annex to the Congressional Library. Congress authorized the construction of an annex to the Congressional Library under a joint commission set up by the Congress for that purpose. The contract was not let until at least a portion of the money was appropriated, so the commission was authorized to begin the work. I think nothing is to be feared because of the authorization in the pending bill, and that even if the power were granted to enter into a contract nothing would be done until the money should be actually available.

Mr. CONNALLY. I feel absolutely assured of the correctness of the position of the Senator from Kentucky. The construction of the annex of the Congressional Library was under the supervision of the same authority that will carry on the work contemplated by the pending bill.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] seemed worried because we are not in this bill selecting the particular plan for a particular kind of construction. What does Congress do with regard to the construction of a departmental building? We have no say-so about it. We turn over the money in a lump sum to the Treasury and allow them to allocate the money, to determine how much money they will spend on the construction of the building, to select the plan without any reference to the Congress whatever. They have blanket authority.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, is now building a new department of the Interior Building. Who in Congress passed on that plan? Who had anything to say about it? No one did. The Secretary of the Interior decided he wanted new housing for his administration and he is building it. Did any Senator pass on the plan for that building? Did anyone raise a question in the Appropriations Committee or on the floor of the Senate as to how it would be built, or how many floors it should have, or how many elevators it should contain?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETTE. The only thing to which I wished to direct the Senator's attention was that there seems to be nothing definite in the way of a plan. The matter to which he just referred had a particular purpose. What is the purpose of the present bill? The Senator just stated it is the completion of the Capitol, but there is nothing to designate what contemplates "completion." What I am interested in is what is to be done. Is this construction to have a utilitarian purpose or merely a sentimental purpose? What is it for and why is the money desired?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Iowa is a very influential and very active and very intelligent member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. He attended diligently the hearings before that committee, and I think he really knows more about the bill than does the chairman, who, in his poor, stumbling fashion, is trying to present it to the Senate.

The Senator from Iowa knows that this construction will have a utilitarian purpose. Incidentally, however, the chief object of the bill is to preserve and complete the architectural harmony and beauty of this great Capitol in the Capital of the greatest country on earth. Why should not we have the handsomest, most superb Capitol on earth? Why should we, simply because the central section of the Capitol has been standing for 100 years unchanged, say, "No; we will not touch it"? We are living in a day of change and improvements which are, I hope, always for the best. I think, with the Government spending millions of dollars, we ought to spend at least enough to house this mighty Government of ours, so far as its legislative chambers are concerned, in a building appropriately constructed from an architectural standpoint, from the standpoint of art, from the standpoint of utility, and that we should not quibble about the comparatively small amount of money involved.

The Senator from Iowa says no plan is presented. We present two plans, as a matter of fact. With reference to the plans in the bill, so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, he favors plan B, but the Senator from Texas thinks that the adoption either of plan B or plan A will bring about a result so superior to the present condition of the central wing of the Capitol that he is willing to accept either one of the plans. He knows that the adoption of either one of them will constitute an improvement which will surpass in a transcendent way the present condition and appearance of the central wing of our Capitol.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It ought to be said in that connection that all the buildings in the triangle have been constructed out of lump-sum appropriations. Congress did not undertake to say anything about the details of the Archives Building. It did not undertake to draw the specifications and prepare the blueprints for the Apex Building, which is now under construction, in an effort to carry out the original conception of buildings in that area.

I hope the Senator's Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or some other appropriate committee in the near future will submit to the Congress authorizations providing for appropriations to complete the building program on Constitution Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue. We set out a few years ago to beautify Washington. We bought much property along Pennsylvania Avenue and Constitution Avenue and tore down a part of it and left it in a condition so that it now looks like a snaggle tooth from the filling station at Second Street down to Seventh Street. Two or three blocks of buildings were torn out, leaving half of the courthouse visible from Pennsylvania Avenue and the other half invisible. I hope some day in the near future this beautiful Capital will be fittingly improved by filling in the gaps by the construction of public buildings between here and the Archives Building so it will really present from all sides an interesting and beautiful architectural appearance to all visitors to Washington.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his suggestion and say to him that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is undertaking to give diligent consideration to all measures of that character. We think it quite appropriate, however, that we should begin on the Capitol in order to set an example in respect to the other buildings. Here was the original seat of the Government, and here is where the original plans were laid out for the building of a great Capitol to house the Congress of the United States and the Supreme Court.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Will he yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. With pleasure.

Mr. McADOO. I was not on the floor when the Senator began his statement. To what extent, aside from the artistic development—which I think highly proper and which I fully approve—does the bill relate to the utilitarian aspects of the question to meet the needs of the House of Representatives and the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. In addition to the artistic and architectural aspects of the matter, plan B, which the committee advocates, would provide 18 additional office rooms on each floor, or 54 in all. It would also provide a corridor on the third floor from the Senate wing through the entire building to the third floor of the House wing. In addition to that, it would furnish a new front to the Capitol, constructed of marble instead of sandstone, which the architects all say is a very inferior building material and will eventually require replacement in any event. If the plan is carried out, the material will be a substantial marble which will stand long after we are all gone and will cause the central wing to harmonize with the original dream and the original conception of the architects of the Capitol.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. McADOO. Yes; and I thank the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on page 1, line 11, inserting the word "excepting" before the word "replacing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "Capitol", to insert "said work having already been done", so as to read:

said work having already been done. The joint commission hereinafter provided for shall determine whether the substance of scheme A or scheme B shall be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 18, after the word "Capitol", to strike out "Notwithstanding the expiration of a Congress, any Senator or Representative who was a member of such commission during such Congress by reason of membership on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of either the Senate or House of Representatives, if reelected to the succeeding Congress, shall continue as a member of such commission until his continuance as such member or his successor thereon is determined for such succeeding Congress", and on page 3, line 1, after the word "Capitol", to strike out "shall serve as executive officer of the Commission and", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The extension, reconstruction, and replacement herein authorized shall be carried out under the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be known as the Commission for the Extension and Completion of the United States Capitol, and to be composed of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the minority leader of the Senate, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol. The Architect of the Capitol shall perform such services under this act as the Commission may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 14, after the word "supervision", to insert "and approval", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The construction contemplated under this act, including the necessary traveling expenses, the letting of contracts, advertising, purchase of materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market, the employment of all necessary architectural, engineering, and other personal services (without reference to sec. 35 of the Public Buildings Act, approved June 25, 1910, as amended, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended), and the purchase of necessary technical and other books shall be under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision and approval of the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 16, after the word "replacement", to insert "and other items enumerated in section 3", so as to read:

SEC. 4. The total cost of the extension, reconstruction, and replacement and other items enumerated in section 3 herein authorized shall not exceed the sum of $4,000,000, and a contract or contracts for any portion or all of such amount may be entered into in accordance with section 3.

SEC. 5. Appropriations made pursuant to this act shall be disbursed in the same manner as other appropriations under the Architect of the Capitol through the Division of Disbursements, Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to address a few interrogations to the Senator from Texas before the bill is put to a vote.

I do not observe anywhere in the bill any authorization for an appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], who sits by him, suggested as one of the objections to the bill that it did contain an authorization.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know whether the Senator is correct in understanding the Senator from Colorado to have made that suggestion, or whether he was wise in making it if he did make it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, I think the Senator from Texas misunderstood my inquiry. My inquiry was as to how contracts could be authorized when no appropriation is made or authorized; and I gathered that the Senator from Texas regarded this language as an authorization.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do. I regard the language of section 4 as an authorization where it says:

The total cost of the extension, reconstruction, and replacement and other items enumerated in section 3 herein authorized—

And so forth.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the construction that may be authorized, but does not the Senator agree with me that under the rules of this body, and under the rules of the Congress, no appropriation can be made until a specific authorization has been made by the Congress in a bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not disagree with the Senator as to the rule that before an appropriation is in order, there must be an authorization.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no authorization here. I read the language of section 4:

The total cost of the extension, reconstruction, and replacement and other items enumerated in section 3 herein authorized—

That, of course, obviously refers only to the extension—shall not exceed the sum of $4,000,000.

Obviously, that is merely a limitation upon the cost. Does not the Senator believe there ought to be incorporated in the bill a specific statement saying:

An appropriation of such and such amount is hereby authorized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming says this authorization obviously is limited to the extension. In answer to him, I will say that it says:

Extension, reconstruction, and replacement and other items enumerated in section 3.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The items enumerated there are merely detailed items of construction.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will permit me, I am of opinion that the bill now is an authorization. If the Senator from Wyoming has any doubt about it, I shall be glad to consider any amendment he desires to offer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, the language of section 1 provides that it shall be enacted—

That the central portion of the Capitol shall be extended, reconstructed, and replaced in substantial accordance with either scheme A or scheme B—

And so forth. While the word "authorized" is not used there, is not the enactment itself an authorization to carry out the plan, subject to the subsequent limitation? Section 2 also refers to "the extension, reconstruction, and replacement herein authorized." Does not that of itself authorize an appropriation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I think not. Congress might pass a bill of this kind, authorizing certain work to be done, and then the matter might remain in abeyance for years before an appropriation was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it would unless an appropriation should be made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Unless it should be authorized and made.

Mr. BARKLEY. But whenever Congress authorizes the doing of a thing, of course such action presupposes that there is to be an appropriation following the authorization of the thing being done, in order that it may be carried out. I recognize the point made by the Senator that there must be an authorization; but if Congress should instruct the Secretary of the Navy to build a battleship, while, of course, it could not be built until the appropriation was made, it seems to me the instruction would be regarded as an authorization for an appropriation which would be made later.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not wish to seek to compel the Senator to agree with me. I raise that point merely for the benefit of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not intend to pursue the matter further, but I should like to ask another question.

Section 4 also says, in lines 18 and 19:

> And a contract or contracts for any portion or all of such amount may be entered into in accordance with section 3.

Section 3 reads:

> The construction contemplated under this act, including the necessary traveling expenses, * * * shall be under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision and approval of the commission.

I desire to ask the Senator from Texas or the Senator from Kentucky just what official representative of the Government would sign the contract under this language.

Mr. CONNALLY. To what language does the Senator refer?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The language of sections 3 and 4. Who would sign the contract which is provided for in the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is to be assumed that the commission will authorize the Architect of the Capitol to do so. He usually makes the contracts with regard to all structures relating to the Capitol and its grounds.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator from Texas believe that the language of the bill gives the commission authority to do that?

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Texas did not believe that to be the case, he would not have the bill here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, section 3 provides that—

> The construction contemplated under this act—

That includes the building, the furnishings in it, and everything else, it seems to me—> including the necessary traveling expenses, the letting of contracts, advertising, purchase of materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market, the employment of all necessary architectural, engineering, and other personal services, * * * and the purchase of necessary technical and other books, shall be under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision and approval of the commission.

Subject to the control and advice of the commission, it seems to me the Architect of the Capitol would be authorized to make contracts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the ordinary practice in building construction is to have an architect in control and exercising supervision; but the architect is seldom, if ever, the person who signs the contract. It seems to me the bill is seriously defective in that it clothes no particular individual, official, board, or commission with the responsibility of making a contract for the expenditure of a very large sum of money.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will realize that there is a difference between the present case and the procedure where a private individual or corporation is constructing a building under contract and employs an architect to supervise the construction of the work. Here the Architect is the agent of Congress. He is an employee of the Government. He is in charge of the Capitol. He supervises not only the maintenance of the Capitol and its grounds but the construction of any additional buildings that may be authorized, just as the Architect of the Capitol now is supervising the construction of the addition to the Library of Congress. The Architect of the Capitol does that under the control and approval of the Joint Commission on the Library, which was created by Congress to supervise and bring about the construction of the new building of the Library of Congress. The joint commission from time to time has met and authorized the signing of contracts, which the Architect of the Capitol attends to; and I imagine the same procedure would be followed in this case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the Senator agree that it might be better to make the authorization specific instead of having to depend upon the imagination of any Member of the Senate or any other person?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think anything is left to the imagination here.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was using the Senator's language.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill authorizes the Architect of the Capitol to do these things with the approval of the commission.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I submit to the Senator that the draftsmanship of the bill would be improved if there were in section 3 a provision specifically authorizing some particular individual to enter into the contract. I do not care to offer such an amendment, because I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not, either. I am just "butting in" here, where I have no business.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming has raised a question about the signing of the contract. If he will read the bill, he will see that it sets up a commission. One of the members of the commission is the Architect of the Capitol—not an architect whom we go out and hire to do one little job and then discharge and employ another. The Office of Architect of the Capitol is a statutory office. It is recognized by law, just like that of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. The Architect of the Capitol is an official of the Government. The bill provides that he shall be a member of the commission, and in addition it says that "the Architect of the Capitol shall perform such services under this act as the commission may direct." The commission is the authority, of course; but the commission in the course of its work as it has heretofore been conducted will authorize, by resolution or by minute, the signing of the contract by the Architect of the Capitol.

I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that other architects will be associated with the Architect of the Capitol so far as the architectural features of the building are concerned. The commission has authority to employ architects for advice and consultation on these alternate plans; so there is nothing in that contention.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would there be any objection, then, to inserting an amendment at the end of line 19——

Mr. CONNALLY. I have an amendment which I think will satisfy the Senator. There is nothing so pleasant in a body like the Senate, observing the senatorial tradition of courtesy to Senators, as doing all that is possible in our brief stay here to accommodate our colleagues, and in order to accommodate the Senator from Wyoming I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, not because I think the amendment is necessary, but to please the Senator and to allay the fears of any whose apprehensions may have been aroused by the speech of the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, at the end of line 19 to insert "A sum not exceeding $4,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does that meet the objection of the Senator?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It does not meet the objection with respect to the authorization to sign a contract.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think we are going to meet the Senator's objection. According to the Senator from Wyoming, the contract could not be signed until the money was available and we could not get the money until the contract was signed, so we would meet ourselves coming back.

Mr. President, I do not like to have the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds attacked for seeming negligence regarding an authorization. What is an authorization? It is not so many words in a particular phrase. It is what is to be done. What does the joint resolution provide? It provides that the commission set up shall proceed to reconstruct and complete the Capitol Building. Is not that an authorization to do something? Is it nothing but a plain invitation? It is an authorization to the commission to do a certain thing. This is what is provided on page 2:

SEC. 2. The extension, reconstruction, and replacement—— herein authorized.

What about them?—

Section 4 provides:

The total cost of the extension, reconstruction, and replacement and other items enumerated in section 3 herein authorized—

And so forth. Where does the commission get the authority except by the pending measure? They go before the Committee on Appropriations, and some Senator with a technical slant of mind rises and says, "Mr. Chairman, where is there any authorization?"

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas will recall that this is a suggestion I made to him not long ago when the joint resolution first came up. Has the amendment just suggested been agreed to?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; it has not been voted on as yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that amendment shall be agreed to, it will certainly be an authorization for the appropriation of the amount of money the Senator has set out in the bill. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. Being an appropriation-minded Senator, he views these questions always, properly, from the authorization standpoint. My contention is that an authorization authorizes that something be done, and when we authorize that something be done, that provides a basis for inclusion of the item by the Committee on Appropriations if they see fit to recommend the appropriation.

I do not know that this amendment will satisfy all Senators, but if it shall satisfy the Senator from Tennessee, I think it ought to stand the test.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Andrews	Copeland	King	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lee	Robinson
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Russell
Bankhead	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Barkley	Frazier	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	George	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Gerry	Lundeen	Steiwer
Bone	Gibson	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gillette	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Green	McKellar	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	McNary	Tydings
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Vandenberg
Burke	Harrison	Moore	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Wagner
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Walsh
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wheeler
Caraway	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Chavez	Hughes	Overton
Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (S. 1170) was passed.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 181, Senate Joint Resolution 102, setting aside October 11, 1937, as General Pulaski Memorial Day, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when this joint resolution was reached on the calendar, remembering that a measure relating to the same subject was vetoed a year or two ago, I had it passed over. After talking with the Senator from Connecticut, it is my understanding that this joint resolution does not permanently fix October 11 as a holiday, but merely provides for recognition of that day in the present year as a holiday.

Mr. LONERGAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. In that view of the matter, I personally have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. Res. 102) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1937, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1937, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers in the Coast Guard and also in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

HALIBUT FISHERY TREATY, UNITED STATES AND CANADA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive F, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, a convention between the United States and Canada, signed at Ottawa on January 29, 1937, which revises the Convention for the Preservation of the Halibut Fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, signed between the two Governments at Ottawa on May 9, 1930, which was read the second time, as follows:

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

The President of the United States of America,

And His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, in respect of the Dominion of Canada,

Desiring to provide more effectively for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, have resolved to conclude a convention revising the convention for the preservation of that fishery signed on their behalf at Ottawa on May 9, 1930, and have named as their plenipotentiaries for that purpose,

The President of the United States of America:

Norman Armour, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada; and

His Majesty, for the Dominion of Canada:

The Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The nationals and inhabitants and fishing vessels and boats of the United States of America and of Canada, respectively, are hereby prohibited from fishing for halibut (Hippoglossus) both in the territorial waters and in the high seas off the western coasts of the United States of America, including the southern as well as the western coasts of Alaska, and of Canada, from the first day of November next after the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Convention to the fifteenth day of the following February, both days inclusive, and within the same period yearly thereafter.

The International Fisheries Commission provided for by Article III is hereby empowered, subject to the approval of the President of the United States of America and of the Governor General of Canada, to suspend or change the closed season provided for by this Article, as to part or all of the convention waters, when it finds after investigation such suspensions or changes are necessary, and to permit, limit, regulate, and prohibit in any area or at any time when fishing for halibut is prohibited, the taking, retention, and landing of halibut caught incidentally to fishing for other species of fish, and the possession during such fishing of halibut of any origin.

It is understood that nothing contained in this Convention shall prohibit the nationals or inhabitants or the fishing vessels or boats of the United States of America or of Canada, from fishing in the waters hereinbefore specified for other species of fish during the season when fishing for halibut in such waters is prohibited by this Convention or by any regulations adopted in pursuance of its provisions.

It is further understood that nothing contained in this Convention shall prohibit the International Fisheries Commission from conducting fishing operations for investigation purposes at any time.

ARTICLE II

Every national or inhabitant, vessel or boat of the United States of America or of Canada engaged in halibut fishing on the high seas in violation of this Convention or of any regulation adopted under the provisions thereof may be seized by the duly authorized officer of either High Contracting Party and detained by the officers making such seizure and delivered as soon as practicable to an authorized official of the country to which such person, vessel, or boat belongs, at the nearest point to the place of seizure, or elsewhere, as may be agreed upon. The authorities of the nation to which such person, vessel, or boat belongs alone shall have jurisdiction to conduct prosecutions for the violation of the provisions of this Convention, or any regulations which may be adopted in pursuance of its provisions, and to impose penalties for such violation; and the witnesses and proofs necessary for such prosecutions, so far as such witnesses or proofs are under the control of the other High Contracting Party, shall be furnished with all reasonable promptitude to the authorities having jurisdiction to conduct the prosecutions.

Each High Contracting Party shall be responsible for the proper observance of this Convention, or of any regulation adopted under the provisions thereof, in the portion of its waters covered thereby.

ARTICLE III

The High Contracting Parties agree to continue under this Convention the Commission as at present constituted and known as the International Fisheries Commission, established by the Convention for the preservation of the halibut fishery, signed at Washington, March 2, 1923, and continued under the Convention signed at Ottawa, May 9, 1930, consisting of four members, two appointed by each Party, which Commission shall make such investigations as are necessary into the life history of the halibut in the convention waters and shall publish a report of its activities from time to time. Each of the High Contracting Parties shall have power to fill, and shall fill from time to time, vacancies which may occur in its representation on the Commission. Each of the High Contracting Parties shall pay the salaries and expenses of its own members, and joint expenses incurred by the Commission shall be paid by the two High Contracting Parties in equal moieties.

The High Contracting Parties agree that for the purposes of protecting and conserving the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, the International Fisheries Commission, with the approval of the President of the United States of America and of the Governor General of Canada, may, in respect of the nationals and inhabitants and fishing vessels and boats of the United States of America and of Canada, from time to time.

(a) divide the convention waters into areas;

(b) limit the catch of halibut to be taken from each area within the season during which fishing for halibut is allowed;

(c) prohibit departure of vessels from any port or place, or from any receiving vessel or station, to any area for halibut fishing, after any date when in the judgment of the International Fisheries Commission the vessels which have departed for that area prior to that date or which are known to be fishing in that area shall suffice to catch the limit which shall have been set for that area under section (b) of this paragraph;

(d) fix the size and character of halibut fishing appliances to be used in any area;

(e) make such regulations for the licensing and departure of vessels and for the collection of statistics of the catch of halibut as it shall find necessary to determine the condition and trend of the halibut fishery and to carry out the other provisions of this Convention;

(f) close to all halibut fishing such portion or portions of an area or areas as the International Fisheries Commission find to be populated by small, immature halibut.

ARTICLE IV

The High Contracting Parties agree to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this Convention and any regulations adopted thereunder, with appropriate penalties for violations thereof.

ARTICLE V

The present Convention shall remain in force for a period of five years and thereafter until two years from the date when either of the High Contracting Parties shall give notice to the other of its desire to terminate it.

This Convention shall, from the date of the exchange of ratifications, be deemed to supplant the Convention for the preservation of the halibut fishery signed at Ottawa, May 9, 1930.

ARTICLE VI

This Convention shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the High Contracting Parties. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Ottawa as soon as practicable, and the Convention shall come into force on the day of the exchange of ratifications.

In faith whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention in duplicate, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at Ottawa on the twenty-ninth day of January, in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-seven.

NORMAN ARMOUR. [SEAL]
W. L. MACKENZIE KING. [SEAL]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to explain this treaty. In discussing the general question of the fish problems of the Pacific northwest a couple of weeks ago I described in detail the workings of the International Fish Commission. That Commission was created in 1924 under a treaty between this Government and the Government of Canada. For the first 6 years the work of the Commission consisted exclusively of investigation. Since 1931, under another treaty which was ratified in 1930, the Commission has done regulatory work, and has performed services which are recognized as being of extreme value in the conservation of the fish resources.

The pending treaty, which was signed on January 29, 1937, is different in several respects from the treaty of 1930. However, there are only two of the changes which are of any importance. One of the changes is that the treaty provides that when men fishing for other kinds of fish than halibut incidentally catch halibut in areas in which the fishing for halibut at the particular time is prohibited, they shall come under rules and regulations to be established by the Commission. At the present time fish thus incidentally caught must be immediately brought into port and surrendered either to the Canadian Government or to our Government. That has resulted in a failure of regulation.

It has been found impossible to enforce the law, and the Commission itself recommends that this change be made. It amounts to only about 150,000 pounds per year, as compared with a total of 22,000,000 pounds which are permitted to be caught, and does not affect conservation.

The second change is in reference to the time when halibut boats may leave for a closed area. At the present time closing the area is the only means by which the Commission is permitted to regulate. It is not permitted to regulate the time when the boats may leave for the area. At the present time a boat may leave for the area, but if the captain of the boat makes a mistake in his figuring, or if he encounters bad weather, it means that he is in the area in the closed season, and he must either return with less than a load or violate the law. If he returns with less than a load, it is costly to him and his crew. If he violates the law, the Commission finds that he cannot successfully be prosecuted. Therefore, the Commission recommends that it be given power to fix the date at which boats shall leave the port for the fishing area. It is the belief of the Commission that they can more successfully carry out the regulations when such power is given them.

I will say, Mr. President, that the changes are approved by everyone concerned. The Commission, representing both governments, and the employers and the employees, all desire these changes in the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of executive F, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, a convention between the United States and Canada signed at Ottawa on January 29, 1937, which revises the convention for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, signed between the two Government at Ottawa on May 9, 1930.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the convention is ratified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 24, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Have mercy upon us, O God, according to Thy loving kindness; according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out our transgressions. Create in us clean hearts, O God, and renew a right spirit within us. Give us possession of ourselves, sustain us with Thy presence, and gladden us in the increase of our strength. Heavenly Father, help us to keep in our hearts the ministries of the Master, the cup of cold water, the widow's mite, and Mary's sacrifice; may these bless us after the sun goes down. His holy nature stooped to the lowest tasks while His thoughts were wandering through the eternities. Almighty God, crown us with His life, light, and love, and may our thoughts and actions be unspotted by the sense of guilt. Inspire us, blessed Lord, to live more by faith and less by sight, more by the power of God and less by the power of the world, and more by those holy conceptions which call us into the emancipation of the spirit. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5232. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1938

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5779, with Mr. BUCK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding in the Department of State, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $148,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: On page 5, line 5, after the comma, strike out "$148,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$146,300."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, while the amount of money involved is only $1,700, I feel I can show justification for its elimination.

In the past I have made some remarks which were rather critical in reference to the operation of The National Archives. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am chairman, held a hearing for the purpose of trying to get The National Archives to function. We have succeeded to a certain extent. I am sure we have not wasted our efforts.

In the report of the hearings Mr. Wynne states the $1,700 additional is desired for the purpose of repairing and binding certain documents in the State Department archives, some of which are over 100 years old. He further states a large number of people, both lawyers and others, interested in history, visit the State Department to look over the papers, and that the State Department has set aside 14 tables up there, and maintains a number of employees to assist those who desire to go over the documents.

I am going to quote from his testimony. Mr. Wynne says in part:

I should like, with your permission, to emphasize the item of $1,700 regarding the papers and correspondence in the archives section. We find here the originals of nearly all treaties to which the United States is a party. The correspondence to which I referred consists of the originals of diplomatic and consular despatches from the field; that is, from embassies, legations, consulates general, and consulates to the Department, copies of the Department's instructions to the field, the originals of notes from foreign embassies and legations in Washington to the Department, and copies of notes addressed by the Department to these embassies and legations. The correspondence also contains the originals of what are known as miscellaneous letters, which are letters from former Presidents, Cabinet officers, Senators, Congressmen, other Government officials, and State officials, as well as private individuals, to the Department. There are also the so-called domestic letters, which are copies of the Department's answers to the miscellaneous letters mentioned. Reference may also be made to the records of claims commissions, boundary commissions, and arbitrations in the archives section, to the correspondence up to 1870 relating to Territories of the United States.

Mr. Wynne also states at another place:

A well-lighted room with 14 tables, 5 of which are adorned with typewriters, has been reserved for the use of those who are engaged in this work. Members of the archives section are on hand to render such assistance as showing research workers where the relevant volumes of correspondence and records are, and so forth. Teachers of international law and international relations, lawyers, and publicists have been quick to make use of this service. The 14 tables are in constant use; sometimes we have as many as 20 research workers at a time using them. I feel that the service rendered is of great value, because it means that trained scholars and international authorities of established position can turn to "original sources" and, after a careful study of these sources, give the benefits of that study to the interested public in the form of books and treatises.

Members of this House who know anything about The National Archives will agree that the purpose of the act that created the Archives was to take care of just such documents as are referred to by Mr. Wynne. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it appears to me the first documents that should have been turned over to the Archives are these that now rest in the State Department archives. If Government departments are going to retain such historical documents what are we to have reposing in The National Archives? Here is a duplication of effect; just as clear a case as it is possible to present, because you have the word of the Government official in charge that in the State Department you have an archives doing exactly what was set out as a responsibility placed upon the National Archivist and National Archives.

This $1,700 is for binding and also repairing these manuscripts.

It so happens the Archivist is aided by a National Archives Council, and the Secretary of State is chairman of that council. It is the duty of the council to advise the Archivist as to the papers he is to secure from the various Government agencies to place in The National Archives. However, here the State Department, whose head is chairman of The National Archives Council, is maintaining its own archives. I repeat it is a duplication of the work set out for The National Archives.

After the hearings were printed I inquired of the Archivist whether or not The National Archives were in a position to repair manuscripts and do binding. For a new agency they have received a very large appropriation, and they are continually growing. I have his reply—and I am asking the permission of the House to put the correspondence in the RECORD—that they have the finest equipment which can be bought, with experts to do the job; yet this bill through the appropriation for printing and binding will give the State Department $1,700 with which to do the very work the appropriation for The National Archives provides for.

I made inquiry whether or not The National Archives had facilities to take care of people who desired to see the documents if they were transferred from the State Department to The National Archives. I knew they had, because I had been there and had looked at a hundred beautiful mahogany desks, in a reference room set aside for that very purpose.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that if the National Archivist is going to function properly the old treaties and the old diplomatic correspondence, a hundred years old, as the records show, should be in The National Archives, if any Government documents should be there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. If you will read the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill you will find the statements I am making with reference to The National Archives are correct. While I have been critical in my remarks about The National Archives, I repeat that my purpose is to try to make a new Government agency function properly. They received appropriations for a year and a half, and I have proved beyond question at a hearing that they were not functioning. However, an investigation discloses they are now doing much better, and I hope they will continue to improve and justify the large appropriations we have made.

We provided for additional appropriations for personnel this year because the Archivist said more help was needed in view of the large volume of documents they expected to receive from the various Government agencies.

I always desire to be fair, and in this instance I say the fault is not with the Archivist. He is limited in his operations. He cannot go into a department and take valuable historical documents, no matter how old they might be, but must accept only that which the head of the Government department or agency gives him. Mr. Connor, the Archivist, tells me he has the facilities now to care for all documents, no matter how old or how valuable. They have watchmen on duty 24 hours a day; they have vaults to store the more valuable records.

Mr. Chairman, as long as we have the facilities and as long as we have the money already appropriated in the independent offices appropriation bill—and I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], who is a member of that committee, will state that is the fact——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is in the independent offices bill, but the bill is now in conference.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is there any dispute over that item?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that the committee shares the belief he has expressed and thinks there is a great deal of merit in his proposal. We have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the chairman of the subcommittee, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to. Below will be found the two letters I received from the Archivist, together with the resolution adopted by The National Archives Council and the regulations governing the withdrawal of material deposited in the Archives Building:

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1937.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of March 17, 1937, in which you call to my attention the testimony of Dr. Cyril Wynne, Chief, Division of Research and Publications, Department of State, before the Subcommittee on Budget Estimates of the State Department, House Appropriations Committee, with reference to the binding, rebinding, and use of certain records in the archives section of the State Department, and in which you raise two questions, viz, (1) whether these papers should be transferred to The National Archives; (2) whether The National Archives is equipped to do the binding and rebinding necessary to protect them from damage.

In reply to the first question may I recall your attention to the provisions of section 6 of The National Archives Act (48 Stat. 1122–1124), which created The National Archives Council and authorized it to "define the classes of material which shall be transferred to The National Archives Building, and establish regulations governing such transfer"? On February 10, 1936, The National Archives Council adopted resolutions, a copy of which is herewith enclosed, from which you will note that the responsibility is placed on the head of any agency of the Government to determine what records in his possession fall within class I as defined by the council for transfer to The National Archives.

On January 28, 1937, I wrote to the heads of the several executive departments, including the Secretary of State, a letter (copy enclosed) calling their attention to these resolutions and also to the fact that there would soon be installed in The National Archives Building equipment sufficient to store and preserve a large volume of such records as fall within the classes defined by the council, and requesting that they report to me a descriptive list of such records as they were prepared to recommend for transfer in order that I might make the necessary arrangements for transferring them to The National Archives Building.

The Secretary of State acknowledged receipt of this letter under date of February 9, 1937, stating that he had the matter under consideration and would communicate the information requested at an early date. As this information has not yet been received, I cannot state whether the particular records referred to in your letter will be included in the list or not.

In reply to your second inquiry I beg to say that The National Archives has the best equipment available for fumigating, cleaning, and repairing old records, whether bound or loose, so as to preserve them indefinitely and protect them from damage while in use. The National Archives also has in its appropriation an item for binding, but it does not have the equipment for this purpose, since under a ruling (A–74150) of the Comptroller General all new binding for The National Archives must be done by the Government Printing Office.

Sincerely yours,

R. D. W. CONNOR,
Archivist of the United States.

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1937.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COCHRAN: In response to your request by telephone, I have the honor to submit the following information with respect to the reference facilities available in The National Archives Building.

A Division of Reference has been created and organized under authority granted in section 3 of The National Archives Act (48 Stat. L. 1122–1124). Its major functions are to supervise and control the search rooms, in which the archives will be consulted by searchers; to make available to searchers the catalog prepared by the Division of Cataloging; to requisition for the use of searchers the archival materials desired from the various stack sections; to aid searchers in the location and use of archival materials; to furnish copies of documents and supply other archival services requested; and to enforce the rules and regulations governing the use of the archives.

At the present time 15 people are employed in this division to perform the functions referred to above. Three search rooms have been made available to searchers, one large room and two auxiliary rooms. The three rooms contain desk space for 110 searchers. If necessary, additional space can be made available for the use of Government officials in searching the records.

Facilities are also available to searchers who are interested in motion-picture films and sound recordings. The auditorium which was constructed for this purpose in compliance with section 7 of The National Archives Act (48 Stat. L. 1122–1124) will seat 215 people.

It might be added that adequate facilities for supplying photostatic copies of records in the custody of the Archivist are also available.

If additional information is desired, I will be glad to undertake to furnish it.

Very truly yours,

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES COUNCIL ON FEBRUARY 10, 1936

Whereas section 3 of the "Act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (c. 668, 48 Stat. L. 1122), provides that "All archives or records belonging to the Government of the United States (legislative, executive, judicial, and other) shall be under the charge and superintendence of the Archivist to this extent: He shall have full power to inspect personally or by deputy the records of any agency of the United States Government whatsoever and wheresoever located, and shall have the full cooperation of any and all persons in charge of such records in such inspections, and to requisition for transfer to The National Archives establishment such archives or records as The National Archives Council, hereafter provided, shall approve for such transfer";

And whereas section 6 of said act creates The National Archives Council and authorizes it to "define the classes of material which shall be transferred to The National Archives Building and establish regulations governing such transfer": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Archivist of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to requisition for transfer to The National Archives any archives or records in the custody of any agency of the United States Government (legislative, executive, judicial, and other) which fall within any of the following classes, viz:

I. Any archives or records (a) which the head of the agency in custody of them may deem not to be necessary for use in the conduct of the regular current business of said agency; (b) which he may consider to be in such physical condition that they cannot be used without danger of damage to them; and (c) for which, in his opinion, he is unable to provide adequate or safe storage.

II. Any archives or records of any Federal agency that has gone out of existence, unless its functions have been transferred to the agency which has custody of its records.

III. Any other archives or records which The National Archives Council, by special resolution or which the head of the agency in custody of them for special reasons, may authorize to be transferred to The National Archives.

Resolved further, (1) That when the head of any agency of the Government of the United States shall determine that any archives or records in his custody fall within class I as defined above, he shall cause to be furnished to the Archivist of the United States a descriptive list of such archives or records which shall thereupon become subject to requisition by the Archivist for transfer to The National Archives; (2) that when the Archivist shall issue his requisition for any archives or records he shall furnish to a duly authorized representative of the agency that has custody of them an identification inventory of the material covered by such requisition, and this inventory shall be verified and agreed to by the representative of said agency before such archives or records shall be transferred to the Archivist; (3) that when such verification has been completed and certified to on the inventory form by the signatures of the representatives of said agency and of the Archivist of the United States, respectively, such archives or records shall be delivered by the representative of said agency either to the representative of the Archivist of the United States at the depository in which they are stored for transfer to The National Archives or to a representative of the Archivist of the United States at The National Archives Building: Provided, That all such archives or records shall pass into the legal custody of the Archivist of the United States when, and not until, they have been either delivered to his representative for loading on the trucks of The National Archives or delivered to and accepted by a representative of the Archivist at The National Archives Building.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING THE TEMPORARY WITHDRAWAL BY AGENCIES OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OF MATERIAL DEPOSITED IN THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES BUILDING

JANUARY 26, 1937.

The following regulation has been made and promulgated by the Archivist of the United States pursuant to the authority vested in him by The National Archives Act, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122–1124):

"Public records in the custody of the Archivist may, with his approval, be withdrawn from The National Archives Building temporarily, for official use, by any agency of the Government of the United States. All applications for permission to withdraw records from The National Archives Building shall be made in writing on forms furnished by the Archivist. Such forms shall be signed by the head of the agency making application or, in his name, by his representative, thereunto duly authorized."

R. D. W. CONNOR,
Archivist of the United States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 20 minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I will have to object to the request. We have, today, a bill containing 105 pages and it is hoped we can conclude the consideration of the bill today. If the gentleman from Texas takes 20 minutes, there will be some other Members who will want further time.

Mr. DIES. I think 20 minutes is a very short time when we consider the fact that we expect to be here all summer.

Mr. McMILLAN. What about 10 minutes?

Mr. DIES. I cannot make the speech in 10 minutes, but I shall try to do so in 15 minutes as a compromise with the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to serve notice right now to other members of the Committee that we do want to get through with the consideration of the bill today.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I do not want to object to the speech of my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], because I know he has a valuable contribution to make, but we have an amendment before the House and I think that should be disposed of now. I do not want to object to the gentleman's request, but, I repeat, we should dispose of the amendment which the chairman of the subcommittee has stated he is willing to accept. The gentleman can see if we do not vote now on my amendment by the time he concludes the Members will not understand what the amendment is and it might not be accepted, whereas if we vote now I am sure the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DIES. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri objected to my request?

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not object, but I reserved the right to object to ask the gentleman to withhold his request until we vote on the pending amendment. I certainly do not intend to object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. DIES. I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri in reference to placing many things we have in the various departments of the Government in the Archives Building. I think the request of the gentleman from Missouri to cut down the expense for the reason he has suggested is very timely.

I also want to call your attention to many other papers we have in the various departments of the Government that ought to be moved just as rapidly as possible to the Archives Building; we have many bills here that the Members of the Congress have placed in the hopper for action by the committees and by the Congress that ought to be placed in the Archives Building.

DO NOT CHANGE THE CAPITOL BUILDING

I think one of these bills which is now before the Senate and is being discussed, is the one with respect to changing the front of the Capitol Building at a cost of $2,000,000 or more. This is to change a building that has stood here for years and years and is one of the most outstanding landmarks of the National Capital—a building of beauty and charm, a building we are all proud of as a Capitol Building. It has in the past stood for intelligence and stability. Think of anyone being interested in changing this building and spending $2,000,000 to do so. I do not believe you can think of anything that is more ridiculous. I think that bill ought to be consigned to the Archives Building, and some day we will look upon it with a great deal of interest and believe we did a very wise thing when we consigned it there. Let well enough alone; the architects should not try to get a new job by changing the outline of the Capitol.

I also call your attention to the fact that the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Institute of Architects objects to this defacement of the Capitol Building. Why anyone should want to do this I cannot understand. We do not need the space, we certainly should take no chances in defacing this old landmark. The old is good enough for me. Are the same architects suggesting the change that omitted the air conditioning in the House Office Building when the building was built 3 years ago, and last summer almost wrecked the Office Building by installing an air-conditioning plant that cost over $2,000,000, so I am told? Members of Congress, beware of this preposterous proposal.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. May I remind the gentleman that during the last session of the Congress the Senate passed a similar bill carrying an appropriation of $3,500,000. When the bill came to the House ft was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and I took a great deal of delight in opposing the bill, and it was on my motion that it was finally tabled.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman still a member of that committee?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am; and I am still opposed to the bill.

Mr. RICH. That is fine. I hope all the members of the committee have a good sound mind such as yours and just as good judgment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman wholeheartedly.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee, and I hope the Members of the House, if this bill comes before us asking for two or three million dollars to change the Capitol Building, will consign the measure to the Archives Building.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand there are some dangerous conditions revealed with respect to the central part of the building. Is there any danger that there may be a collapse?

Mr. RICH. This building is just as solid as the rock of Gibraltar. I wish the Congress were just as sound. The trouble is they are not only trying to tear down the Capitol Building but the laws of the land as well, and I think this is the time for us to be good, sound, rock-ribbed Americans. Stop the proposed change. It was good enough for Cleveland and McKinley, and it is good enough for me. [Applause.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this to call attention to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. These old records that he would send down to the Archives Building are part of the library of the State Department, and the testimony shows that these old records are constantly used by the officials of the Department for a study of current problems. It will greatly hamper the officials of the State Department if part of the library is in the State Department and part of it in the Archives Building. In addition to that, the State Department library is used by students of international law from all over the country. They come there to study these documents, and they are allowed to do so. If they come and have to go to the State Department for one set of documents and to the Archives Building for another set of documents, it will be very inconvenient. I caution the Committee against adopting this amendment, because I believe it will seriously hamper the current work of the State Department in the ordinary everyday tasks they have to do. I think we would be making a mistake if we adopted this amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I read Mr. Wynne's testimony, and I find that he lays emphasis on the fact that people come from the outside to see the documents, old treaties, diplomatic correspondence, and so forth. They have the very nicest set-up anyone could imagine at the Archives Building for that very purpose, with plenty of personnel to assist those who desire to see documents. That is just what The National Archives is for.

Mr. BACON. The point I want to emphasize is that there are only about 200 of these old documents, and they are in bad condition. They need repair, but they are in current use every day by the officials of the State Department, and to move them into another building will hamper the State Department in its everyday work. If this amendment is adopted, these documents will not be sent to the Archives Building, because they are needed for current work. It will simply mean that there will be no money to make much-needed repairs on very valuable State Department records, treaties, and other important documents. The amendment should not be adopted, in the interest of efficiency and good administration.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 31, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PASSPORT AGENCIES

For salaries and expenses of maintenance, rent, cost of insurance covering shipments of money by messenger, registered mail, or otherwise, and traveling expenses not to exceed $500, for not to exceed five passport agencies, $59,480, of which $1,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On the 2d day of February the very able gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] made what I consider to be a very scholarly speech upon the subject of war debts. At that time I asked him a question or two relative to the thesis that was in his mind in respect to the collection of those debts. He, however, offered no solution, and virtually the only conclusion as a result of his remarks is that it is a question that ought to have the attention of Congress, and that in his judgment the question of war debts ought not to be settled by some expert from overseas. This item in the pending bill dealing with passport agencies brings this matter to my mind. I have examined the testimony of Miss Shipley, the very able lady who presides over that Department, and I learn that for the last 6 months there has been an increase in passport visas of approximately 27 percent, and that for the month of December it was approximately 48 percent. If you take these figures in connection with the recent report of the Department of Commerce, which shows that our tourists' expenditures in foreign countries for the fiscal year 1936 were $495,000,000, and that our immigrant remittances of money which people send to relatives and kin in foreign countries amounted to $143,000,000, and, after making the proper deduction for the money that has been sent from those countries over here, you will have a net excess of $511,000,000 for the year 1936 for tourist expenditures and immigrant remittances.

For the fiscal year 1936 those two items amount to over one-half billion dollars, and it seems to me therein lies a possible solution for the war-debt problem that has been plaguing the best minds of the country. They owe us, on an amortized basis running for 62 years, approximately $22,000,000,000. Naturally we want the debt paid. They do not have the gold, largely because the United States owns over one-half the visible gold in the world. Nor will we take manufactured products so long as we have a static unemployment group amounting to approximately 8,000,000 people. Yet every time we study the war-debt proposition and explore the idea of paying in cash or goods, that is where we stop, and every discussion I have heard upon the subject does not get beyond the point of general agreement that we ought to be paid, but we do not know how it will be paid. It is purely a matter of mechanics. Here is a tremendous external debt that is not even in the process of collection at the present time, and I respectfully submit and suggest to the Members of the House that they do some thinking in connection with a plan whereby we might be able to apply these tourists' expenditures and immigrant remittances toward the ultimate payment of the war debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should like very much to expand this whole matter, but I am only suggesting it to the attention of the House for deliberation.

These war debts constitute one of the strangest emotional phenomena in our national life. With high patriotism the people of this country responded to the persuasion of flying squadrons of minutemen to give until it hurt. With the greatest of ease, $10,000,000,000 was coaxed from their pockets. That ten billion and more is still over there and with what singular apathy we consider this debt. It constitutes a national problem. It is everybody's problem, and it cannot go on forever without a solution.

Perhaps a very brief history of the situation will not be amiss. These war loans were made in 1917 and 1918 so that the Allied nations could purchase supplies and munitions with which to carry on. The war ended in November of 1918. Our people were holding the bonds and our Government was holding the sack. Under Harding a Debt Funding Commission was established. It scaled the debt, funded it on a 62-year basis, and payments were made. In 1931 under Hoover a moratorium was declared and no payments were made. In 1932 the debts went into default, and that is where they still are—with little immediate hope of collection. The tragedy of the matter is not that the debts have not been collected but that they are not even in process of collection. I believe it can be said that no proposal of collection of any kind is now before this country. Perhaps we have gotten so callous in our fanciful dealings with billions and billions that $11,000,000,000 of war debts mean little. About the only thing we hear about it is the 10-line squib that appears on the front page of most newspapers on December 16 to the effect that the 15th of December, when payments were due, has come and gone and no payments were made. Thereafter we chuck the subject into mothballs for another year.

Perhaps we fail to appreciate that these debts, like private debts, grow cold with the passing of time. We continue in our position of a creditor nation and the road to international understanding continues to be obstructed with this overhanging debt burden. Now, it may be as some have suggested that we just let them stand as a monument to human folly or that we let them continue so that European nations can no longer borrow money from us under the Johnson Act. That suggestion should carry a grand laugh. The idea of paying $11,000,000,000 for the privilege of keeping other nations from borrowing our money.

Political expediency seems to dictate that the proper course to follow is to shout like Ishmael in the wilderness that these infernal debtors should be made to pay.

When the question is posed as to how they should pay and what they should use for money, the whole question falls like a hot potato. In working out some method of payment, the Congress and the administration has probably been extremely remiss in its duty, and that is precisely where our deliberations should begin.

Ordinarily, international debts and balances are paid in gold. But they have an insufficient amount of gold with which to pay. Our country owns more than half of all the gold in the world today, so for the moment we can dismiss gold as the medium of payment. They could pay us in goods. I am informed that Finland paid her debt through shipments of pulp to this country, thereby establishing a credit out of which she could pay. But find the person who will agree to accept shipments of manufactured goods in payment of war debts, when we have millions of idle folks for whom provision must be made out of the State and Federal Treasuries. Find the person who is willing to accept farm commodities in payment of war debts when we are spending enormous sums out of the Federal Treasury for removal of surplus farm commodities, for soil-conservation benefits, and for other purposes to aid the farmer in his struggle against low prices. We will not accept such goods, and the nations who are indebted to us have no gold with which to pay; so what?

One of the most promising suggestions I have seen is to collect our war debts in the form of culture, or invisible imports. This suggestion bears proper examination in the light of tourist expenditures and immigrant remittances. In 1936 thousands of our citizens toured in foreign lands and spent $495,000,000. As against that, foreign tourists and travelers in our country spent but $122,000,000, so that the excess of our tourist expenditures was about three hundred and seventy-three millions. Our people sent one hundred and forty-three millions to foreign countries for one purpose or another, while people in other countries sent but five millions to this country. The excess is about one hundred and thirty-eight millions. Parenthetically, it should be remarked that it appears unlawful under the Johnson Act to buy foreign bonds, but it seems perfectly all right to send the money over there for all other purposes. But quite aside from that, the fact remains that the excess of tourist expenditures by people in this country and the excess of remittances to foreign countries is more than $511,000,000 for 1936. If the increase in tourist travel indicated by the first few months of 1937 continues, it is reasonable to suppose that the excess of such funds which will go abroad in 1937 and succeeding years will greatly increase. So the question arises: Why not devise a plan under which these expenditures and remittances can be applied to payment of the debt? If but half of such expenditures and remittances were allocated to that purpose, it would in the immediate years to come make available a half billion dollars for that purpose.

If the debtor nations would agree to such a proposal, the procedure under which it could be effected should not prove difficult. A war-debt liquidation commission with corporate powers could be set up to administer the plan. Travel certificates might be issued and every tourist compelled to estimate in advance his expenditures in the debtor countries and then made to purchase such certificates for half of the estimated expenditure. These travel certificates could be tendered in payment of steamship passage and for all other purposes. The funds derived from the sale of these certificates would go to a retirement fund and be applied to the public debt, thereby redounding directly to the interest of the people of our country. The debtor nations must perforce agree to redeem these travel and expenditure certificates in cash or long-term bonds. If in the latter form, the plan would have the virtue of transferring these bothersome debts from defaulted external obligations held by the United States into internal long-term obligations held by the people in the debtor nations. A similar proposal might be worked out in connection with the remittances now made by people in this country to people in debtor countries.

The present war debts on a funded basis of 62 years, with interest added is, roughly, $22,000,000,000. It has been estimated that if immigrant remittances and tourist expenditures could be used to retire these debts with all countries the average length of time would be about 62½ years. In the case of those nations whose indebtedness is small it would require on the basis of this estimate from 5 to 46 years. In the case of Belgium and England it would require a great deal longer, but the average time required is estimated at 62½, or about the base period on which these debts were funded under the Harding administration.

In the average it can therefore be said that this proposal contains the nucleus of a plan whereby these annoying war debts could be placed into process of collection on a satisfactory basis that would liquidate them within a period that would be close to the original time established by the Debt Funding Commission, and would do so without calling for larger imports of foreign-made goods or for payment in nonexistent gold. It would call for payment in the form of invisible exports.

I am not insensible to the criticism that might be offered against this proposal. Some people will rebel against the thought of encouraging European travel in order to secure collection of these debts. The answer to that is that people will travel in Europe anyway. The visa division in the State Department is the best evidence of that uncontrovertible fact. Some will say that such a scheme will disturb the balance of trade. That poor balance of trade has been hurt so often that it is becoming accustomed to it. But by way of modifying the effect of the showing that would be made in the balance of trade it might be feasible to allocate only one-half of the immigrant remittances and tourist expenditures for this purpose.

At all events, this seeks to set forth a concrete proposal for the solution of this problem, and I sincerely trust that the membership of this body may give some time and attention to alternative proposals that could be employed.

This problem involves the interest of every taxpayer in this land. He has a right to expect, in view of an astronomical public debt, that the Congress and the President undertake to collect every possible dollar owing to this country to reduce that debt. In proportion as it is reduced it is not only money in the taxpayers' pocket but makes a definite contribution to fiscal stability in our country.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks, because I shall want to elaborate somewhat upon this.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This deals with a problem international in scope, that demands solution before we can get down to some kind of economic relationship with foreign countries, whereby this country and other countries can proceed normally.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I again ask unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I think I have compromised with the gentleman from Texas, as I said a moment ago.

Mr. DIES. I think I can make it in 15 minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. We want to finish with this bill today, and while I will not object to the gentleman's request, I hope there will not be others along the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas modifies his request and asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, those of us who have supported the ideals and objectives of the New Deal have not hesitated to denounce the lawlessness that characterized many of the business activities of Wall Street. In our own districts, in other districts, and on the floors of Congress we severely condemned the abuses that had grown up in the conduct of certain industrial and financial organizations. We championed the cause of labor and demanded adequate protection from such evils as sweatshop conditions, child labor, and inadequate wages. In doing so we were accused of catering to the side that had the most votes, and the sincerity of our motives was questioned by the beneficiaries of these abuses. No Congress has ever manifested a more active interest in the cause of labor than the New Deal Congresses. Legislation designed to curb the lawlessness in the business and industrial world, and to give labor equal and exact justice under the law, has received the hearty support of the great majority of us. While all of the abuses have not been corrected, nor has all of the lawlessness been curbed, no man can gainsay the statement that we have been the true friends of labor and that much has been accomplished in their behalf.

We are now faced with lawlessness from another source and in another form, but lawlessness just as reprehensible and indefensible as that which disgraced the world of high finance and industry. [Applause.] I refer to the wave of sit-down strikes which is sweeping the Nation and which constitutes, in my judgment, an open challenge to law and order and a bold threat to that stability without which no nation can long survive. To remain discreetly silent in the presence of such a menace, or to condone by inaction this threat to the very foundations upon which our Government is erected, cannot be justified from any point of view. I therefore rise, Mr. Chairman, to denounce this flagrant and indefensible violence which either must be stopped or else the security of personal and property rights will cease to exist.

I cannot believe that the majority of laboring people of this Nation approve of this resort to lawlessness in an attempt to secure objectives which in themselves may be perfectly right. No man has more at stake in the fight to preserve law and order than the one who earns his living by the sweat of his brow or the skill of his fingers. The rich and powerful have always been able to protect themselves under any form of government. The poor and weak have never found protection save under a system of law and order. To my way of thinking, the sit-down strikes are doing infinitely more harm to the cause of labor than to the cause of industry. [Applause.] Labor has never won a fight except with the aid of public sentiment and it is my firm opinion that public sentiment is beginning to revolt against this new species of lawlessness and mob spirit. If the revolt of public opinion were only directed against those who participate in this form of strike, the harm would be great enough. But, unfortunately, when reaction sets in all those who come under the classification of labor will suffer the consequences and the cause of honest and deserving labor will be set back another decade. Through long and painful years labor will have to struggle to regain the confidence of the public which it will lose if sit-down strikes continue.

I have been one of those who have contended for many years that we have gone to extremes to protect property rights at the expense of human rights, but because we were led to one extreme by the lords of high finance does not justify us in being swept to the other extreme by the leaders of certain labor organizations. The protection of human rights does not justify the destruction of property rights, because without property rights there can be no rights of any kind. The man or men who own an industry have the same right to the enjoyment of their property as labor has to the enjoyment of its wages. In a well-balanced economy both capital and labor are essential. Neither has the right to deprive the other of the earnings to which he is justly entitled. If the captains of industry seized labor halls, locked the doors, and denied to the members the right to meet and to use their own premises the outcry from all of us would reverberate from coast to coast. But such conduct would be no more reprehensible than the action of certain labor organizations in seizing a plant and refusing to leave it or to permit the owners of the plant to enter. There can be no human or personal rights without property rights, for, as Shakespeare said, "You take my life when you do take the means whereby I live." The chief incentive to work, industry, and creative genius is the security of property rights.

Men do not work solely because of the pleasure of work, but that they may enjoy the fruits of that work, and when we destroy the incentive to work, then all progress and all civilization will perish from the earth. Russia found this to be true early in her experience, when she was compelled to abandon the precepts and teachings of Karl Marx and to restore differentials in wages and property rights.

The man who with impunity may enter my plant or industry, if I had one, and hold it against my will, may do the same with my home or my farm. The principle is identical.

I am sure that the great majority of those who have participated in this form of lawlessness have been unthinking and have yielded to the impulse and emotionalism of the moment. Certainly they should know that the dictatorships of Mussolini and Hitler were preceded by a series of such sit-down strikes. [Applause.] The history of the world has proved that mankind will choose dictatorship in preference to lawlessness. If he cannot secure the enjoyment of his property rights or the fruits of his labor and earnings under a democracy, he will attempt to do so under dictatorship. So that those who are perpetrating this outrage in the name of labor are lending aid and comfort to the enemies of democracy, though they may not realize the consequences of their folly.

We stand alone, Mr. Chairman, as the surviving democracy on the face of the earth. All about us democracies have crumbled through the greed of a few and the excesses of the many. The laboring man who once participated in sit-down strikes in Italy and Germany cannot even so much as whisper a protest today without endangering his life.

While there have been many abuses in this country, and while we have too many people who have been the victims of economic injustice, let it not be forgotten that the laboring man in America today is infinitely better off than the laboring man in any other country on the face of the earth. The poorest among us are infinitely better off than the peasants of Europe. And the average laboring man in this country today enjoys more comforts, more privileges, and more luxuries than the so-called well-to-do classes in Europe.

Not one of us believes that we can abolish poverty in this country, but we are sincerely trying to improve the lot of those unfortunate human beings who are classified as the underprivileged. Not one of us believes that we can guarantee to every man a living. No government has ever been able to do this, and none will ever be able to do it, for, after all, more depends upon the individual, his industry, thrift, and initiative than it does upon any government that ever existed. Nevertheless we are trying sincerely to open the doors of equal opportunity to every man, woman, or child who is sincerely knocking for admittance. Those who believe that great reforms can be accomplished over night are ignoring the lessons of history and preparing for themselves and for their children bitter disappointment. But we all believe that by intelligent, unselfish, and patient cooperation we can bring about an economic condition which will give to energy, thrift, and ambition opportunities for useful employment. [Applause.]

Those who have been so loud in the past in denouncing the abuses and lawlessness of Wall Street are for some reason strangely silent about this other species of lawlessness which is equally indefensible and dangerous. Certainly it cannot be charged against them that they are actuated by political motives; there must be some other reason for their discreet silence which they will make known at the proper time.

I am gratified that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has had the courage and patriotism to denounce sit-down strikes in no uncertain terms. [Applause.] In doing this he has proven himself a true friend of labor. I feel sure that other responsible labor leaders will soon follow his example and that those in positions of authority and responsibility in our Government will take a firm and courageous stand against this new form of industrial lawlessness.

Because some captains of industry and finance have employed lawless and indefensible methods to achieve their greedy objectives does not justify labor in doing the same thing. In fact, a consideration of the consequences which these captains of high finance and industry brought upon themselves and upon others should act as an object lesson to deter labor from committing the same outrages. For, by such lawlessness, capital lost the support and confidence of the public and, by the same methods, labor is likely to suffer the same consequences.

Mr. Chairman, it was under the auspicious union of liberty and order that we grew to be a great republic. The two go hand in hand—they are like Siamese twins who have a common vertebra. To sever order from liberty is to produce the instant death of both. What would the laboring man, who has seized the plant of his employer and refuses to permit him to enter, say if he went home at night and found someone in possession of his home or his automobile in violation of law? Would he not cry out for immediate redress at the hands of the court? The principle is the same in both instances, and if he expects protection in the enjoyment of his home and earnings, then he must be willing to accord the same rights to his employer.

I have never been an admirer of the Chinese custom which clings to the past with superstitious awe. I do not believe in blind and unreasoning worship of the past nor of a tenacious and inflexible adherence to precedents. On the other hand, I am certain that those who do not revere their fathers will not have much respect nor concern for their children. As for me, I still believe that our form of government, as conceived by our fathers, is the wisest on the face of the earth. And to overturn these ancient landmarks hastily and without due consideration would be to deprive ourselves and our children of the priceless blessings which we have enjoyed for more than a century. Of all the landmarks which stand out in bold relief against the background of the past there is none so important and so vital to our happiness and well-being as law and order. [Applause.] The same law that protects the humble cottage of the laboring man must likewise protect the greatest industrial plant in America. To destroy the protection accorded to the one is to destroy the security vouchsafed to the other.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. I would be the first man to insist upon the right of labor to strike, to picket, and to pursue any other lawful means to secure a redress of wrongs and to obtain its just dues, but there is a vast difference between the right of labor to strike and their right to seize possession of other peoples' property and to refuse to give up possession until their demands are met.

There is a world of difference between the refusal to work and the refusal to permit the owners of property to enter it and have access to their own files and offices. There is a marked distinction between the right of labor to picket and their right to surround the courthouses and seek to interfere with the orderly administration of justice. For the pure and impartial administration of justice is the greatest bulwark of freedom in America and is indispensable to the very existence of free government. So while I would be the first man to defend the right of labor to strike, I am just as vigorously opposed to the unlawful use of the property which belongs to others. Between the right to strike and the right to continue a so-called sit-down strike there is a chasm as wide as the ocean itself which can never be spanned by constitutional and democratic methods.

As one who has been the unfailing friend of labor in its honest aspirations to better its lot—as one who has consistently supported measures designed to eliminate with child-labor and sweatshop conditions and to give to labor the right of collective bargaining and to improve the standards of work and pay among the laboring people—as one who has consistently voted for all legislation to curb the lawlessness in the business and financial world and to restrain the greed and selfishness that prevailed—as one who championed the cause of organized labor at a time when there was only a handful of members in my district and when it was unpopular to take such a stand, I denounce this lawlessness as un-American and inimical to the best interests of our country. I yield to no man in my loyalty to the cause of honest and deserving labor, but I do know and I do declare that if sit-down strikes succeed America will fail. If there ever was a time when those in places of authority, whether under municipal, State, or Federal government, should speak out in clear and unmistakable language, it is now. Let those who are responsible for this form of lawlessness realize that they stand before the bar of public opinion with the condemnation and disapproval of every thinking American citizen and of every public official who has the true cause of labor at heart. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I assume that the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] a moment ago were directed toward some real objective; that they were not merely an arraignment or a chastisement of the Governor of Michigan from a citizen of Texas. They were directed, I assume, toward this body, undoubtedly with the idea this body might be in a position to do something about what the gentleman was talking. In other words, what shall this Congress do on the question of sit-down strikes, if anything?

Mr. Chairman, this Congress, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, has adopted a Labor Dispute Act in the form of the Wagner Labor Relations Act. It has adopted a Guffey coal bill; it has adopted the National Industrial Recovery Act. All three acts were designed toward the accomplishment of one thing, and that is the establishment of some tribunal before which these questions that are involved in these sit-down strikes could be tried.

Since the birth of our present industrial age the struggle between employer and employee has gone on constantly, the employer endeavoring to get wages as low as possible and the employee endeavoring to get them as high as possible. This has brought on repeated conflicts and we have conducted those conflicts along the ethical standards of an alley fight, in which brickbats flew in every direction, and the one that had the most power won out. In that fight the innocent bystander, as usual, was the one who suffered. That innocent bystander is the citizen of the United States, the purchaser or the laborer in some affiliated industry.

No real settlement has ever been achieved because there has been no settlement arrived at on the basis of justice.

We have in this country the Railway Labor Act, which has established a tribunal in which these questions may be solved for a fortunate portion of our people. Since the adoption of the Railway Labor Act there has been practically no labor troubles on the railroad and no tying up of transportation, which would inevitably have affected all adjacent industry. This has been to the mutual advantage of the railroad, the railway employees, and the public. The last evidence of this spirit of cooperation was the joining of the railroad and the railway brotherhoods in an agreement on our last piece of railway legislation.

Despite this example of common sense, our Supreme Court has set aside and destroyed every effort of this Government to establish a similar tribunal that would settle all labor questions on a basis of justice, and not of might, and make sit-down strikes unnecessary.

Mr. Chairman, let me read what that Court said in setting aside the Guffey Coal Act:

> Much stress is put upon the evils which come from the struggle between employers and employees over the matter of wages, working conditions, the right of collective bargaining, etc. In the resulting strikes curtailment and irregularity of production have effect on prices, and it is insisted that interstate commerce is greatly affected thereby. But * * * the conclusive answer is that the evils are all local evils over which the Federal Government has no legislative control. The relation of employer and employee is a local relation. At common law it is one of the domestic relations. The wages are paid for the doing of local work. Working conditions are obviously local conditions. The employees are not engaged in or about commerce but exclusively in producing a commodity. And the controversies and evils, which it is the object of the act to regulate and minimize, are local controversies and evils affecting local work undertaken to accomplish that local result (Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U. S. Reports 238).

If that is the case, then this Congress has no business talking about sit-down strikes, when it is clearly out of the business zone of the Congress. But everybody knows that this is not the case. The minority Judges in that decision knew it was not the case.

To speak of most strikes in modern days as being purely local questions, not affecting interstate commerce, is simply an attempt to call black white. An automobile strike in Detroit seriously affects one factory making steering wheels and another one making automobile starters in my city of Dayton, Ohio. A strike in the steel industry, if not quickly terminated, will shut down industry all over the country using steel as a raw material. The days of the local strike are past, except as applying to possibly a hotel or a peanut-roasting plant. To refer to such a decision, which is not much less than the voice of the eighteenth century speaking in the twentieth as a "horse and buggy" idea, is to compliment the decision. When our Supreme Court chooses to adopt such a definition of the constitutional phrase, "commerce among the States", in the face of all common sense and modern usage and against the wisdom of both the Congress and the Executive, it is purely making law.

"The wages of sin is death." Unfortunately, it is frequently death to the innocent. This Government is suffering from the sin of one branch of our tripartite Government which has taken over functions that do not belong to it.

While we are speaking of sit-down strikes, this Congress in July 1935 passed the Wagner Labor Relations Act. This act was openly and flagrantly violated by these same employers who are now whining about the violation of their property through sit-down strikes. This act finally reached the Supreme Court in October of 1936; and although the Chief Justice tells us that that Court is the embodiment of efficiency, 4 months elapsed before time could be allotted for the argument of this case. Since that argument over 6 weeks have passed and still no decision.

We are sitting over a loaded mine likely to be detonated at any moment, and yet we must wait 6 weeks for a decision in a case in which the questions involved have been argued back and forth in practically all of the New Deal litigation dealing with interstate commerce. While we are speaking of sit-down strikes, it would be well not to forget one branch of our Federal Government.

We are going to have a continuation of these conditions, regardless of the oratory of the Members of Congress coming from unaffected districts, until we obtain a judicial tribunal sufficiently free from the concepts of corporation lawyers to recognize that commerce among the States is not now what it was in the days of the canal boat, oxcart, and stagecoach. We are going to have fights and riots on the labor front until this country becomes sufficiently civilized to know that every dispute must have a peaceful agency for settlement.

We are going to have these conditions until our Government is reestablished back to the three branches, in which the lawmakers will make the laws, the courts will interpret them, and the President will execute them. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I regret very much that the gentleman has asked to speak out of order. We want to get through with this bill today and I think the Members of the House also wish to conclude the consideration of this bill today, which consists of 105 pages.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have not asked the indulgence of this House very many times, but I have a very important matter to discuss at this time. I believe every member of the committee is deeply interested in the matter and I hope the gentleman will not object at this time.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes an eloquent appeal. I want the membership to know that we are trying to get along and when requests are made to speak out of order, the bill is thereby being greatly delayed.

However, in view of the gentleman's appeal, I will not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

A PLEA TO SAVE THE C. C. C. CAMPS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have asked to speak at this time concerning a matter of vital importance to this Nation. More than a year ago I addressed the House on the same subject. At that time, an order had been issued by Mr. Robert Fechner, Director of the Emergency Conservation Corps activities in the United States, that if permitted to have been carried out would have closed approximately 700 C. C. C. camps in the United States, effective April 1, 1936.

At that time I explained that another order had been issued in December 1935 to abandon 1,000 C. C. C. camps January 1, 1936. I also explained then that a few Members of Congress especially interested in maintaining these camps called on Mr. Fechner prior to that time and, although he appeared sympathetic, gave us to understand that there was positively nothing that could be done about it. We were told that inasmuch as the order in question had been issued that the die was cast, and it was useless to attempt to do anything about it. But certain Members of this House, some of whom are on the floor at this time, organized and actually did something about it then. In discussing this matter on the floor of this House a year ago, I said:

> Some of us felt justified in carrying our protests to a still "higher authority." It is sufficient to say that finally the order was modified and only 300 of the 1,000 camps were actually abandoned January 1. So that this April order merely postponed the death sentence that was ordered for these camps January 1936.

It will be recalled that when we first began to protest against the closing of the remaining 700 camps 1 year ago, that we were again told that ours was destined to be a futile and fruitless effort. Members of this House, many of whom were sympathetic, said the move then to save the camps was an empty gesture. It will also be remembered that when the order was issued to close nearly 700 camps on April 1, last year, we did not stop our fight. As a last resort we called a meeting of all those Members of this House interested in maintaining the balance of the camps. A committee was appointed to again call at the White House and confer with a "higher authority." This we did and as Members will recall, the order was revoked by the President, only a few hours before some 700 C. C. C. camps would have otherwise folded up forever.

It was suggested at that time, however, that when any camp had actually finished its work that it would fold up and under that statement or agreement a number of camps have been abandoned within the past year, until today we have only 2,086 camps.

Now another order has been issued abandoning 84 camps April 1, 1937, and the balance of 630 are to be abandoned on or about July 1 next. So according to the figures furnished me there will be 2,002 C. C. C. camps in the United States after April 1. If all the 630 camps proposed to be abandoned soon had finished their work program then we would have no criticism to make, but the Democratic steering committee of the House, of which I have the honor of being chairman, called Director Robert Fechner before it a short while ago and he refused to say that all of the 84 camps to be abandoned next week had finished their tasks or work programs. On the other hand, we were given to understand by the E. C. W. director that the contrary is the case. I submit it is certainly unreasonable to assume that 630 C. C. C. camps will finish the work program in each vicinity in which they are situated by July 1, but they are scheduled to be abandoned unless Congress does something about it. This is in the making and according to present plans the camps will close as per schedule, even though they may be in the middle of a work program.

Of the 84 camps to be abandoned April 1, the Soil Conservation camps that are undoubtedly doing an outstanding job, and although only having 450 camps left in the entire United States, must bear the brunt of the cut by losing 25 camps. Surely no one would seriously contend that the Soil Conservation Service has finished its work program. The fact is it has only touched the surface, yet it must lose 112 additional camps by July 1, if they get the same pro-rata cut as they will receive on April 1, which I am advised will be the case.

On April 1, the Forest Service, with 975 camps, will also lose 42 C. C. C. camps, the Interior 17, and on July 1, the Forest Service and Interior Department are scheduled to lose 434 C. C. C. camps, so I am advised.

May I suggest that Members of Congress, in my judgment, can stop the closing of these C. C. C. camps this year if we will make the proper fight. We demonstrated that a year ago.

Within a few weeks a bill will be sent to Congress proposing permanent legislation for the C. C. C. camps. The Bureau of the Budget has made its estimate on the basis of 1,456 camps instead of 2,086 that we now have, or 2,002 that we are scheduled to have April 1, and proposes to cut the personnel from 350,000 now in the 2,086 camps, to 300,000 in 1,456 camps. When that bill reaches the Committee on Appropriations and later the floor of this House, Members will have the opportunity of expressing themselves in a practical but effective manner.

The House steering committee has gone on record favoring an increase in the personnel from 350,000 to 400,000 and keeping the number of camps at not less than 2,000. Our committee took this action not only because of the splendid outstanding work these camps are doing in conserving the soil, terracing to prevent further soil erosion, in the setting out of millions of trees, building trails and dams, filling up gullies, constructing and beautifying park areas and making America a more beautiful and bounteous land in which to live, but also—and this is by far more important—the building of morale that the C. C. C. camps are doing for the millions of the young men of America. [Applause.]

May I tell you a true story of an incident that occurred during the last national campaign?

As chairman of the speakers' bureau of the congressional campaign committee, I was in New York City for a while. Among the requests received for speakers was one to go out into a section of that great city called Yonkers and speak to a great crowd of Hungarians. It being difficult to find someone to speak the Hungarian language on short notice, the gentleman making the request finally suggested that I go out to Yonkers and talk to them.

For some 45 or 50 minutes I spoke to that fine group of citizens, the most of whom I found enthusiastically supporting President Roosevelt and the New Deal. When I finished, the chairman of the meeting, one of the city commissioners, said:

I will say to the visiting speaker that not over 5 or 10 percent of the people present understood a word you said.

It is needless to add that I felt rather squelched.

An old Hungarian woman was listening way back in the rear of the hall. She rose and said:

Mr. Commissioner, it is true that I have not understood everything that has been said here this evening, but I did understand some things. I do not know the difference between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party, but I understand one thing:

I had a boy who was about 16 years of age at the close of the Hoover administration. My son was unemployed and discouraged. He had looked for jobs that he could not find. Our home had been foreclosed, and we had nothing to eat in the house. My boy felt the Government was not interested in him or other young men of the Nation.

I tossed my head on the pillow that night—

She said—

I was worried about what might happen to my boy. Then I heard a marvelous voice over the radio, the voice of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I heard that voice say, "We are going to do something for the young people of America."

When Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated President and established the C. C. C. camps, someone told my boy he could get into a camp. He did get into a C. C. C. camp, where he stayed about 1 year. He had gained more than 20 pounds in weight.

Then she told how the boy had been taught to be a stonemason, had come home and secured a good job, and had decided that this Government he had said was so bad and unappreciative of the young people was the greatest government in all the world.

The mother said:

When you go back down to Washington, if you see the President of the United States, please tell him there is an old, ignorant Hungarian woman in the city of New York. She does not know anything about politics. She does not know the difference between the great parties. But she does know the difference between having a boy who thought the Government was down on him—a boy headed in the wrong direction and one who had been saved for himself and for his family.

Mr. Chairman, as this old Hungarian woman spoke I saw the tears trickling down her cheeks. She added—

Please tell the President also that every night when the old Hungarian woman prays she asks God to preserve the life and health of Franklin D. Roosevelt, that he may continue to save the young people of America.

I told her she had made the best speech I had heard during the entire campaign. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield, with pleasure, to my good friend the able gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to commend the gentleman for the very kindly interest he has always shown in the maintenance of the C. C. C. camps. While I have no such camps in my own district, I should be very pleased to see them retained, and if there is anything we can do individually or collectively to help the gentleman from Oklahoma, we are with him 100 percent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the distinguished gentleman for his kind and generous statement.

But getting back to the proposal to close 630 C. C. C. camps in the United States, there is some red tape, rules, and regulations that must be eliminated. In one of my speeches to this House a year ago I pointed out the unreasonable rules and regulations providing that before a young man is eligible for the C. C. C. camps that his parents must actually be on relief. There is no question but what there are thousands of border-line cases that have been unjustly denied the opportunity of entrance in the C. C. C. camps because of these unreasonable rules and regulations.

The Democratic steering committee of the House has also gone on record with reference to these rules, and again we have taken the matter to a "higher authority", and it is no secret that the White House is interested in these camps. The C. C. C. have been held up as the President's pet hobby of his entire administration, but the President has put the matter squarely up to Congress, that this House must find the money within the Budget to maintain the present personnel of 350,000. We have every reason to believe that the unreasonable rules and regulations that I have just mentioned will be modified, but that will not help the situation to any great extent if the personnel is cut 50,000 at one fell swoop and 50,000 young men, or a major part of that number, are thrown back upon the relief rolls where they were before they entered the C. C. C. camps. It is absurd to say that business will absorb even a majority of these 50,000 youngsters between now and July 1.

The fact is, Mr. Fechner advised the House steering committee that he had considerably more than 350,000 applicants for the C. C. C. camps on January 1, in spite of these unreasonable rules requiring a young man's family to be actually on relief before he becomes eligible for entrance. There is no question but what more than 400,000 worthy young men should be placed in the C. C. C. camps immediately, to give them the opportunity to which they are entitled. [Applause.]

It was also brought out in Mr. Fechner's testimony that we have in the United States approximately 350 vacant C. C. C. camps at this time. The committee was advised that these camp sites cost from $18,000 to $25,000 each. We also learned that some thirty-odd of these camp sites, constructed at this enormous expense by the Government, have never yet been occupied. If and when 630 additional camps are abandoned, we will then have the sorry spectacle of approximately 980 camp sites where the Government has a tremendous investment standing idle on the theory that the Government has finished its job; that no more boys can be found for the camps and that no further need can be had for the C. C. C. camps in these 980 communities and sections of the United States.

I have given you these facts from the records, facts that Members of the House must face when you return to your respective districts. You are going to be asked how it is that Congress can afford to appropriate $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 for one battleship without the batting of an eye, and yet cannot provide funds to keep homeless and helpless C. C. C. boys at work where they are trying to save themselves and their families, and make America a better place in which to live. May I suggest that by eliminating one $50,000,000 battleship Congress can save the whole C. C. C. situation at this time. That, in my judgment, would be practicing real, practical, and sensible economy. [Applause.]

I have two suggestions to make. The first is, as I indicated a while ago, that when the bill comes before the committee to make appropriation for the Civilian Conservation Corps next year, on a decidedly reduced basis, that this House find the money and add sufficient to the bill to say to Mr. Fechner, to the White House, and to the country that not a single camp in the United States shall be closed. [Applause.] And furthermore, that every one of the 350 camps now standing idle shall be filled with the American youth who are clamoring for an opportunity to earn an honest livelihood. If Congress will do this, the situation will be saved. If it does not furnish the funds, these 630 C. C. C. camps will be closed on or before July 1 next.

I have one other suggestion. A year ago, as I have heretofore stated, those of us especially interested issued an informal call for a conference of all Members desiring to maintain the C. C. C. camps; and as I related a few moments ago, as a result of that conference the C. C. C. camps were saved. I propose to again ask those who are interested in preserving these camps to join me in making another call to Members of the House to save them. That the meeting ought to be held in the very near future and we should make our plans to fight to the last ditch, the proposal to close 630 camps in the United States within the next few weeks.

My friends, this is one of the most important problems facing this Congress and we cannot afford to close down and abandon 630 additional C. C. C. camps at this time in the name of economy. That would be false economy and would be proving false to the young men of the Nation. [Applause.]

I have been furnished authentic and tabulated information, much of which I have already given you, which I think will be of tremendous interest to all Members of the House. I shall insert it at this point as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] delivered quite an oration. The gentleman was applauded by this body. During the last few days I have heard many remarks directed against the sit-down strikers.

I take the liberty at this time to rise in defense of the strikers, and I hope I shall be given a few minutes. I asked the Chairman yesterday about it. I believe the millions of strikers throughout the country are entitled to be heard in this body, and I sincerely hope that I shall be given a few minutes to speak in their behalf. I belong to a union that is affiliated with the C. I. O. and I repeat, I hope that you will be kind to the rank and file of the workingmen and give me an opportunity to voice their cause. I want to answer the attacks on sit-down strikers and on the Committee for Industrial Organization made by Members of this House and the Senate during the last few days.

SIT-DOWN STRIKES ARE LEGAL

As a rank and file workingman I want to answer the attacks on sit-down strikes and on the Committee for Industrial Organization made by Members of this House and of the Senate during the last few days.

I should like to say at the outset that I am proud to be a member of the International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, affiliated to the Committee for Industrial Organization, which is the most progressive national force in America today.

These men who so confidently tell us what the law is base their argument on the protection of property rights. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to see the rights of private property violated. But a great industrial enterprise cannot be compared to an overcoat, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] who spoke Friday would have us believe. The physical property of an industry represents an investment on the part of the stockholders—an investment of capital in dollars. But the workers have also made an investment in industry—an investment not so easily measured in dollars but without which there could be no industry.

THE WORKERS' INVESTMENT IN INDUSTRY

The investment of the workers is their daily work, by which is produced all the good things of life. Their entire lives have been spent training their hands and their senses to the proper performance of their work, to the specialized skills which are required of them. They have built their homes conveniently near their places of work. They have taken on the obligations of raising families. Their entire beings have been devoted to the industry so that it might yield a profit to the owner and a living to themselves. This is their investment, and they are entitled to protect it. In protecting it, in insisting on a decent living, they are protecting their jobs, their livelihood, and the food, clothing, and shelter for their families.

Thus a partnership relation is created. There is ample authority to prove this. Prof. Leon Green, dean of the Northwestern Law School, in his recent article entitled "The Case for the Sit-down Strike", said:

> Both participating groups have contributed heavily to the joint enterprise of industry * * * both groups are joint adventurers, as it were, in industrial enterprise. Both have, and necessarily must have, a voice in the matters of common concern. Both must have protection adequate to their interests.

Dean Green summarizes his argument in the following language:

> Occupation in good faith and peacefully of a plant devoted to industry by employees awaiting the adjustment of differences growing out of the industrial relation is but an incident of the industrial relation and in no sense unlawful.

I am glad that the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] recognized that human rights as well as property rights must be taken into consideration in determining the rights and the wrongs of the sit-down strike. I was very much interested in his remarks on Friday when he recited the lawlessness of the large corporations and the unbelievable inequalities of present society. The Senator said, "We cannot successfully appeal for the majesty of law, only to one sector of the economic circle." I say, Mr. Chairman, that human rights must take precedence over property rights.

WORKERS ARE PART OF THE PLANTS

But let us examine for a moment this so-called invasion of property rights. The denouncers of sit-down strikes say that the strikers are trespassers. The insolence of this. These workers have spent their lives working in the plants; they have been called into the plants 5 days out of every week by the companies' whistle; they are part and parcel of the plants, for without them no wheel could turn, no conveyor belt could move, no automobile or other product could be produced; and now, because they remain peacefully at their places of work until their grievances should be ironed out through the process of collective bargaining, which is their right, according to the law of the land, they are called trespassers.

This is not primarily a legal problem. The workers realize very clearly that nothing will establish the legality of the sit-down strike more effectively and more permanently than the victory of the strikers. They know in their hearts that there is nothing lawless about carrying on a struggle for a better living for themselves and their families in the most effective possible way; and they are aware that, because of the lawlessness of the great corporations, this is their only way until the employers agree to recognize their union and their rights to collective bargaining.

But, Mr. Chairman, I say the sit-down strike is lawful. These workers by fighting to protect their jobs and their means of subsistence are breaking no law. Do they remain in the plants in order to take them over and run them for themselves? They do not. Are they remaining in order to destroy the property? They are not. They insist only that the plants be not put into operation until their grievances are adjusted. They would leave the plants, as they have often stated, if the company would not operate them until the settlement. And meanwhile they are committing no damage, but rather they are guarding the property and the machinery with the greatest of care. This machinery will soon be running again; it will be operated by workers with the happy faces of victory; it will provide them a better and fuller living than before.

TEMPORARY INTERFERENCE JUSTIFIED

Mr. Chairman, I do not deny that the sit-down strike results in an interference with the interests of the corporations. But the issue is not whether or not there is an interference with property interests. The issue is whether this interference is justified. The law says that interferences with the interests of others are not unlawful if they are justified. Is not a strike an interference with the interests of the employer? Is not picketing? Is not the boycott? But these interferences have long been recognized as legal. As Mme. Perkins said recently:

> There was a time when picketing was considered illegal, and before that strikes of any kind were illegal.

Justice Brandeis said that:

> For cause the right (to carry on a business for profit) may be interfered with and even be destroyed.

I say to you that the fight for a decent living is just cause. The fight for higher wages and shorter hours is just cause. The fight for union recognition is just cause. These causes justify the temporary interference with the interests of capital.

Mr. Chairman, I shall introduce ample legal authority to support my remarks that the sit-down strike is lawful.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who spoke last Friday, found "abhorrent" the sit-down strikes which are occurring throughout the country. They proclaimed them illegal and lawless. The Governors of Connecticut and New Jersey announced that there would be no sit-downs in their States while they were Governors; that the wish was father to the thought was proven in the newspapers of the last 2 weeks during which the Connecticut chain makers and the New Jersey girl cigar makers won victories through sit-down strikes.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] last Friday referred to the sit-down strikes in his State as "armed rebellion." He contended that they were in "utter disregard of right and justice, to say nothing of law." The gentleman defended the antilabor, antiunion policies of the great automobile corporations, even the sending of stool pigeons into the ranks of the workers to spy on their unions and disrupt their organizations. The gentleman told us—

> Some of these questions cannot be settled until blood has been shed.

And then he asked us—

> Just whose blood shall be shed?

CHRYSLER WORKERS' LETTER

Mr. Chairman, I say that the gentleman from Michigan has his answer straight from the workers of Michigan. I desire to call the attention of the Members of this House to a letter written to Governor Murphy by the striking Chrysler workers. This letter has an eloquence which should appeal to every American who holds dear the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This letter should thrill everyone who considers that the task of every American is to place first and foremost the welfare of the greatest number of the American people. This letter speaks the simple and direct words which come from the hearts of workers—workers who are at this very moment actively engaged in the struggle for a fuller and a better life. In such a struggle the sit-downers are the real Americans.

The Chrysler workers wrote the Governor:

> We want you to know—

> that what we have to say is supported by more than 50,000 other Chrysler workers, more than 100,000 automobile workers in Detroit, 200,000 in Michigan, and 300,000 in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, because I am a worker I recognize that these words from the hearts of the Chrysler strikers state their case far more ringingly than I could state it for them. I shall quote from their letter:

> Our employers have refused to recognize the principles of collective bargaining—

These brave strikers wrote—

> so we have resorted to the only weapon we have to make them abide by the law. * * *
>
> We have suffered for years in these shops of the Chrysler Corporation. We haven't been paid wages enough to support our families in decency and health.
> We have seen each year an increase in the speed of the line. And still the foremen and gang leaders stand over us and demand more and more production.
> Last summer hundreds of us fell like flies on the job because the heat and speed of work were more than we could stand. And it wasn't until we threatened to strike that the management slowed down the line.
> Last fall thousands of us were discharged in violation of our seniority standing. We had to threaten to strike then to get rehired.
> While we were exercising our right to organize, we were opposed by one of the most vicious and unspeakable spy systems ever employed in industry. The Chrysler Corporation retained an agency that hired criminals and ex-convicts to do their filthy work. That is a matter of public record. We were subject to intimidation by foremen and petty bosses. Our members were fired for no other reason than that they had joined the union. These things they did to us were lawless.
> Then when we had built our union in spite of these obstacles the Chrysler Corporation refused to recognize us. And this refusal, Governor, was a lawless act.
> We have many other complaints. We don't feel any better about this whole situation when we know that Walter Chrysler, using the money we earned for him and entirely ignoring our complaints, is unconcernedly vacationing in Florida, that only a few days ago he paid $1,000 (more than many of us earn in a year) for a case of champagne.
> We want to remind you of one other thing, Governor. The same sort of intimidation that Chrysler used against us was used against you and President Roosevelt. Last fall, we received notices in our pay envelopes that very bad things were going to happen to us if we voted for you and Mr. Roosevelt. You know that the very people who fought so hard against your election are those who employ and exploit us. We defied their threats last November and voted for you anyway. We elected you.
> We don't intend to leave these plants without a satisfactory settlement. You can do one of two things. You can use your influence to see that our grievances are adjusted. Or you can use the State's troops to try to force us out.

The first way will lead to industrial peace and the elimination of the causes for strikes. The second way will lead to bloodshed and violence and more strikes. We are resolved to protect our rights to our jobs with our lives * * *.

This letter, Mr. Chairman, speaks for more than the automobile workers who wrote it. It speaks for millions of workers throughout the land. They reject the statements of Governors Cross and Hoffman. To them the sit-down strike is legal, for it is their most effective and powerful weapon to secure the standard of living they deserve.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking on the bill. I regret to do this very much.

Mr. BERNARD. I approached the gentleman yesterday——

Mr. McMILLAN. A number of Members feel I am, perhaps, unduly harsh with them this morning, and I may say that my friend did come over yesterday and ask for time, and I offered to give him time yesterday afternoon if the gentleman would wait for it. We are reading the bill for amendment today, and I must insist that we confine our remarks to the bill, and I therefore object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTRIBUTIONS, QUOTAS, ETC.

For payment of the annual contributions, quotas, and expenses, including loss by exchange in discharge of the obligations of the United States in connection with international commissions, congresses, bureaus, and other objects, in not to exceed the respective amounts, as follows: Cape Spartel and Tangier Light, Coast of Morocco, $588; International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $4,342.50; International Bureau for Publication of Customs Tariffs, $1,318.77; Pan American Union, $192,942.80, including not to exceed $20,000 for printing and binding; International Bureau of Permanent Court of Arbitration, $1,722.57; Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, $20,000, including not to exceed $10,000 for the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic reporting services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, maps, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, and other necessary expenses, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the President and executive secretary of the American group; International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, $48,831, including not to exceed $11,775 for the salary of the American member of the permanent committee (at not more than $7,500 per annum), compensation of subordinate employees without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, expenses for the maintenance of the office at Rome, including purchase of necessary books, maps, documents, and newspapers and periodicals (foreign and domestic), printing and binding, allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), for the use of the American member of the permanent committee, and traveling and other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; Pan American Sanitary Bureau, $30,986.12; International Office of Public Health, $3,015.63; Bureau of International Telecommunication Union, Radio Section, $5,790; Government of Panama, $250,000; International Hydrographic Bureau, $4,632; Inter-American Trade-Mark Bureau, $14,330.20; International Bureau for Protection of Industrial Property, $1,471.63; Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, $50,000: Provided, That hereafter, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the act of May 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 491), the report of the operation and work of the laboratory, including the statement of the receipts and expenditures, shall be made to Congress during the first week of each regular session thereof, such report to cover a fiscal-year period ending on June 30 of the calendar year immediately preceding the convening of each such session; American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, $2,000; International Statistical Bureau at The Hague, $2,000; International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale, $50; International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, $6,696, including not to exceed $6,500 for the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and of the commissions established by that Committee, including traveling expenses, personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), rent, purchase of necessary books and documents, printing and binding, official cards, entertainment, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; Convention Relating to Liquor Traffic in Africa, $55; International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, $4,328.75, including not to exceed $800 for the necessary expenses of the Commissioner to represent the United States on the Commission at its annual meetings, personal services without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, printing and binding, traveling expenses, and such other expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary; Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, $588; International Labor Organization, $173,939.74, including not to exceed $25,000 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the meetings of the general conference and of the governing body of the International Labor Office and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services, without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), rent, traveling expenses, purchase of books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and charts, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; implementing the Narcotics Convention of 1931, $9,109.18; International Council of Scientific Unions and Associated Unions, as follows: International Council of Scientific Unions, $19.30; International Astronomical Union, $617.60; International Union of Chemistry, $675; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $2,316; International Scientific Radio Union, $154.40; International Union of Physics, $62.72; International Geographical Union, $125.44; and International Union of Biological Sciences, $154.40; in all, $4,124.86; and Pan American Institute of Geography and History, $10,000; in all, $842,862.75, together with such additional sums, due to increase in rates of exchange as the Secretary of State may determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary to pay in foreign currencies the quotas and contributions required by the several treaties, conventions, or laws establishing the amount of the obligation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, offering a pro-forma amendment in order to elicit some information from the Chairman.

The paragraph which has just been read includes the payment to the Government of Panama of the sum of $250,000. At the time we concluded the building of the Canal, or while we were building it, the Government of the United States obligated itself to pay annually to the Republic of Panama the sum of $250,000. As I recall, something like 2 or 3 years ago, when we had devalued the American dollar, and offered the Government of Panama as annual payment $250,000 in devalued money, the Republic of Panama refused to accept it, calling attention to the fact that the treaty provided we should pay them in gold. May I ask the chairman of the committee what kind of money is to be paid to Panama under this item?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the inquiry of the gentleman from New York is a very proper one. Under the terms of the treaty to which the gentleman has referred, under date of November 18, 1903, provision was made that the United States pay to the Government of Panama $10,000,000 in gold coin of the United States on the exchange of ratification of the convention, and also an annual payment during the life of the convention in the sum of $250,000 in like gold coin, beginning 9 years after the date aforesaid. My information, Mr. Chairman, is that since the date to which the gentleman has referred, to wit, some 2 or 3 years ago, when the devaluation of the dollar was initiated, a check for $250,000 has been sent to the Government of Panama under the terms of the convention as carried in this bill, but in every instance, so far as I am aware, the check has been returned, and hence the payment has not been made.

My inference is, Mr. Chairman, that sooner or later, with this condition prevailing, there will be some further convention or agreement entered into or undertaken to be entered into between the two countries providing for a settlement of the matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The statement of the gentleman is correct, I am certain. Panama has refused to accept these payments and points to the treaty which obligates the United States to pay her 250,000 gold dollars, and thus far there has been a refusal on her part to take the money in the form of a check in American devalued dollars. I have understood that the State Department has been endeavoring to persuade the little Government of Panama to take the money, but they will not do it.

I am now wondering if the language at the end of this long paragraph, commencing at the bottom of page 19, enables the Secretary of State to satisfy Panama, for in line 22 of that page it is stated:

Together with such additional sums, due to increase in rates of exchange as the Secretary of State may determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary to pay in foreign currencies the quotas and contributions required by the several treaties, conventions, or laws establishing the amount of the obligation.

Does the chairman believe that this is an indirect method of appropriating an additional sum or authorizing the expenditure of an additional sum to make good our treaty obligations with the Republic of Panama?

Mr. McMILLAN. With regard to the language the gentleman refers to, while I do not pretend to be an expert on the construction of English——

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. There is no break-down of any estimate given this committee in the Budget estimates submitted here for this purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the State Department make any statement before the committee about their difficulties?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am reading from the hearings, page 195, State Department, and I have read to the gentleman virtually everything contained in those hearings on this particular item.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the third year this situation has persisted. It seems to me it is about time for the State Department to inform the committee and the House whether this appropriation here amounts to anything at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rio Grande diversion dam: For completion of the construction of a diversion dam in the Rio Grande wholly in the United States, with appurtenant connections to existing irrigation systems, as authorized by the acts approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 961), and June 4, 1936 (49 Stat. 1463), $400,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 23, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 3 and insert in lieu thereof a new paragraph, as follows:

"Rio Grande canalization project: For beginning construction of the Rio Grande canalization project, as authorized by acts approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 961), and June 4, 1936 (49 Stat. 1463), $900,000, of which not to exceed $400,000 may be expended for completion of the construction of a diversion dam in the Rio Grande wholly in the United States, with appurtenant connections to existing irrigation systems."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of permitting the State Department to carry out an authorization of this Congress. In the last session of Congress we authorized two projects in Texas and New Mexico. The reasons were that we had an agreement with Old Mexico that could not be lived up to without certain work being done in the way of a diversion dam and canalization. Congress passed these measures, and we appropriated certain sums to start the work. One of the projects is nearing completion. Some of this money is required to finish it, and additional money is required to protect the work when it is completed. I am sure, if the committee considering this measure had had the information from the State Department they should have had, the item would have been included in the bill, and this amendment would not have been necessary. I sincerely trust that the committee will accept this amendment.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment and to confirm all the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] has said. The canalization part affected by this amendment is entirely in the State of New Mexico, but living as I do at El Paso, on the border, and being familiar with the entire rectification program, and also the building of the diversion dam, which is in my State, I express the hope that this amendment will be adopted, because it is a part of the general program. All of this work is being done pursuant to the treaty between the United States and Mexico. I feel a great interest in the completion of this work. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] and I have worked in complete harmony on the entire Rio Grande program. Mr. L. M. Lawson, International Boundary Commissioner, has approved this amendment. Mr. Lawson is one of the outstanding engineers of the country. I already knew that he had the complete confidence of the State Department, and I am now glad to find that this committee also praises the fine job he is doing.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting project. Those of you who have followed for a period of years the boundary problem between the United States and Mexico, certainly in its relation to the Rio Grande, are familiar with the difficulties that have so often and continuously arisen in that area. A few years ago this program was commenced with a view of rectifying, improving, and perfecting this constant problem which had existed for so many years. Last year the Congress passed a law, and appropriations were made of $1,000,000 for a diversion dam at the point where this canalization project is now desired. It was found, however, before the appropriation was made that a total of $1,400,000 would be necessary to construct this diversion dam. It was therefore necessary to go back to the legislative committee to secure additional authority for the $400,000. That was done, but in addition to that, $1,100,000, or rather a total authorization for $2,600,000, was made for this canalization work. It now develops that the Budget has recommended $1,100,000 for this canalization project, which is sought here in the amendment of the gentleman from New Mexico. The committee went into the matter, but since the hearings, Mr. Chairman, we have had two or three officials from the State Department confer with us about it. We have had Mr. Lawson, the engineer in charge, to advise us as to the necessity for this item, and he feels that $500,000 proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico would be the amount that can be feasibly and economically used during the next fiscal year; and, following the views expressed by the State Department, together with those of Mr. Lawson, the engineer in charge, the committee is disposed to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Do I understand that the committee now offers an expenditure of a further half million dollars for this project?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. But the authorization totals $2,600,000 for canalization. The Budget estimated $1,100,000 of that for this next fiscal year, but in view of the fact that the committee did not have the information it now has, it eliminated this item from the bill at the time the bill was prepared. I may read for the information of the House a telegram from Mr. Lawson, chief engineer of the Boundary Commission, under date of March 18, addressed to the Secretary of State:

EL PASO, TEX., March 18, 1937.

HON. SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington:

Replying Department's inquiry 18th, 11:50 a. m.: Failure of appropriation for dam and canalization, fiscal year 1938, would leave partially built dam now under construction under existing contract in precarious incompleted condition to insure control and delivery present limited water supply to American lands at earliest possible date. Work on American dam also necessitates immediate upstream portion canalization construction to coordinate requisite protection land and valuable improvements with present stage progress of actual dam construction. Both above requirements could be substantially satisfied by reduced estimate set forth my night letter March 18, which should be provided so work can continue after July 1.

L. W. LAWSON.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Then the committee is approving the amendment for the expenditure of a further sum of $500,000?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is right.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Was there a Budget estimate for this item?

Mr. McMILLAN. One million one hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. TABER. This is raising the amount that is to be appropriated from $2,525,000 to $3,000,000 for this irrigation project?

Mr. McMILLAN. Let me say that the original estimate of the Budget was for $1,500,000; $400,000 of that was to cover the completion of a diversion dam, $1,000,000 of which was appropriated and carried in the deficiency bill last year. One million one hundred thousand dollars was the balance that was estimated by the Bureau of the Budget for this canalization project. At the time of the hearings the committee did not have, as the gentleman from Georgia has just said, detailed information as to the desirability or necessity for that work, but later on, a few days ago, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] and myself had this conference with the officers of the State Department, and have contacted Mr. Lawson, engineer in charge of the work. It is in view of that conference, together with the recommendation of Mr. Lawson, chief engineer in charge of the International Boundary Commission, which I have just read, that I have accepted the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. In other words, it is $600,000 less than the amount estimated for by the Budget.

Mr. TABER. But still there is an increase over the amount the committee reported of $500,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Oh, that is true, but it is in view of the facts which have since been developed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there has come a growing tendency to spend money on the development of reclamation projects in this country. At the same time we are trying to prevent farmers, who own their own farms and have paid for them, from raising crops that can naturally be raised upon those farms. I think it is time we stopped that tendency and that we stop any tendency to increase this kind of an appropriation. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I want to correct the impression that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has given. This has nothing to do with reclamation. This item will assist the United States Government to carry out a treaty obligation with Mexico. Under the treaty obligation we must turn over to Mexico a certain number of acre-feet of water per year from the Rio Grande River. To do that, a diversion dam was built. But we find that water users are taking out of the Rio Grande River for irrigation purposes an amount of water that the Federal Government is not able to estimate. Therefore they are under a handicap in determining how much water they must turn over to Mexico under the treaty obligation. Therefore by making a canal out of this part of the Rio Grande River they can absolutely control the flow of water, turn over the amount of water necessary under the treaty, and at the same time prevent those who live nearby from taking more water out of the Rio Grande than they are entitled to. It is simply to assist our Government to carry out a treaty obligation, and has nothing at all to do with reclamation, except that it will help to accurately control water for reclamation purposes that now can be legally taken from the Rio Grande.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Traveling expenses: For all necessary traveling expenses under the Department of Justice and the judiciary, including traveling expenses of probation officers and their clerks but not including traveling expenses otherwise payable under any appropriations for "United States Supreme Court", "United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals", "United States Customs Court", "Court of Claims", "United States Court for China", "Federal Bureau of Investigation", "Salaries and expenses of marshals", "Fees of jurors and witnesses", and "Penal and correctional institutions (except as otherwise hereinbefore provided)", $800,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question.

As I understand it, the committee has consolidated all traveling expenses and that sort of thing under the Department of Justice and the part of the judiciary in this item. Most of the courts are excepted from this proposition, but the traveling expenses of the district judges and circuit judges are thrown in with it. It occurs to me, frankly, that it is very bad policy to throw into the control of the Attorney General the allotment or allowance of expense items for the judges of our district and circuit courts, who have to pass upon a large number of questions which the Attorney General's office has to submit to them. It would seem to me that that item of $93,000, which is estimated for the expenses of those judges, would better be kept as a separate appropriation, as it has been in the past.

I should like to have the chairman of the subcommittee tell us, if he can, why this consolidation was proposed.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, under the law, of course, district and circuit judges are entitled to their traveling expenses within their own territories or districts on their own certification. This item therefore cannot affect those expenses, whether they be incurred by circuit or district courts. The primary purpose of this proposal is simply to put under the Attorney General the total amount for traveling expenses for the circuit and district judges, as well as for many other activities which the Appropriations Committee handles in connection with the Department of Justice appropriation bill.

It seems to me with the law as it is, with these judges paid by authority of law for any expense they incur in traveling in their own districts, that this proposal will in nowise affect them or any of the expenses they may incur. It is purely a matter of administration that can be handled, it seems to me, without any great difficulty whatever.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think that it is bad practice to turn over to the Attorney General control of these expenses, bearing in mind the fact that these judges have to pass on the questions that the Attorney General has to raise all the way through?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think that it sets up any new policy or that we have anything to fear. No such principle is involved. Under the law the judges are entitled to their expenses; and, if there is a deficit or should a deficiency occur, they have the right under the law to come up here and get the money. I repeat that I do not think any principle or policy will be affected by the adoption of this proposal.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; the acquisition, collection, classification, and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; purchase and exchange not to exceed $50,000, and hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only on official business; purchase and exchange at not to exceed $7,000 each, and maintenance, upkeep, and operation, of not more than four armored automobiles; firearms and ammunition; such stationery, supplies, and equipment for use at the seat of Government or elsewhere as the Attorney General may direct; not to exceed $10,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; traveling expenses, including expenses, in an amount not to exceed $4,500, of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of such Bureau when authorized in writing by the Attorney General; payment of rewards when specifically authorized by the Attorney General for information leading to the apprehension of fugitives from justice, including not to exceed $20,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, who shall make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended; and including not to exceed $1,640,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia; $6,000,000: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the field when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $50.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana: Page 35, line 12, strike out "$6,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,337,160."

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not in any criticism of the splendid work done by the subcommittee. The subcommittee has not stricken out this amount of money. This was done by the Budget committee. This item was requested by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover to create an additional fund which he might use to employ extra personnel. Whenever there is a major crime, such as a kidnaping, all of the available manpower of the F. B. I. is withdrawn from projects on which it is working and centered in one area, one section of the United States. At the present time in the Federal Bureau of Investigation there are a great number of unassigned cases merely because there is not sufficient manpower to take care of them. When we stop all of the processes of this investigating bureau in order to put these men at a hot spot we are at that minute giving to the criminal an opportunity to go further with the work he is doing. So I ask of this august body favorable consideration of the amendment I have offered. I think every man here realizes what these people are doing to protect our homes and our families; and I am sure that you want to give to this able corps of men the things they need to carry on.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Did the Budget include this extra money the gentlewoman is asking for?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. No; the Budget struck it out and therefore the committee did not include it. I am asking that it be included.

Mr. KELLER. I am for the granting of this item.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate, of course, the position taken by the gentlewoman from Indiana on this proposal. The committee shares the view that she has expressed in connection with the fine work the Bureau of Investigation is doing. As I think I said in my remarks yesterday, the activities of this Bureau under the very fine leadership of Mr. Hoover has really caught the fancy of the American people; but, Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed is for the amount, if I may say so, that was requested of the Budget. It was brought out in the committee hearings that if this amount of $337,000 were allowed, it would mean that additional employees could be had, and I do not think there is any question about the fact that the additional employees are necessary in this fine Bureau. Last year, however, Mr. Chairman, this committee increased the funds of this Bureau by $225,000 over the estimate of the Budget, and this year we have repeated, at least to the extent of $75,000 over the estimate of the Budget.

There is no one on this floor—and I do not believe there is in Congress—a more sympathetic believer in the spirit of cooperation with the Bureau of Investigation than the members of the subcommittee, on which I have the honor to serve as chairman; but, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there is such a demand from all quarters as to where we are going to get the money—we have heard it on this floor before—I feel that the $75,000 this committee has put in here is about as far as we can go at this time, and for this reason I must regretfully say that it will be necessary to oppose the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that $75,000 is included in the bill beyond the amount recommended by the Director of the Budget?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; we exceeded the Budget estimate by $75,000.

Mr. KELLER. How much is this item being cut, or, rather, what does the total cut in the appropriation amount to?

Mr. McMILLAN. Eight hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars for the entire Department of Justice. For the four departments under the bill we have cut about $3,067,000, less the $500,000 that was put back in the bill for the canalization work under the State Department.

Mr. KELLER. How much altogether? Three and a half million?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is about $2,550,000 now.

Mr. KELLER. Would it not be reasonable to allow this, and we would still save $2,000,000?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Does the gentleman not think the Department of Justice is a bad place to cut?

Mr. McMILLAN. The truth of the matter is we have not cut the appropriations for this Bureau. We have, as a matter of fact, exceeded the Budget estimate to the extent of $75,000. We have added to the Bureau's activities $75,000 over the estimate of the Budget.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Does not this Bureau show when they spend the money that is given to them that they have saved more than that sum in the property they reclaim and in the arrest and convictions they secure?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. Of course, we expect that on the part of all of our bureaus and departments. We hope they all make good. We want them to submit to Congress from year to year a very fine record and we would be disappointed if this particular Bureau did not show such a record.

Mr. WALTER. May I ask if the gentleman's subcommittee followed very closely the recommendations made by the Director of the Budget in this appropriation?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; and we even went $75,000 over the estimate of the Budget. As I said before, last year we exceeded the Budget estimate by $225,000 for this particular activity. In view of this situation, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Examination of judicial offices: For the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts and Territorial courts, probation officers, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; and also, when requested by the presiding judge, the official acts, records, and accounts of referees and trustees of such courts; for copying, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, reports of examiners at folio rates; in all, $46,000, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 37, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following two paragraphs:

"Salaries: For salaries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in connection with the supervision of the maintenance and care of United States prisoners, $236,700.

"The appropriation under title II for traveling expenses shall be available, in an amount not to exceed $3,500, for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau of Prisons when incurred on the written authorization of the Attorney General."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I may say this is merely a perfecting amendment, and I do not think it requires any further explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses: For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, for the United States courts and their officers, including experts, and notarial fees or like services and stenographic work in taking depositions, at such rates of compensation as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, so much as may be necessary in the discretion of the Attorney General for such expenses in the District of Alaska, the Court of Claims, and in courts other than Federal courts; rent of rooms for United States courts and judicial officers; supplies, including the exchange of typewriting and adding machines, for the United States courts and judicial officers, including firearms and ammunition therefor; purchase of law books, including the exchange thereof, for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the libraries of the 10 United States circuit courts of appeals, and the Federal Reporter and continuations thereto as issued, $1,086,000: Provided, That such books shall in all cases be transmitted to their successors in office; all books purchased hereunder to be marked plainly, "The Property of the United States": Provided further, That not to exceed $2 per volume shall be paid for the current and future volumes of the United States Code, Annotated: Provided further, That the maximum salary paid to any stenographer or law clerk to any circuit or district judge shall not exceed $2,500 per annum: Provided further, That this limitation shall not operate to reduce the compensation of any stenographer now employed nor shall the salary of any stenographer drawing more than $2,500 per annum hereafter be increased.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 47, line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Salaries of law clerks to district judges: The salaries of law clerks to district judges, authorized by Public Law No. 449, Seventy-fourth Congress, $78,750."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary, which met this morning and passed a resolution authorizing the offering of this amendment as a committee amendment.

The amendment provides, in a word, that there shall be appropriated the sum of $78,750 to take care of the salaries of law secretaries, to the number of 35, to the Federal district judges throughout the land.

Mr. Chairman, the Judiciary Committee recommended to this House, and the bill passed the House and Senate, providing, in effect, as follows:

Each United States district court judge is hereby authorized to appoint a law clerk, when he deems the same to be necessary, and the senior judge of the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction over the district where the clerk is needed shall certify to the necessity of the appointment; but there shall not be appointed more than 35 such law clerks during the first fiscal year of the enactment of this amendment. Thereafter such number in excess of 35 per year shall be limited by the necessity of each case, as hereinbefore provided. The salary of such appointed law clerk shall be at a rate not in excess of $2,750 per annum, and the appropriation of such amount as is or may be necessary to pay for the salaries and traveling expenses of such law clerks is hereby authorized.

Despite the authorization of this Congress that there be set up at least 35 of these law secretaries for the district judges during the first fiscal year after the enactment of this measure, a committee of this House has seen fit to deny the authority of the House and has deliberately failed to appropriate a sufficient sum to take care of the appointment of these law secretaries.

When the bill was originally passed the Bureau of the Budget found it was too late to get the amount in the deficiency appropriation bill for last year. For some reason or other the bill has fallen between two stools. On the one hand we had the Appropriations Committee, which said it would not take favorable action unless and until the Bureau of the Budget made a recommendation. The Bureau of the Budget, after my conference with them, said they were awaiting some word from the Appropriations Committee. As I say, the bill has fallen between two stools.

Are we going to pass a bill, then refuse to make the appropriation? Are we going to permit the Appropriations Committee to refuse to make the appropriation after we pass the bill? That is flouting the will of the House. It is flouting the will of the Senate. It is flouting the will of the President. Something is amiss.

The Appropriations Committee says it awaits word from the Bureau of the Budget. It will not take any action until the Director of the Budget gives word. Since when does the Director of the Budget govern the destinies of Congress? Who set up the Budget Director as dictator? The Appropriations Committee has made a grievous error. We must rectify this error. If we did not want law secretaries to judges, why did we pass the bill originally? The logical thing for the Appropriations Committee to do would be to repeal the bill—withdraw the provision for law secretaries. But as long as that provision is the law of the land, it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to appropriate the moneys to carry out the provision of that law of the land.

With reference to the need for these law clerks, may I say we have canvassed the situation throughout the country and in the more populous centers, in the large cities particularly, we find there is an avalanche of business, particularly as the result of the passage of the so-called New Deal statutes. There is great difficulty in the judges carrying on their functions properly, adequately, and intelligently without the aid of a law secretary; in other words, the judges need someone to run down the statutes, someone to check up on the briefs that have been submitted by counsel on either side, prepare memoranda, and do a great deal of the so-called research work that the judge cannot do alone under present circumstances.

There has been presented to the courts a tremendous amount of additional work, due to the amendment 77B of the Bankruptcy Act. This provides for reorganization proceedings in lieu of bankruptcy. These 77B proceedings entail a tremendous amount of work. The judge becomes a sort of administrative officer in these proceedings, and a great deal of his time is taken up with them. Many intricate problems arise daily in the reorganization of these large companies. Stacks of briefs pile up on the judge's desk. He is unable to digest most of them. Somebody must help him.

While he carries on these reorganization proceedings, he has his equity calendar, his patent-law calendar, his administrative cases, and the common-law litigation. While he runs through these calendars from month to month, these reorganization proceedings remain with him. Motions involving all manner and kind of intricacies are made. The judge's burdens are staggering. At times it is physically impossible for him to keep abreast of the situation.

Then there are cases arising under the Social Security Act, the Securities and Exchange Commission Act, the Federal Housing Administration Act, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Embraced within his work are the many tax problems.

Of course, in some country districts these difficult cases never arise. My original bill only provides for law secretaries where they are actually needed, and where such need is certified by the senior circuit judge.

I herewith read to you a typical letter received under date of February 15, 1937, from one of the judges, my very esteemed friend, John C. Knox. This letter clearly indicates the besetting difficulty of a judge in the New York section, and indicates the compelling need for these law secretaries:

FEBRUARY 15, 1937.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It is a matter of regret to me that I cannot be in Washington to appear before the Appropriations Committee at the hearing tomorrow morning. I am at the moment engaged in the trial of a mail-fraud case in which there are 19 defendants and about a dozen lawyers and this makes me feel that I should perhaps stay on the job here. Judge Hulbert, however, is able to get away and he can present the views of the various judges to the committee.

I trust the Appropriations Committee will favor the bill to make it possible for Federal judges to have law secretaries. They are particularly necessary in a district such as this, where the judges are engaged substantially all the time in holding court sessions. As you know, our motion term is productive of a great many questions of law. The same is also true of the equity and admiralty branches of the court. If decisions in these cases are to be promptly rendered, it is necessary that the papers be examined and the wheat sifted from the chaff at the earliest possible moment. When a judge is engaged upon the bench from 10:30 in the morning until 4:30 in the afternoon, and is then confronted with the necessity of seeing attorneys with respect to orders and various other matters, the time within which he can engage in research work is extremely limited.

Two of our local judges have law secretaries who are paid out of personal funds, but others are unable to do this and are required to get along as best they can.

A law secretary can also save a judge considerable time by seeing counsel on matters that must be gone over but need not necessarily engage the time and attention of the judge. As you know, interviews upon relatively small subject matters consume much time. Thus, a law secretary in a judge's office will conserve many hours in this respect.

With appreciation of your efforts to be of assistance to us and with kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JNO. C. KNOX.

I know in New York, whence I came, the judges are woefully in need of a law secretary. Remember, we do not ask that a law secretary be appointed for every one of the judges. One may suffice for several judges. If I had my way, however, I would have one for each judge. Each circuit judge, each Congressman, in fact, has a secretary; why not the district judges?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. In a district court in Brooklyn, for example, we have six judges. We do not ask for six law secretaries, one for each of the judges. Two or three secretaries might be sufficient. I repeat, I would prefer to have one for each. But let us try this first. Later we can improve the situation by asking for more money.

We have very significant letters from judges, which I have put into the record of the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations. For instance, a letter written to me under date of February 16 by Marcus B. Campbell, the distinguished senior judge of my district, wherein he approves of the bill.

I think members of the Committee on the Judiciary have been besieged by requests from various judges throughout the length and breadth of the land certifying to the need for these law secretaries. I do indeed hope, therefore, the members of this Committee will see fit to appropriate the sum of seventy-eight-odd thousand dollars to take care of this situation.

Although the bill provides for a salary not to exceed $2,750 per annum, I have taken the recommendation of the Comptroller General that the salary be reduced to $2,250; so, multiplying $2,250 by 35, you obtain the amount which is indicated in my amendment, which I hope will pass. If we left the salary at $2,750 you would provide a salary at a sum higher than the salaries of law secretaries to the circuit judges.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I understand the gentleman is asking for an appropriation of $78,000 in addition to the appropriation specified in the bill?

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I also understand the gentleman is asking the House to appropriate this amount notwithstanding the fact the Committee on Appropriations has turned it down?

Mr. CELLER. That is true. I think the Committee on Appropriations, with a sort of misguided enthusiasm, turned it down. Economy may be carried too far. They probably turned it down in the interest of economy; but this is misguided economy, because in the long run the litigants appearing before these judges need to have the judges render intelligent and appropriate decisions, which they cannot render without sufficient, proper aid, which this law provides.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Committee on Appropriations tries very hard to keep within the Budget.

This item was placed before the Bureau of the Budget. Extensive hearings were held by the Director of the Budget on it. The need for this additional amount of money was not demonstrated to the Director of the Budget, and I may say your committee in its hearings did not develop sufficient evidence to override the Director of the Budget. Therefore we did not allow the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who appeared before the committee and asked us to override the Budget.

We do not like to override the Budget unless there is a very clear and plain reason for doing so, a reason beyond any peradventure of a doubt. No showing was made to warrant us in flaunting the Budget and overriding it. In these times we have to keep the ordinary expenditures of the regular departments somewhere within the bounds of reason. We have to reserve our excess resources for the purposes of much-needed relief. We have to keep the ordinary budgets within the bounds set by the President and the Director of the Budget.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Does not the gentleman think the fact the House authorized this expenditure for law clerks 2 years ago is some argument in favor of it? Is not the feeling of the House indicated thereby?

Mr. BACON. That may be true as far as the feeling of the House is concerned, but the Director of the Budget did not seem to think so, and a case was not made before our committee to justify us in exceeding the Budget estimates.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. A few weeks ago we received a message that the courts were clogged and congested, and the appointment of additional Justices was recommended. If the judges who are now sitting had law clerks they would be able to expedite their business, there would be a better administration of justice, and justice would be more prompt. Would the gentleman rather have new judges or a few new law clerks?

Mr. BACON. Some of our judges ought to do more work.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. They will if they have law clerks, which is the exact point of this legislation.

Mr. BACON. Your committee feels it should not override the Budget unless there is a real showing made, which is the reason we did not accede to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. A clear case was not made.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Do I understand the gentleman to mean he takes the position of giving preference to the Budget rather than the feeling of the House as expressed by the passage of this bill of authorization?

Mr. BACON. No. I take the position that unless a very good case is made your committee is duty bound to keep within the Budget figures. We also reserve the right, however, if a clear case is made to exceed the Budget figures. In the case of the Bureau of Investigation in this bill we exceeded the Budget estimate by $75,000 because a very convincing case was made for an increase. We do not feel ourselves bound to follow the Budget blindly, but we do feel we ought to keep within the Budget figures unless a real case is made for some other course of action. The members of the Judiciary Committee should have presented a case before our committee when the Bureau of the Budget failed to approve this item.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman think it would be more logical to repeal the bill we first passed? Then we can come within the Budget figures, as the gentleman puts it. However, certainly the Budget Director should not flout the will of the Congress, expressed when we passed this authorization bill. The Budget Director did not even notify us of his action. Do you not think we ought to have some rights in the matter? The Members of Congress voted on this bill solemnly, after due deliberation. Now the Budget Director comes along and says "no." And the Appropriations Committee slavishly follows him.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

With all due deference to the Committee and to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], may I call the attention of the House to the real situation he discussed and the implications involved in following such a course? The Bureau of the Budget performs a real service for the Congress, but it is not the province of the Budget to interfere with appropriations which are directly authorized by law. The Bureau of the Budget does and should recommend to the Committee on Appropriations the amount of appropriations on matters which are not definitely fixed by law. Here the Budget is openly disregarding the law and in effect recommending against following the law. I want the House to speak one way or the other so we may know who has the last word in determining how and when the taxpayers' money is to be spent.

Last year the Congress deliberately passed the law providing that law clerks should be appointed by district courts and authorizing an appropriation to pay them. Now, what has happened? The Bureau of the Budget and the Appropriations Committee have come along and now say the Congress was wrong; that there is no need for these clerks; that, notwithstanding the fact the Congress authorized the appropriation, and notwithstanding the fact the President signed the bill, we do not think there is any necessity for it. In other words, it does not please us to make this appropriation and we do not intend to do so, regardless of the provision of the law.

They do not think there is any necessity for it. When reduced to the last analysis it is simply a question of whether the Congress is going to control the appropriations or whether the Budget and the various bureaus that have been set up will control the Congress and the amounts and purposes of appropriations. Who are to have their hands on the purse strings? The House of Representatives or the Budget? This is the question involved. There is not much money involved, the amount being $78,750, and the question is whether you are going to carry out the mandate of a former Congress. If you are not, as has well been pointed out, the law should be repealed.

Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. MILLER. I yield first to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the gentleman from Arkansas advocate the making of every appropriation of funds authorized by the Congress?

Mr. MILLER. No; I would not advocate that because many appropriations authorized by the Congress are continuing appropriations, and are necessarily made as and when required, such as the appropriations for flood control, rivers and harbors, and many similar authorizations, but here is a specific authorization for 35 law clerks and the former Congress said by the enactment of the law that they are needed now.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is it not a specific authorization for 150 law clerks?

Mr. MILLER. No; if the gentleman will read the act he will find, as the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CELLER] has pointed out, it provides that 35 shall be employed the first year and then others as occasion may demand. It might reach 155, because we have 155 district judges in the United States now, but, Mr. Chairman, there must be an additional appropriation if more law clerks are needed than the 35 already authorized. As a matter of fact, we think more clerks are needed, and I think there is not a man in this House who is not having appeals from the district court in his district asking for this assistance.

You have heard a lot of talk about congestion in the courts; you have heard a lot about justice being delayed is justice denied. You have an opportunity here by the appropriation of this $78,750 to help a great deal in expediting the administration of justice.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. When we analyze the situation existing in this country today, the reason is apparent why we have congested court dockets and delay in the trial of cases. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the judicial branch of this Government costs less than any other branch of the Government. A very infinitesimal amount of money is being yearly expended to maintain this coordinate branch, which, after all, is the Gibraltar of the liberties of the American people. Are you going to further retard the trial courts and bind them down by refusing to give them what the hearings before the committee show they need and what the Congress, by its solemn judgment, has stated they are entitled to? The rich may engage in extended litigation; the poor cannot. Delay in court is the friend of the powerful and rich. It is the enemy of justice. These law clerks are needed as a help to prompt trials.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman understand there are 10 executive departments in Washington, each one of which is spending more money than the entire judiciary every year?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WALTER. Is it not a fact that the cost of maintaining the judiciary is three-tenths of 1 percent?

Mr. MILLER. Three-tenths of 1 percent of Government expenditures; and here we are simply asking $78,750 in order that justice may be quickly administered for the benefit of litigants in these courts.

The amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

The question really before the Committee is not one of $78,000 but, approximately, one of $412,000 or $450,000. It is not a question now of appropriating for 35 law clerks; it is actually a question of eventually, and within the near future, appropriating for 150 or 160 law clerks. The Budget did not have sufficient evidence before it to warrant its recommending this item. The committee gave it consideration, and a sufficient showing was not made there, and it is the feeling of the committee that the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition for just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, our distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in support of this proposal. As has been stated here, the Budget did not estimate any amount of money for this item. It is true that according to the provisions of the law, 35 law clerks are undertaken to be provided for by this proposal, but the members of the Committee will find in this provision another phrase which states that thereafter, from time to time, additional law clerks may be included.

I am calling the attention of the members of the Committee to the fact that once the camel gets its nose under the tent by this proposal, with 35 law clerks for the district judges and the circuit judges of this country, it will only be a matter of a few years before every district judge will have one of these law clerks, paying them an average salary of $2,750 per year.

What will that amount to? One hundred and fifty at $2,750 a year——

Mr. CELLER. $2,250 a year.

Mr. McMILLAN. $2,750 a year is the amount authorized in the law. We may say $2,100 this year or $2,200 next year, but eventually it will be $2,750. Do not let anybody fool you about that. If that happens, Mr. Chairman, there will be a total of $412,500 that will have to be devoted for this item that is here sought as a beginning in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a picture. I have no ax to grind with the courts. They are doing a fine job, but when you get the nose of this camel under the tent in providing for these law clerks, something never heretofore established, very well, go ahead and spend your money. Over $425,000 will be the result of it after a period of a few years. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. Let us not confuse the camel with the dromedary, because the circuit judges already have law clerks already provided for. The only thing that we are attempting to do is to provide clerks for the district courts, and there are 155 of these judges in the country today. This law does not apply to circuit judges at all.

Mr. McMILLAN. I may be in error in regard to the circuit judges, but we are annually increasing the number of judges, both district and circuit, as my friend knows, and his is the committee that provides for that increase. We have additional judgeships authorized here from year to year. Right now there are pending some seven or eight appointments, and each one of those in turn will want this law clerk referred to, and while you have 155 at the present time with seven or eight additional district courts provided for every year, you will have 200 pretty soon. Gentlemen, there is the picture.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I dislike very much to oppose anything that this subcommittee suggests, because I am sure that the committee is at all times doing that which it believes to be for the best interests of the Government. Especially do I dislike to disagree with the very affable, able, and efficient chairman of the committee.

The committees of the House, however, may be divided into two groups: First, the legislative committees, which committees formulate the policy of legislation. Second, the Appropriations Committee, which committee passes only upon appropriations. Indeed, the rules of the House provide that any suggested legislation on an appropriation bill is out of order. I was a Member of Congress in 1921 when the Budget system was established. There was a great fight at that time by many of the legislative committees who insisted that the new Appropriations Committee, consisting of 35 members, would be a supercommittee, and would usurp the legislative functions of the other committees. The older Members will recall that fight. For the good of the House and orderly procedure, as well as the success of the Budget system and the present Appropriations Committee, that committee must be careful about usurping the powers of other committees and nullifying the mandates of Congress.

The amendment we are now discussing points out vividly just what I am aiming at. Something over a year ago, the Congress, after due deliberation and careful consideration, passed a law providing law clerks to be of assistance to district judges, where the necessity was certified by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General and the presiding judge of the circuit, if I recall clearly. The number of these law clerks for the first year was not to exceed 35; that is, these clerks were only to be appointed if and when these court officials certified that there was a necessity. The President approved that law. However, the Appropriations Committee has failed to recommend any appropriation in order that the terms of the law might be carried out; that is, the Appropriations Committee has, in effect, vetoed the law. We have heard much recently about the Supreme Court vetoing the acts of Congress. Here is a case where an Appropriations Committee, in direct violation of the spirit and intent and the action of Congress, as expressed in the law, deliberately nullifies the law by refusal of the appropriation.

The word "dictatorship" is used very frequently in these days. However, it has but one meaning, and it does not seem to me that the Appropriations Committee should assume the role of dictator in determining which laws enacted by the Congress shall be given force and effect. This amendment would make it possible for this law to become operative. In effect, this amendment will override the veto of the Appropriations Committee on this particular law. It seems to me that that is common sense at least. As I recall, I opposed this bill when it was originally before our committee. However, the majority of the committee and a majority of the Congress thought otherwise, and I am now convinced that that majority was correct. The amount involved is not large, and there is congestion in some of the district courts of the United States, and the Judiciary Committee was told that the selection of these law clerks would help alleviate the situation.

I feel sure that this matter was not properly presented to the Committee on Appropriations, for had it understood the matter as the Judiciary Committee understands it, possibly it might have recommended an appropriation. I yield to none in my belief that we must cut down expenses and balance the Budget. It occurs to me, however, at this time, when the courts are being attacked and when the courts themselves ask for this additional help, it behooves the Congress to hearken to the appeal. The Supreme Court has law clerks and the calendar of the Supreme Court is current, as stated by the Chief Justice not later than yesterday. I condemn the philosophy of the Appropriations Committee in denying appropriations to carry out laws enacted by Congress.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. The gentleman does not take the position that he will vote appropriations for every authorization passed by the Congress?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, if the Congress on yesterday, for instance, enacted a law, after careful and deliberate consideration, and the President signed the law, and then the Appropriations Committee was asked for the money to put the law into effect, I would hesitate before I refused to vote for the appropriation. The Appropriations Committee is but a creature of the House, and when the House has enacted a law it seems hardly fair that its creature, a committee, should deprive the majority of the House from having that law made effective.

Mr. McMILLAN. Every authorization passed by Congress is the law of the land. Will the gentleman stand up and vote for those appropriations?

Mr. MICHENER. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee well knows that that is a rather general question, and I could not answer by saying "yes" or "no." Many authorizations contemplate discretion as to time and amount by the Appropriations Committee. However, where a law, like the present law, provides explicitly for the creation of a given number of law clerks, at a given salary, to be appointed and serve during a given period, it seems to me that there should be no question about how a Member of Congress should vote on the appropriation, if the law were enacted with a knowledge of what the effect of the law would be.

Again let me say that I regret exceedingly to be compelled to support an amendment which is in opposition to the recommendations of this committee, and possibly those of us more familiar with the necessity for this law should have seen to it that this subcommittee was more fully advised when hearings were being held on this appropriation bill. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Much as I dislike to oppose the Committee on Appropriations for which I have the highest regard, I submit that this amendment is meritorious and should be adopted. It is not offered hastily or without due consideration. It is an amendment which has the backing of the Committee on the Judiciary, within whose province this question comes. One year ago this House passed a bill recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary which provided that 35 law clerks should be appointed for judges of the United States district courts. There was precedent for that action. The law already provided that judges of the United States circuit courts of appeals should have such law clerks.

The Committee on the Judiciary considered this matter very seriously. Hearings were had. Witnesses were given an opportunity to present evidence. After full deliberation the Committee on the Judiciary, in the exercise of its judgment and its wisdom, decided to recommend to the House a bill calling for the appointment of 35 law clerks to assist the district judges of the United States. That bill was presented on the floor of this House and it was considered by this body and it was passed by this body. So therefore we have today a situation in which the House has spoken and has said that it desires these 35 law clerks to be appointed. On the other hand, we have the Bureau of the Budget which says to the Appropriations Committee, "We do not believe we will recommend that." We have a direct clash between the Budget Bureau and the House itself.

The question for the members of this committee to consider and determine is, are we going to act upon our own judgment or are we going to accept the judgment of the Bureau of the Budget?

I have every respect for the Director of the Budget. I have the very greatest respect for the members of the Committee on Appropriations. However, in this clash it is a question of whether we are going to surrender our power as Members of this House to the Budget Bureau; whether we are going to recede from our position because the Budget Bureau does not appear to agree with us. I pray the Members of the House to stand by their action and vote favorably upon this amendment, an amendment which calls for something which is badly needed and which will assist in the administration of justice in this country. So I ask the members of the committee to support this amendment. It will be no reflection on the members of the Committee on Appropriations if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. BACON. The Appropriations Committee is always willing to exceed the Budget, provided a real case is made before our committee. We held hearings from the fourth day of January until just the other day. We held hearings for over 9 weeks. It seems to me that the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, who seem to be so much interested in this question now, might have come before our committee and presented some of these arguments to us.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That question was already settled by the action of the House. The law already authorized the appointment of these clerks. Why should we come before your committee and ask you for something which the House had already given us?

Mr. BACON. I will tell you why. It was for the simple reason that the Budget refused to allow the item.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McMILLAN) there were ayes 60 and noes 40.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. CELLER and Mr. McMILLAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 69 and noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENAL AND CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

For all services, including personal services compensated upon fee basis, supplies, materials, and equipment in connection with or incident to the subsistence and care of inmates and maintenance and upkeep of Federal penal and correctional institutions, including farm and other operations not otherwise specifically provided for in the discretion of the Attorney General; gratuities for inmates at release, provided such gratuities shall be furnished to inmates sentenced for terms of imprisonment of not less than 6 months, and transportation to the place of conviction or bona-fide residence at the time of conviction or to such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Attorney General; expenses of interment or transporting remains of deceased inmates to their homes in the United States; maintenance and repair of passenger-carrying vehicles; traveling expenses of institution officials and employees when traveling on official duty, including expenses, in an amount not to exceed $750, of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the several institutions when authorized in writing by the Attorney General, and including expenses incurred in pursuing and identifying escaped inmates; traveling expenses of members of advisory boards authorized by law incurred in the discharge of their official duties; packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects, not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds, of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty and uniforms for the guard force, when specifically authorized by the Attorney General; rewards for the capture of escaped inmates; newspapers, books, and periodicals; firearms and ammunition; tobacco for inmates; and the purchase and exchange of farm products and livestock, when authorized by the Attorney General: Provided, That any part of the appropriations under this heading used for payment of salaries of personnel employed in the operation of prison commissaries shall be reimbursed from commissary earnings, and such reimbursement shall be in addition to the amounts appropriated herein.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 48, line 22, after the figures "$750", strike out the comma and insert the following: "for each institution."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a clarifying amendment, and I do not think it is necessary to take up further time with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and equipment, public works: For extensions to existing facilities and not to exceed $50,000 for construction of dwellings for prison officers at existing institutions, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General by contract or purchase of material and hire of labor and services and utilization of labor of United States prisoners as the Attorney General may direct, $280,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: On page 53, after the paragraph on line 21, insert a new paragraph reading as follows:

"Buildings and equipment, public works: For completion of construction of the Federal jails at Los Angeles, Calif., Sandstone, Minn., and Tallahassee, Fla., $1,100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it appropriate at this time to say a word in connection with this amendment.

If you will refer to the hearings, you will find that Mr. Bates, during the course of his statement before the committee, went to some length in discussing the needs of these additional jails and other institutions connected with the penal system.

It so happens that at these three institutions in Los Angeles, Sandstone, Min., and Tallahassee, Fla., under a building program that was begun a year or two ago, a great deal of it had been spent in those three institutions; but, in view of the advancing cost of material and other factors that enter into this building program, it was found to be absolutely essential to find additional funds to carry on and complete these three institutions.

The hearings contain a break-down showing the amount necessary for each one of these institutions. I do not recall the amount, but offhand I think $430,000 is allowed for Los Angeles; $300,000 for Sandstone; and $370,000 for Florida, making a total of $1,100,000. Since the committee held those hearings the Budget has considered this item and has sent down to us a supplemental estimate providing for the completion of these three jails. In addition, they submitted an estimate for the maintenance of these three institutions; that is, for the upkeep and maintenance cost of their operation. It was developed in the hearings, however, that it would be probably several months, certainly into the next fiscal year, before these jails will be completed.

It was not necessary at this time, therefore, to provide funds for the maintenance or the equipment of these institutions. The primary object was to try to get them completed. With this in mind, Mr. Chairman, the committee felt that if this amount, $1,100,000, were made available at this time to complete the three institutions, that additional funds for their maintenance and operation could be taken care of at some later time in a deficiency bill.

I may say for the information of the House that the prison population, unfortunately, as I think I said yesterday, is constantly growing. The Leavenworth annex, in Leavenworth, Kans., is an institution that has for a number of years been operated by the Bureau of Prisons, but it is the property of the Army, and the Army for several years has been trying to get this property back for its own use, as they need it in connection with their activities at Leavenworth; and so it is with that in mind, coupled with the increase and demand for additional space that the committee felt that it was better to provide funds to complete these three institutions and attempt at a later time to take care of their maintenance and equipment in a deficiency bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is my understanding that although the committee is making provision for the completion of the three Federal jails that the committee is not launching a new program of additional reformatories or penitentiaries.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Let me call the attention of the Committee to the fact that a year ago I appeared before the committee and suggested that the Southwestern Federal Reformatory situated at El Reno, Okla., has not yet been completed. I pointed out that Congress authorized $3,000,000 to complete that institution. The water mains were laid for a $3,000,000 institution. The administration building was constructed with that in view. There is sufficient land, 1,800 acres, for a $3,000,000 institution. I suggest, then, that rather than launch on a new program of constructing another Federal prison, certainly the Southwestern Reformatory ought to be completed as authorized by Congress. The record shows that the gentleman's committee agreed to such a policy.

Mr. McMILLAN. The gentleman understands, of course, that this is not a new program. This merely provides for the completion of a building program that was instituted some 2 or 3 years ago. These jails are all under way and it is thought that they ought to be completed.

With reference to the gentleman's project at El Reno, the committee has, in another item, allowed the sum of about $53,000 for miscellaneous construction items at that institution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I understand from reading the report of the committee that $53,000 is carried in the bill for the Southwestern Reformatory for three specific items, although they are not specifically set out in the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The point I have been endeavoring to make is that I understand it is the purpose and definite policy of the committee not to inaugurate any new building program of additional Federal reformatories or prisons until the prisons that we now have, such as the Southwestern Reformatory, have been completed as contemplated by Congress. Is that correct?

Mr. McMILLAN. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

This title may be cited as the "Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1938."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the lady from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] offered an amendment to the section of the bill under consideration that deals with the Bureau of Investigation providing for certain increases in the appropriations therefor upon which I congratulate her even though the amendment failed. Regardless of that fact I want to avail myself of the opportunity to make a few remarks I have had on my mind for some time with reference to the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice. The Members of this House on both sides of the aisle will recall that back in 1930, 1931, and 1932 we had some of the most vivid demonstrations of lawlessness that swept across this country in its entire history. We suffered from outstanding examples of criminal activities in the United States: The Dillinger gang, the "Baby Face" Nelson crowd, the "Pretty Boy" Floyd outfit, and many others of like character that robbed, pillaged, and killed their way across this country, leaving a bloody trail which was a shameful example of lack of law enforcement. At the beginning of this administration it became the policy to stop that lawlessness. One of the least publicized and least talked-about achievements during the past 4 years has been the manner in which the Bureau of Investigation has put its foot down and stamped out of existence a sizeable contingent of the criminal element in the United States.

I went through the Federal Bureau of Investigation a few weeks ago. I hope that before you go home at the conclusion of this session that you as individual Members of Congress with responsibilities to your constituents, with responsibilities to yourselves as citizens, will go through that Bureau and see the splendid, scientific manner in which those officials are going about the business of enforcing the laws of this country.

They are establishing a psychology in the United States that is exceptional and commendable. We have heard for a long time about the romance of the Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police and about the men who represent Scotland Yard. Now we are beginning to hear more and more about the romance of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, composed of young men of high type who are either attorneys or certified public accountants and with whom I have had the great pleasure to associate during the past 2 months in some individual cases. In all instances I have found them to be gentlemen of the highest order, men that it is a pleasure to know, not men of the variety that we have sometimes termed in the past "flatfeet", but men who are educated, men who are able, men who are experienced in their art and who are rendering an excellent service to the Government of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the psychology of law enforcement that they are beginning to spread throughout this country is beginning to have effect in the proper manner. In days gone by when the school kids were playing "cops and robbers", by virtue of the attitude of some of the press of this country in publicizing criminals and their records, all of the youngsters wanted to be robbers; but since the activity of the Department of Justice in the last few years all of them want to be cops. That is the psychology we want to instill into the minds of the youth of America, and it will result in greater respect for the law. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope that the Members of the House will follow my suggestion of visiting the Bureau of Investigation before this bill is finally approved by Congress. If you will do that and in addition thereto read some of the authoritative writings on crime by Courtney Riley Cooper, who knows more about the manner in which that rotten disease of the body politic, and the people themselves, has spread over this land than any other man in America, and is rendering a profound public service by exposing it. You will join with others of us who are urging that the Bureau of Investigation, under J. Edgar Hoover, receive the full amount of funds considered necessary for the efficient operation of the Department. In fact, I think you will feel as I do, that we should make available whatever sums are required for the officials of that Bureau to stamp out the orgy of crime that leaves its grimy mark upon this Nation every day.

Even though we were unable to secure your approval of the amendment increasing the appropriation to the figure specified as necessary by the Director today, I trust you will reconsider your action, and that another legislative body will look with favor upon the work that was launched in the House during the reading of the bill. If such is the case and members of the Appropriations Committee who represent us in conference will express the reconsidered opinion of the Members of the House we will witness an uninterrupted march of the Bureau of Investigation toward new and even brighter goals of law enforcement, brighter in the sense that their work will be more widespread and more lasting in its effect because of the appreciation of it on the part of the public and the realization on the part of criminals that sooner or later the G-men will get them.

Both branches of the National Congress should cooperate with the Bureau of Investigation in providing funds this session to continue a relentless war upon crime.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Establishment of air-navigation facilities: For the establishment of additional aids to air navigation, including the equipment of additional air-mail routes for day and night flying; the construction of additional necessary lighting, radio, and other signaling and communicating structures and apparatus; the alteration and modernization of existing aids to air navigation; not to exceed $50,000 for investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation; aircraft, aircraft power plants, and accessories; for personal services in the field; purchase, including exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work; special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant, $2,714,300: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of Commerce may, prior to July 1, 1938, enter into contracts for the purchase, construction, and installation of additional air navigation aids not in excess of $2,000,000.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this paragraph carries an appropriation to enable the Department of Commerce to install radio beams and other safety devices in aid of air navigation at a certain number of airports throughout the country. I take this opportunity to express the hope that before the bill is finally enacted into law this particular appropriation will be increased so as to enable the Department to take care of a great many airports that it will not be able to take care of with the amount carried in the bill at present. I hope the appropriation will be materially increased, either here or in the Senate, and that if it is increased in the Senate that the House conferees will agree to the increase.

The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Airport, for example, is located on the Pennsylvania Central Air Lines, running from Detroit to Grand Rapids, thence across Lake Michigan to Milwaukee. There is no radio beam at the airport at Grand Rapids, although it is a very important airport and one upon which a great deal of money has been spent. I believe something like $750,000 has been spent upon it. Planes going from Detroit to Grand Rapids and across Lake Michigan to Milwaukee are dependent upon the radio beam at Detroit until they reach Grand Rapids and the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, and as they approach Lake Michigan they are dependent upon the radio beam at Milwaukee. As I understand, the range of the Detroit beam falls about 50 miles short of Grand Rapids. The airport at Grand Rapids is very much in need of a radio beam, but I am told that this appropriation will not be sufficient to enable the Department to install one there. In view of the bad accidents which have occurred in the last few months, it seems to me if the Congress is going to err in this appropriation it ought to err on the side of safety and that sufficient funds should be provided to enable the Department to install these aids to air navigation wherever they are needed.

May I ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations if the committee cut the Budget estimate on this particular item?

Mr. McMILLAN. Only on experimental work, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Only for the experimental work?

Mr. McMILLAN. Only for research development and experimental work. If I recall correctly, $165,000 was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget for research and experimental work, which the committee reduced to $50,000. That was done, I may say to the gentleman, because the committee felt we have the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics down here at Langley Field, Va.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. May I interrupt the gentleman's statement to ask him this further question? How much did the Bureau of the Budget cut the estimate of the Department of Commerce in this appropriation? As I understand, it would take something like $7,000,000 to make the necessary installation of these safety devices at the different airports of the country. How did the Bureau of the Budget arrive at this amount rather than some other amount? Did it fix an arbitrary sum which would take care of a limited number of airports and leave out others, or how did it arrive at the figures here?

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say to the gentleman, as I proceeded to say a moment ago, the committee limited this research development and experimental work to $50,000 because of the fact the committee considered that the Bureau is not primarily a research and development bureau. Experiments of that nature, if conducted at all by the Government, should be left to the National Advisory Committee and to the manufacturers that are engaged in that work.

Mr. MAPES. My remarks were not aimed at that particular item.

Mr. McMILLAN. With respect to the other inquiry the gentleman raised, the Bureau estimated this year $2,458,000 over the current appropriation bill, and furthermore passed an authorization to the committee here permitting the Bureau to commit itself to $2,000,000 more during the next fiscal year. There is a total of about $5,000,000 available that the Bureau of Air Commerce may operate on for the next 2 years, which, in my judgment, will take care of a great many projects to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. MAPES. I think the gentleman is correct that it will take care of a great many, but, as I understand, the Bureau of Air Commerce estimates there are a great many other important airports which it will not take care of.

Mr. McMILLAN. There are 212 projects that have been submitted or referred to by the Bureau that they will be able to handle under this $5,000,000 program. As the gentleman and other Members of the House know, there have been varying estimates given as to the amount necessary to carry on what we all may regard as an ultimate complete program for our air-transport needs.

This amount ranges anywhere from $5,000,000 to $25,000,000, but, as the gentleman from New York suggested, in view of the rapid changes in the new gadgets which are occurring from day to day and in the character of ships and radio aids we are now constructing, what may be regarded today as a modern up-to-date ship in a month or so may be considered obsolete. Therefore, the Bureau feels a conservative program such as has been recommended here would in the end be the proper kind of program to pursue.

Mr. MAPES. Let me say that the airports ought to be made as safe as possible for the ships which are now flying.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

I think the hearings will show the Bureau of the Budget allowed the entire amount asked by the Department of Commerce for additional aids to navigation. Assistant Secretary Johnson stated at page 168 of the hearings:

> We come to you with a request for something under $5,000,000 additional appropriation for air-navigation facilities. That is all we can use for that purpose economically during the year. Part of it is to be expended during the year and part of it obligated. That gives us just as much as we can wisely spend, and we should not tie up more money in the rapid advancement of aeronautics. Any additional amount of money that would be included in this item would be merely to obligate it and we would only obligate it when we made up our minds how the work should proceed.
> As we come to you from the Budget, we are perfectly satisfied, and we feel that no more can be wisely and expeditiously spent.

I do not entirely agree with Assistant Secretary Johnson. I believe the $5,000,000 included in this bill—$3,000,000 to be spent during the next year, with permission to obligate $2,000,000 additional in the following year—will take care of but a small part of our existing air lines in making them safe for flying. I believe to complete the entire system of now-authorized airways in this country will require at least $10,000,000, and not $5,000,000. Therefore I think it is only fair to warn the committee it will be faced next year with additional appropriations to complete the job.

However, in view of the fact the Department of Commerce did not ask for any more money from the Budget, and in view of the fact the Budget gave them all they asked for, your committee, in spite of very extended hearings, where the need for greater amounts was pretty well shown, did not feel justified in increasing the Budget allowance.

I believe, however, the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate will ask the Budget to reconsider this proposal, in view of the reorganization which has recently taken place in the Bureau of Air Commerce. I may say the reorganization in the Bureau of Air Commerce has been made along the lines suggested by your committee in the hearings of last year and along the lines suggested by the Copeland committee in the special investigation in the Senate.

We believe a big step forward has been made in efficiency and in the efficient administration of this Bureau. In view of the fact the Bureau now has one head instead of three and is more efficiently organized, I believe we could well afford to spend more than the $5,000,000 indicated in this bill in order to complete the airways in this country so that all may be made safe for flying. I think we may possibly look forward to an increase in this amount when this bill reaches the Senate as a result of a new hearing before the Budget, for which I understand some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate may ask for.

In any event I think it is only fair to warn the House that we must look forward to the expenditure eventually of an additional $5,000,000 over and above what is now included in this bill. If an increase in this item is adopted in the Senate, I think it would be wise if the House accepted such a Senate amendment. We must eventually complete the necessary air-navigation aids on our authorized and existing airways. If we do not do it this year, we will have to do it next year. By completing the job this year, or as much of it as is possible, we may be saving lives and preventing some future possible air crashes. The cost in the long run will be the same. I hope that the Senate committee will be able to develop some additional information that will permit the appropriation at this session of additional moneys to speed up the job of making our airways as safe as possible.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: On page 59, line 4, after the word "grant", strike out the "$2,714,300" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,862,800."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, it was almost 100 years ago—to be exact, in 1841—that the poet, Tennyson, said:

> For I dipt into the future, far as human eye can see,
> Saw a vision of the world and the wonder that would be,
> Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies on magic sails,
> Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales.

Certainly, this poem, which I hope I quoted correctly, with almost a century behind it, was a prophetic vision.

We are concerned here today, however, not with a vision or with an expression in a poem but with this factual item of $5,000,000 for additional air navigation facilities. We are face to face with an immediate problem. I sympathize with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], who speaks about the need for an air navigation aid at Grand Rapids. I am certain it is needed there; but I remind him, and I remind the members of the Committee this afternoon, that where Grand Rapids as a city has no radio facilities such as he desires, the entire State of West Virginia, for which I speak at this time, has not a single air navigation aid at this hour. This is the reason I have asked the addition of $148,500 to be spent in West Virginia during the next 2 years, to give us just the beginning, as has already been set up by the Bureau of Air Commerce, of five radio stations to assist us in that Commonwealth to give the men and women who travel on the air transport lines of our State the safety and the security which should be theirs.

I impress upon the Congress this afternoon I do not speak for West Virginia in a sectional manner, but I must remind the Committee there are but three States in the entire Republic which are this afternoon without any air navigation aids whatever, the State of West Virginia, for which I speak, the State of South Dakota, and the State of Vermont.

There is a great air-transport line operating from Washington, D. C., across the State of West Virginia, stopping, first of all, at my home town of Elkins, W. Va., then stopping at Charleston, the capital of West Virginia and the center of a great chemical territory which is rapidly being developed. We go then to Huntington, another important West Virginia city, where this air line will stop within a few weeks, I am informed, upon the completion of certain improvements which the local authorities are making at that airport. Thence the air line proceeds across the Ohio River into Cincinnati, on to Indianapolis, and into Chicago.

On the eastern extremity of that great air line there are air-navigation aids. On the western extremity of that air line there are air-navigation aids, but in the State of West Virginia, a mountainous country, a rugged country, we find today that air-transport system, transporting men and women both east and west twice daily, stopping now in the State, at Elkins and Charleston, and soon at Huntington—and we find new lines soon opening up from north to south, as well as the line we now have operating from east to west—yet not a single item for air-navigation aids in the program for the next 2 years is brought before us by the Bureau of Air Commerce or by the committee.

Yesterday I spoke here upon the floor and asked some questions of the splendid chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN]. He is genial and usually helpful. He said, "I may say I think the gentleman may look forward to a brighter day so far as his territory is concerned." We in West Virginia do not see any brighter day resulting in our State from that fund in 1937 or 1938, because the entire expenditure of $5,000,000 gives not a penny to a State which today has not a single dollar spent by the Bureau of Air Commerce for an air-navigation aid. Our plight is paramount.

I speak to you just now not simply as Representatives of individual States but as Members of Congress of the entire United States, interested in seeing that fair play and right dealing is given to a State where air transportation is today a responsibility not alone of the air lines but of the Government of the United States.

In West Virginia, as I have said, there is not a single radio beacon, radio beam, or other United States navigation aid on this line.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Think of this, Mr. Chairman. In this item of $5,000,000, States which already have air-navigation aids are going to have their air-navigation aids added to. Old and out-moded navigation aids are going to be modernized and new States are to be brought into the picture, but I should like to impress upon you, with all the power within me, that the State of West Virginia has not a single air-navigation aid today, and under the $5,000,000 program provided in this bill, at the end of 2 years it will not have a single air-navigation aid as there are but 212 projects to be erected by the Bureau of Air Commerce under the program brought here by the committee.

I find we are 306 on the list of projects, and they are to be taken up in the order of their priority. The chairman so stated here yesterday. I ask the Members of the Committee if there is a State today that needs air-navigation aids more than the State of West Virginia. I ask you, as Members of the Committee, as men and women who are interested in the safety and security of those who travel upon their air-transport lines, to support this amendment.

We fly, in West Virginia, of course, in good weather, but we cannot fly at night in West Virginia as they do in other States. This Committee certainly cannot say, in the words of the old song, "Wait till the sun shines, Nellie." [Laughter.] We have to fly in all types of weather, including foggy and inclement times in the Allegheny Mountains.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman and the Committee that I had the pleasure of visiting in West Virginia a couple of weeks ago in the gentleman's home town. It is a delightful State, but a very mountainous one. It does seem to me that this particular type of territory certainly needs this protection if any territory in the United States needs it, and I shall take pleasure in supporting the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman. The people of my home city greatly enjoyed his visit.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman from West Virginia if it is not a fact that at least two of the transcontinental lines which cross the United States on commercial flights carrying passengers cross over some of the mountainous section of West Virginia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The American Airlines, operating from New York to Chicago, passes directly over West Virginia and stops both at Elkins and Charleston, and within a few weeks will stop at Huntington.

Mr. NICHOLS. As I understand it, their night flights go over this mountainous country without the aid of beacons?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Absolutely; and it is a dangerous situation.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman whether any of the flights of the American Airlines at night are over West Virginia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Only the ones that fly northeast on the route near Pittsburgh.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot say anything more in support of the amendment. I deeply appreciate your patience in following my remarks. I know it is right, and I know the sum of $148,500 will give us these five radio stations which we need, and I hope and believe the committee will support the amendment that calls for this small amount of money, which insures large dividends to the safety and security of those whose use the airlines in West Virginia, which is now the State overlooked and unprovided for, but which I feel you will aid at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Yesterday I explained my attitude in connection with this portion of the bill, and I desire to augment that statement today by saying I favor the work suggested by the gentleman from West Virginia.

I believe the money which has been provided for the Department by the Appropriations Committee can be used, and, in my judgment, should be used for the installation of aids to navigation on the line mentioned by my distinguished colleague from West Virginia.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the gentleman suggest that the Committee on Appropriations designate the items of expenditure and locate them?

Mr. MEAD. Not necessarily; but I believe that earmarking by the committee, within certain limitations, would be helpful to the industry. If it had been done in the past, it would have saved millions of dollars and would have resulted in a safer airway system.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will yield further, is it, then, the thought of the gentleman that the House is in better position to determine where and in what way these appropriations should be spent than the Bureau of Air Commerce?

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that, within reasonable limits, allocation should be made and the money earmarked for experimental work, research, installation of aids to navigation, and for such other work as may be necessary, because in the past we learned that men came into this service and, believing that the development of certain features was more essential than that of others, utilized the appropriations afforded for all the work for their own particular hobby.

Mr. Chairman, there are other lines in need of aids besides the line mentioned by my colleague from West Virginia. For example, we have two lines out of the city of Buffalo operated by American Air Lines, one flying from Buffalo to Detroit and the other from Buffalo to Newark.

On both these lines the beacon lights have been installed by and are still owned and operated by the company, although they can be used by the Army, the Navy, or anyone.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I want to finish my statement first. In addition to that, we have a radio station at Elmira, but because of the mineral condition of the ground at that particular point, that radio range is almost useless. A base should be built, constructed on a platform, and that radio range beacon should be improved and perfected, but evidently the Department of Commerce has neglected to make that improvement up to date. So we have no Government-owned lights or radio system between Buffalo and Newark and between Buffalo and Detroit, except that provided by the companies.

To augment the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], the air-mail line known as AM-25, flying to Washington and Cincinnati by way of Elkins and Charleston, W. Va., is another illustration of the need of earmarking some of this money. There is a line on which there are no lights, no radio ranges, no emergency fields. All we have there is the pilot, the ship, the cargo, and a mountainous terrain. At times the fog banks make it dangerous to fly, and I think that is another illustration to prove that the committee should insist upon at least the minimum safety requirements' being carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. It is, indeed, very embarrassing and somewhat humiliating to me to have to address you on this occasion. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I know what efforts are put forward by the various committees to see that no amendments be placed on bills they report out, but feeling that such a great injustice has been done to my State, although I be a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I have no hesitation in taking this floor this afternoon and expressing my opinion and views on the subject. West Virginia has been outraged in this effort to take from it that which it justly deserves. We have an east and west air line through West Virginia, passengers emanating from the Capital going West as far as Chicago and on, and flying through the most desperate section of the country imaginable, the Allegheny Mountains. We have three stations or stops in West Virginia, Elkins, Charleston, and Huntington, and within the past 10 days the Pennsylvania Central Air Lines has gotten permission from the Department of Commerce, and will about April 1 begin its air-line service through Charleston by way of Parkersburg, my home town, on to Pittsburgh and Buffalo and other points north and south, and therefore we have air lines running east and west and north and south. Every State in the Union has been taken care of in this appropriation bill except West Virginia and Vermont. I do not understand it; I cannot understand it. I do not know what it is all about, but I am here to protest such treatment as has been given by the subcommittee with reference to these appropriations, and I mean to stand here and fight to the very last moment to see that is done in this case—not particularly for West Virginia but for every passenger that gets on a plane in New York or Washington and goes west, and for every passenger who gets on a train in Chicago and the West and goes east. Each one is vitally interested in this movement to see that proper protection be given them. When you go north the same situation prevails.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wonder if the gentleman will tell the House just how enthusiastically he appeared in behalf of the amendment when the committee was holding hearings?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. If I had had the least suggestion that this subcommittee would act the way it did. I would have been there at all times and stayed there until hell froze over before I would have yielded. I have been on subcommittees, and I know how people appear, and when they do not appear. I had no notice of this thing until within the last few hours.

Mr. CALDWELL. Could the subcommittee have been expected to do any more than to grant the full appropriations requested by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Yes. We have done it in our subcommittees before, and the gentleman has done it in his subcommittee. The gentleman talks about the Budget. That is only a scapegoat for him. They pay no more attention to the Budget when it gets in their way to do something than they do to a dog that gets in their way or hinders their progress. The Budget is all right when it is with you and it is all wrong when it is not with you. We might as well talk plain English. I know something about this business, as I have been on subcommittees, and so has the gentleman, and I am here to protest against this outrageous and unjust treatment that the committee has accorded my statement and those who are interested in safe travel by these air lines.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Was any reason given for this discrimination against West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. None in the world that I know of, and I know not now why we have been discriminated against in this way; and, for one, I resent it. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. If the gentleman from West Virginia had been as diligent while the committee was in session for approximately 2 months in considering this item as he is today, I do not believe the charge of discrimination or neglect would have been made. The committee heard these matters carefully and at great length. We went into the question of aids to navigation. We heard everyone who requested the opportunity to appear on this or any other matter relating to the bill. We granted the full appropriation requested by the Bureau of Air Commerce.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman that 2 years ago this project for air-navigation aids in the State of West Virginia was set up by the Bureau of Air Commerce. The attitude by the Bureau in not listing it to be immediately undertaken, I cannot explain. I want to say to the gentleman, in fairness, the gentleman would not be in favor of allowing an entire State to be without any air-navigation aids, would he?

Mr. CALDWELL. I would answer the gentleman by saying that neither would I be in favor of charging discrimination on the part of a subcommittee if I had been negligent in presenting the case of my State.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman now speaking did not charge that.

Mr. CALDWELL. No. I did not refer to the gentleman from West Virginia now on the floor.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say to the gentleman from Florida I have flown over Florida and I have seen your splendid airport system, built with W. P. A. money. I saw your navigation aids. Florida leads the Republic. I complement the gentleman. I trust he will compliment us for fighting for our State this afternoon.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Does the gentleman mean to imply that I was not on the job when this matter was being considered?

Mr. CALDWELL. I mean to say that you were not before the committee at any time.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Exactly. Was I supposed to do that? I am supposed to have at least some knowledge from the committee who hears these things when a member of the Appropriations Committee is part and parcel of it. There is some courtesy due here. I would like to know what the gentleman got for his State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that there is apparently some feeling manifested here this afternoon on this item. I want every Member of the House to know—and I am sincere about this—our committee sat for about 2 months, and at no time during this period, willing and anxious to hear any Member of this House on any question that he might have been interested in, have we had one single word about the treatment that has been accorded the State of West Virginia by the committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Leaving aside the question of the subcommittee and its treatment of anybody else, is it necessary to have these lights in West Virginia?

Mr. McMILLAN. I was coming to that question later on, but, Mr. Chairman, I want you to know that there has certainly not been any discrimination on the part of our subcommittee. We are all colleagues here together. I regret very much that my friend, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, feels there has been any discrimination on the part of the committee against his State.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Perhaps if you had not included Vermont I might have felt differently about it.

Mr. McMILLAN. We will not put West Virginia in the category of Maine and Vermont, I will say to the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, of course this is a big program. It is proposed here to expend $5,000,000 in the next fiscal year by this Bureau. It is a much bigger program than we have had heretofore for this work. I have every regard for our colleagues from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH and Mr. JOHNSON], and they have been very much interested in this program, and they have made an appeal to you Members on this floor for this item. It is fine, and I congratulate the State for having such men here to look out for their interests; but let us look for a moment beyond this picture as we have it here today. You have a program of some $5,000,000 to be expended by experts, men charged with the responsibility of setting up over America a network of airway lights and other aids.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am certain the gentleman would not himself place any expert up against a State without a single air-navigation aid when air passengers are crossing that State and stopping within that State.

Mr. McMILLAN. That may be true; but I will read from the testimony of Colonel Johnson, who appeared before the committee, as to the amount of money we had proposed in this bill. This is what Colonel Johnson said:

> As we come to you from the Budget we are perfectly satisfied, and we feel that no more can be wisely and expeditiously spent.

Those are the words of the man in charge of this air program for America. The bill carries $5,000,000 for this purpose, and I do not think it is proper, with due regard to my friend the gentleman from West Virginia, for us as Members of the House to undertake to designate and earmark certain particular items in an appropriation bill of this character. This should be a matter of administrative determination.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. As an illustration let us look at the matter of rivers and harbors. For years and years appropriations for rivers and harbors were handled directly by Congress. It became a national scandal, and it was referred to as "pork barrel" legislation.

A few years ago Congress decided that that policy was wrong, that it should be improved. We turned the program over to the Chief of Engineers of the Army. The Corps of Engineers now make these surveys and come in here as experts in their line and recommend the projects, and in accordance with the projects recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers we put through Congress appropriations for river and harbor improvements in lump sums.

By the same token, this air-transportation program, which is nothing more than the establishment of lanes of air travel throughout the length and breadth of the country must, of necessity, develop according to programs mapped and outlined by men who view the problem from a national standpoint. As much as I regret to oppose the wishes of individual Members, I am going to ask the House not to undertake to put in the bill items that may or may not be in conformity with a program mapped out by those in charge of the project.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say to the chairman of the committee, for whom I have the highest regard, that the Bureau of Air Commerce has never said that these air-navigation facilities were not needed in West Virginia for they have been set up but are not herein included, but for the next 2-year period with $5,000,000 to be spent, West Virginia, a mountainous country, with passenger planes stopping twice daily east and west, is denied a single dollar for air-navigation aids. I contend that is wrong.

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot yield further to my friend. The Bureau of Air Commerce officials appeared before us. The gentleman complains of no aids to navigation on air lines in his State. I have an air line in my State, if the gentleman wants to know it, from my home city to Atlanta, Ga., on which there is not an aid, but I am not here quarreling because of that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman does have aids in his State.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am standing by the program of the Bureau of Air Commerce. The head of the Bureau comes here and says that this amount of money is enough; that it is all they can use. So, Mr. Chairman, that is the picture. I am willing to leave it to the Members of the House as to whether they want to say that because, forsooth, in this State there is no airport or aid to navigation we must overturn the program.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I recently passed through Charleston, S. C., and the plane on which I was a passenger landed there. It has fine aids. We have none at all.

Mr. McMILLAN. That may be true, but unless I am able to convince the Bureau officials of the need for my city or State for such facilities I should not expect Congress to do so.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my only quarrel with the gentleman from West Virginia is that the amount designated for air-safety aids is entirely insufficient. I believe that the House ought to vote an increased amount of money. If it does not, I trust that the Senate will see to it that a sufficient amount of money is set aside when the bill goes to the Senate.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman feel that way notwithstanding the fact that the Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce has said that he knows of no way that he could wisely or properly expend more than has been appropriated in this bill?

Mr. KENNEY. Yes; I do. I feel that way because at Newark, in my State, we have the busiest airport in the world. People fly in there from all over the United States. There is only one radio beam south of that airport. There is no radio beam to the north to take care of traffic from Buffalo and other points north, west, and east. A dangerous condition exists at Newark. On days when visibility is bad, when there is a storm of any character, these planes from the north, the west, or the east have to go to the south of Newark to get on the beam. This makes a bottleneck which is particularly dangerous to the people who use the air lines coming into the Newark airport.

There is in Bergen County in my district a thousand acres, just outside of the doorway of greater New York, that this Government should, in my opinion, have taken over and preserved for aviation purposes, because there is nothing around there that can compare with it in visibility or as an airfield generally. Our greatest aviators have used that airport, but the Government did not see fit to take it over. Instead, Bendix recently acquired a large portion of it for manufacturing and aviation purposes, and the port promises to be developed commercially and preserved for aviation to the great advantage of New Jersey and New York. The least that the Government ought to do is to put at that field a radio beam in order to secure safety for the traffic at Newark, the greatest and busiest of our airports.

Gil Robb Wilson, the head of aviation in our State, has sought from the Department of Commerce such an air beam for the longest while. Others have made similar requests. I joined with them in seeking this added safety valve for aviation in our State. The answer given by the Department of Commerce was there was no money available for that purpose. There has been no objection to furnishing that radio beam, but it was said there was no money for it. If there is still no money available for that purpose at the busiest airport in this Nation then certainly more funds are needed for safety devices there and elsewhere in this country.

The gentleman from West Virginia said the amount requested should take care of his State. But the money is not earmarked for West Virginia. The increase may be used where most needed. If we vote this additional amount called for by the amendment, it will be for the experts, including Mr. Johnson, to say where this money shall go. I dislike very much to oppose any measure fostered by the gentlemen in charge of this bill, but I honestly feel that the safety of aviation in my State and other States, including the State of West Virginia, justifies this increased appropriation, and I therefore ask the Members to vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McMILLAN) there were—ayes 51, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Customs statistics: For all expenses necessary for the operation of the section of customs statistics transferred to the Department of Commerce from the Treasury Department by the act approved January 5, 1923 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 194), including personal services; rent of or purchase of tabulating, punching, sorting, and other mechanical labor-saving machinery or devices, including adding, typewriting, billing, computing, mimeographic, multigraphing, photostat, and other duplicating machines and devices, including their exchange and repair; telegraph and telephone service; freight, express, drayage; tabulating cards, stationery, and miscellaneous office supplies; books of reference and periodicals; furniture and equipment; ice, water, heat, light, and power; streetcar fare; and all other necessary and incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, $403,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 19, after the word "services", insert the following: "in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, line 4, after the figures "$403,000", insert the following language: "of which sum not to exceed $20,000 shall be available immediately."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The purchase of supplies and equipment or the procurement of services for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in foreign countries, may be made in open market without compliance with section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), in the manner common among businessmen, when the aggregate amount of the purchase or the service does not exceed $100 in any instance.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, line 9, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I may say this amendment is offered to strike out the paragraph and is for the purpose of preventing duplication.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and general expenses: For salaries of shipping commissioners, inspectors, and other personal services; to enable the Secretary of Commerce to provide and operate such motor boats and employ such persons (including temporary employees) as may be necessary for the enforcement under his direction, of laws relating to navigation and inspection of vessels, boarding of vessels, counting of passengers on excursion boats to prevent overcrowding, and to secure uniformity in the admeasurement of vessels; fees to witnesses; materials, supplies, equipment, and services, including rent and janitor service; purchase, exchange, and repair of instruments; plans and specifications; insignia, braid, and chin straps; coats, caps, and aprons for stewards' departments on vessels; and other incidental expenses of field offices, including contract stenographic reporting services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $2,114,460, of which not to exceed $50,000 may be used for the purchase by the Bureau of the boat Waleda II: Provided, That $90,000 of the amount hereon appropriated shall be available only for the payment of extra compensation for overtime services of local inspectors of steam vessels and their assistants, and United States shipping commissioners and their deputies and assistants, for which the United States receives reimbursement in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 27, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1380).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to a word in line 13, page 70, which reads "hereon." It should read "herein."

Mr. McMILLAN. That is true. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 70, line 13, strike out "heron" and insert in lieu thereof "herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Investigation of building materials: For personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and all other necessary expenses for the first year of a 2-year study of the properties and suitability of building materials, with particular reference to their use in low-cost housing, including the construction of such experimental structures as may be necessary for this purpose; and the publication and dissemination of the results thereof, $198,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 6, strike out the colon and insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to duplicate any work now being performed by the Forest Products Laboratory of the Department of Agriculture."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office force: For personal services, $560,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, line 18, strike out "$560,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$572,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Commissioner's office: For the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $150,400.

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, repair, alteration, improvement, equipment, and operation of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars and not to exceed $15,000 for purchase of trucks for fish distribution; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in the field; purchase of equipment (including rubber boots and oilskins) and apparatus; contingent expenses; pay of permanent employees not to exceed $387,030; temporary labor; not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, and not to exceed $10,000 for the purchase, collection, and transportation of specimens and other expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of aquarium, of which not to exceed $5,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, $929,000, including not to exceed $260,000 to establish or commence the establishment of those stations authorized by the act approved May 21, 1930 (46 Stat. 371), for which the need is most urgent, and for the further development of stations heretofore established pursuant to the provisions of said act, including the acquisition of necessary land, construction of buildings and ponds, water supply, improvements to grounds, purchase of equipment, and all other necessary expenses.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: On page 86, after line 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Fishery research vessel: For construction and equipment of the vessel authorized by Public, No. 447, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 21, 1934, for use in such research work with respect to ocean fisheries as the Secretary of Commerce finds will be useful to persons engaged in the fishing industry, preparation of plans and specifications for such vessel, and other necessary expenses incident to the construction and equipment of such vessel, the sum of $500,000."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am not sufficiently sanguine to expect this amendment will be adopted at this time, but I may say I went before the Committee on Appropriations about it and called it to their attention. The authorization bill was passed in 1934. My purpose in appearing with this amendment now is to start the proceedings whereby we may get this necessary research vessel. Three years have passed, and nothing has been done.

The evidence before the committee at the time this bill was reported out showed clearly the necessity for a research vessel. Later there was a bill which was reported showing the necessity for a research vessel on the Pacific coast. I call your attention to the fact that Great Britain has five research vessels, Scotland three, Ireland one, Egypt one, South Africa one, Norway two, Sweden one, Denmark three, Russia three, Germany two, Belgium one, France three, Portugal one, and Japan one.

On the Atlantic coast the United States has one 85-foot Diesel ship, stationed at Boothbay Harbor, Maine, and used as a tender for the marine fish hatchery at that place.

On the Pacific coast we have a few small vessels up around Alaska which are used in connection with the fisheries there.

There has been demonstrated a great and crying need for these vessels in order to develop the fisheries, in order to have conservation, and in order that the movement of fish shall be shown. The mackerel industry on the Atlantic coast feels the need of it. It is needed to further conservation. America is getting far behind in its fisheries research work. One reason for this is that the fishermen of America have not been organized. They are organizing, and we propose to keep up this fight.

When the bill was reported in 1934, the report showed that such a vessel was much needed, and particularly along the Atlantic coast. It was shown that the broad continental shelf of the North Atlantic coast is the most productive area within reach of our fishermen, yielding more than one-third of the total fishery harvest. In 1929 the quantity from Maine to Virginia amounted to 1,105,000,000 pounds, valued at more than $52,000,000. These fisheries gave employment to many persons engaged on vessels and shore plants directly concerned with the preparation of marine products, as well as an unknown number of persons in supporting industries, such as shipbuilding, marine hardware and supplies, cordage, textile mills, and others.

Most of the ills of the fisheries may be traced to lack of knowledge concerning the fluctuations in abundance of fish. The affairs of the industry cannot be conducted in an orderly and economic manner if it cannot be told as to the reasonable probabilities in the kind and volume of produce. The situation at present makes for a huge economic waste, occasioned by unforeseen gluts and famines. Recent scientific work has proven that the gluts of some of our most important fisheries can be foreseen, for in many cases they have been proved due to unequal reproductive success and in others to changes in hydrographic conditions. In either case, suitable data collected by a research vessel would give the clue to the impending changes.

As an illustration, the primary course of the tremendous fluctuation in the abundance of mackerel is the relative success or failure of reproduction, producing unequal numbers of mackerel of each year's spawnings. By measuring the abundance of mackerel of each year's brood as soon as its members are old enough to be caught commercially, and by observing their subsequent decline in abundance, it is possible to estimate the relative number of mackerel present in the sea in any one year and the percentage decline that is likely to occur during the following year. By summing up the estimated abundance of each age group of mackerel the total yield for the coming year can be gaged with considerable accuracy, granting that the same number of vessels operate as were engaged in the fishery in the year on which the estimate was based.

The ability to predict the general trend years in advance is no longer a matter of theory. The Scottish Fisheries Board is able to predict years in advance the general trend of the haddock and cod fisheries. Denmark has done much the same kind of work in the plaice fisheries. In 1924 the French Government tackled the man-sized job of studying the codfish and its habitat. Today they are in a position to tell their fishermen where to go to find the codfish. They know months in advance whether or not the Grand Banks of Newfoundland are likely to be productive or whether Greenland or the Labrador coast bids fair to offer the greatest returns. A research boat accompanies the fleet.

Other nations engaged in the fishery industry are pursuing similar policies, even Egypt having a 148-foot vessel for this work, Ireland a 156-foot vessel, and other nations having vessels of varying lengths.

Vessels owned by other nations have been mentioned above. The United States has on the Atlantic coast one 85-foot Diesel ship, stationed at Boothbay Harbor, Maine, and used as a tender for the marine fish hatchery at that place. It collects fish eggs and spawning fish, brings them to the hatchery, and distributes the product. It is not suitable for offshore work. The Bureau of Fisheries needs a vessel that is capable of working on the offshore banks extending from North Carolina to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and along the Atlantic coast. Such a vessel will be used at any place where it can be of the best service to the fisheries of the United States.

Last month I attended a fishery convention in Atlantic City. Frequently speakers urged the need of a research vessel to obtain scientific data on which to base satisfactory conclusions as to the depletion in fish. Particularly was this true in connection with the threatened extinction of the shad.

The need of such a vessel is just as great in the Pacific as in Atlantic waters. It is interesting to note that in the year 1932 the fisheries of the United States and Alaska provided 2,613,000,000 pounds of protein food, which modern researches have shown to be essential to the healthful diet of the Nation. The fisheries of the Pacific coast in that year yielded 1,038,802,000 pounds, or 45.8 percent of the total fish production, exclusive of shellfish, of the United States and Alaska.

The total sales value of the products of the salmon, pilchard, and tuna fisheries, excluding the sales of fresh, frozen, and mild-cured salmon, which would considerably augment the total, amounted to $47,825,000 in 1932, and this is considerably below the normal values of these products in previous years. The importance of those three great Pacific fisheries to the economic structure of the Nation is obvious.

The fisheries are exhaustible. The history of the Nation has shown the depletion of one species after another. The salmon fisheries are menaced, the pilchard and tuna fisheries have aroused great alarm, and the most valuable species of tuna, the albacore, has virtually disappeared. The next most valuable species of tuna, the blue-fin tuna, has declined from 15,000,000 pounds in 1919 to 1,000,000 pounds in 1932.

On the Atlantic coast the shad is so menaced that the greatest apprehension is felt in all shad-producing States, and in this bill provision is made for an investigation in the cause of its decline. The sturgeon has practically disappeared. The same may be said of many other species.

The experience of the International Halibut Commission has shown that fisheries such as these suffering depletion may be regulated to check the decline and maintain productivity. Governmental control can only be made effective through scientific knowledge, and scientific knowledge can only be secured through the use of scientifically planned and operated research vessels. No single State can solve the problems of these fisheries, for information as to the salmon ranges from California to Alaska, the pilchard from Mexico to British Columbia, the tuna from Puget Sound to the Equator, the cod in the North Atlantic waters, the shad along the entire Atlantic coast, the mackerel in similar areas, and so on with the various species which go to make up the fishery industry.

This great work has been neglected too long. It should begin at once, and it can only begin with suitable instrumentalities with which to secure the necessary data.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

May I say in reply to the gentleman from Virginia that the committee shares the feeling he has expressed so far as this vessel is concerned. We realize it is important to the Bureau of Fisheries. I wish it were possible to provide for such a vessel.

The gentleman from Virginia appeared before the committee, as he has told you, and there stressed the need for this vessel. I wish it were possible, Mr. Chairman, to go along with him on this program; yet here is an expenditure of $500,000 for this vessel, for which no estimate has been submitted by the Budget. In view of this situation, as the gentleman is fully aware, I must reluctantly oppose the amendment the gentleman has offered.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fishery industries: For collection and compilation of statistics of the fisheries and the study of their methods and relations, and the methods of preservation and utilization of fishery products, and to enable the Secretary of Commerce to execute the functions imposed upon him by the act entitled "An act authorizing associations of producers of aquatic products", approved June 25, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 1213), including pay of permanent employees not to exceed $60,000 of which amount not exceeding $8,620 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, compensation of temporary employees, preparation of reports, contract stenographic reporting services, temporary employees in the District of Columbia not to exceed $2,600, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, including the purchase (not to exceed $1,100), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in the field work of the Bureau of Fisheries, $73,600.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: On page 88, after line 7, insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"FISHERY MARKET NEWS SERVICE

"For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, information on the fishery industry, information on market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, and market prices of fishery products, with or without cooperation of any department or agency of the United States or any State or Territory, or subdivision thereof, compensation of temporary employees, purchase of equipment and supplies, travel, and preparation of reports, printing and binding, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $75,000, including pay of permanent employees, of which not to exceed $8,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, last year there passed, almost by unanimous consent, a bill which provided for fishery extension service, statistical information, and a market news service for the fishery industry. After full investigation by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries it was found these services so essential to agriculture were not being extended to the fisheries, which were in dire need of them. The Congress passed the bill, but it met with a Presidential veto because it was alleged that there was ample power in legislative authority then existing in Congress. I have availed myself of the statement on the part of the President and now ask that this provision may be made.

Very recently a matter came up before the Committee on Appropriations, and I am satisfied some of the gentlemen there were astounded at the inability of the Bureau of Fisheries to give current statistics on the fishery industry. They have not been able to procure the information because they do not have the funds and the resources with which to procure it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BACON. How much money is the gentleman asking in his amendment?

Mr. BLAND. Seventy-five thousand dollars. This provides a market news service for the purpose of collecting, publishing, and distributing information on the market supply and demand, commercial movements, location, disposition, and market prices of fishery products.

This amendment is designed, Mr. Chairman, to help the man who catches the fish upon the seas. It is to help him by enabling him to have distributed by this Government information as to the places of glut, the places of famine, the markets to which he may ship his fish with a reasonable prospect of getting a return. He is dealing with a perishable commodity and unless he is able to place it in a market immediately he has a decided loss upon his hands. If the fisherman, when he returns from the catch of his fish, wants to dispose of them, he is at the mercy of the buy boat; he is at the mercy of the purchaser because he is unorganized. He has not sources of information to know whether he is getting a fair price for his product or not. With a market news service distributed to them, they will have the information and will be in a position to protect themselves.

Very recently, in my own section, there was what was facetiously called a sit-down strike because of the low price given the fishermen during the run of shad in the early season. They felt they would not be able to dispose of them at a profitable price.

This amendment is not so much for the benefit of the wholesaler as it is a protection for the fishermen.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I may say that, as one member of the subcommittee, I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I thank the gentleman.

The dealer in a consuming center must know prices and stocks available. At producing centers if he is to buy economically, the dealers must know prices and the condition of the demand if they are to sell to the best advantage. At the present time buyers in consuming centers usually purchase from a few known producers or distributors, and there is a loss on account of the absence of any considerable competitive buying.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Producers usually sell to a few distributors who may be located in a few cities where fish and shellfish are accumulated for distribution. Such accumulation frequently results in low prices to the producer, high prices to the consumer, glutted markets, and wasted food. We believe this agency will be a means of putting an end to this sort of thing.

I ask the Committee to support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 50, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade marks, prints, and labels, exclusive of illustrations; and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly and annual indices, $890,000; for miscellaneous printing and binding, $75,000; in all, $965,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the Members present to the inadequacy of the appropriation or the inadequacy of the allocation of the appropriation in the amount of $890,000 for the item for the Official Gazette, and so forth.

Lest some of the Members present may have forgotten what the Official Gazette is, may I remind them that the Official Gazette is a document about as large as the one I have in my hand, which has in it the pictures or diagrams giving a description of current patents which have been granted. As a matter of fact, every Member of the Congress is only entitled to one of these volumes. Therefore if various libraries in our districts wish other volumes we cannot get them, and hence if some would-be inventor or someone whose livelihood is drawn from inventions, or someone who may feel he has some invention he would like to perfect, would like to refer to a volume of this kind, he cannot do so unless he obtains such reference in some other fashion by going to a patent attorney, which costs him money.

Unfortunately, I have not had an opportunity to prepare an amendment to cover this situation, but I wish to take this opportunity to point out to the committee in charge of the bill and the Members of the Committee of the Whole the inadequacy of this appropriation or the allocation of this money.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read to the bottom of page 91.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 51, providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. McREYNOLDS, Mr. BLOOM, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. FISH, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by a former Attorney General of Michigan at the Ford School at Highland Park, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is a former State official?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of other orders, I be allowed to address the House for 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Of course, the bill under consideration, H. R. 5779, will proceed on Thursday until it is concluded, and there will probably be two or three other little matters on the Speaker's desk at that time to take up under unanimous consent. Otherwise I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of all matters already arranged for and business to be recognized by the Speaker, he be permitted, at the conclusion of the other orders, to address the House for 50 minutes on Thursday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INSECT PESTS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I present a conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 75, making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests, for printing under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by former Supreme Court Justice John H. Clarke, over the radio last night, concerning the Supreme Court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but that comes under the same classification as the request made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], and I object.

Mr. MAVERICK. But this is the only living former Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has it not already been ordered printed in the Senate?

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not think so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, at various times in debates in the House we have heard the statement made that under title I of the Federal Housing Administration borrowers are charged 9.7 percent interest. That makes the act look as if it were a scheme for gouging borrowers instead of helping people. Title I is now out or will be in a little while, so the matter is of academic interest, but in order to bring the facts before the House I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from the Federal Housing Administrator setting out the facts and furnishing the proof that the act was designed to help and not to gouge borrowers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman whether the letter discloses the fact that before the loan is made 5 percent is taken out of the amount contracted for, before it is turned over to the borrower?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes. The letter shows that when a $100 loan is made $5 is taken out.

Mr. BOILEAU. And in addition to that he pays 5 percent interest?

Mr. BIERMANN. No, no. He amortizes the loan on the principal, but that $5 out of $100 is all the interest that he pays, but, of course, that provides also for credit investigation and for any investigation of title or anything of that kind; but technically at the end of the year it does amount to this 9.72 percent if you call it all interest.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not know whether I have the floor.

Mr. TABER. He pays 5-percent interest on the full amount of the principal loaned until maturity, does he not, under these loans? The net result is that the interest on the amount unpaid is somewhere around 9½ percent. So that is the way it works.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN]?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1937.

The Honorable FRED BIERMANN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BIERMANN: In the absence of the Administrator I have been requested to reply to your letter of March 18.

Title I of the National Housing Act authorizes the Federal Housing Administration to insure banks and other approved financial institutions against loss up to 10 percent on loans made for the repair or modernization of real property. Under the regulations issued by the Administrator the maximum amount which a borrower may be charged for a title I loan is definitely limited.

If a person wishes to borrow $100 for 1 year, the most that he can be charged is $5, payable at the time the loan is made, and this must cover the cost of the credit investigation, recording of the chattel or other mortgage, if any, and the cost of setting the loan up on the books, handling the routine collections, and all other charges.

Because of the fact, however, that the $100 is repaid in equal monthly installments of $8.34, the full amount of the loan is not outstanding for the full year. At the end of the first month only $86.66 is outstanding, at the end of the second month only $78.32 is outstanding, and so on. The average amount outstanding is $54.17. For this amount the bank receives $5. On a percentage basis this gives the bank a gross yield per annum, provided all payments are made on time, of 9.7166 percent.

This is the figure that has been the subject of recent comment in the Congress. To say, however, that this represents "interest", as the term "interest" is generally used, is, we believe, misleading.

It costs money to lend money in small amounts. It costs just as much, if not more, to make a $100 loan to the average small borrower who is unknown to the bank as it does to make the average $10,000 commercial loan. It is, therefore, impossible to make these loans at the same percentage rate charge.

It would not be correct to state that a merchant who buys an article for 50 cents and sells it for $1 has made a 100-percent profit on the transaction. Obviously, the sales costs, including overhead, must be deducted from the sales price to determine the true profit.

A banker, like a merchant, pays for the money he lends. From the charge he makes for the loan must be deducted the cost of the money to him plus the costs of making the loan, to determine his profit or true interest. To state that banks make 9.7 percent on F. H. A. loans gives the impression that this is profit, and it is this which is misleading.

Another fact to be borne in mind is that F. H. A. title I loans (with few exceptions) are repaid in monthly installments. It costs more to handle a monthly installment loan than a loan repayable annually or semiannually. The same is true in other lines. If, for example, you wish to pay your life insurance quarterly or monthly, the insurance company makes an extra charge for this privilege.

Lenders generally estimate that it costs them at least 30 cents per installment to handle a monthly payment loan. This means that it costs them $3.60 to handle a 1-year note. To secure a credit report on a borrower costs from $1 to $1.50. Other credit investigation and the cost of setting the loan up on the books probably amounts to another $3. Adding these together you will see that in the case of a $100 loan it usually costs the bank from $8 to $9 to make the loan, without allowing for any return or interest on the money invested. As a matter of fact, the average bank figures that it loses money on F. H. A. title I loans in amounts of less than $200.

You are no doubt familiar with the efforts made by the Russell Sage Foundation to stamp out the rackets in the small-loan field and to help the small borrower secure funds at low rates. In one of their recent reports the foundation states that unless State usury laws permit lenders to charge from 2½ percent to 3½ percent per month, or from 30 percent to 42 percent per annum for small loans, commercial capital will not enter the field or will enter it only in bootleg fashion at rates three or four times these rates. This report, in other words, recognizes that a distinction must be made between the interest on money loaned and the cost of lending the money, which in the case of small loans is high from a percentage standpoint.

As you know, the Federal Housing Administration has no money to lend. The money is all loaned by banks and other private financial institutions, who have a responsibility to their depositors to lend it safely and a responsibility to their stockholders to lend it profitably. Our problem under title I was to set a rate which would be fair and attractive to the borrower and which would at the same time enable a financial institution to realize a reasonable return. We feel our maximum rate of $5 discount per $100 per year is the fairest rate that could have been set. It is the lowest rate ever previously established for installment financing. It is about half the average rate used prior to the enactment of title I by concerns which had financed building repairs and modernization.

If we had set a lower maximum rate, we feel that the banks, had they made these loans at all, would have made them only to the preferred credit risks, thus eliminating the average small borrower who generally is most in need of credit. On the other hand, had we permitted a larger maximum rate there is no doubt that many loans which were rejected under the $5 maximum would have been made. Our effort was to strike a happy medium—to be fair both to borrower and lender.

Banks and other financial institutions are, of course, encouraged to lend at a rate less than our maximum wherever conditions permit. We estimate that approximately 25 percent of the total title I loans insured to date have been made at a rate less than the maximum permitted. In Washington, for example, all loans are made at a $4.15 discount rate, which gives a yield to the bank of about 2 percent less than the maximum permitted. Most of the large loans throughout the country generally are made at less than the maximum permitted, some of the larger loans having been made at as low as 3-percent simple interest.

The public itself, which is familiar with the rates which must be charged on small loans and to cover installment purchases, has had no complaint to make of the rates which we have established. We believe the fact that close to one million and a half separate properties have been modernized under the provisions of title I is evidence of the fact that the public has considered these rates to be eminently fair.

If there is any additional information which I can send you on this subject, please call on me. I have no objection to your making whatever use you care to of this statement.

Assuring you that we appreciate the interest you have taken in the Federal Housing Administration, I am,

Very respectfully yours,

L. R. GIGNILLIAT, Jr.,
Deputy Administrator.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the special orders already granted, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that another special order has just been made for 50 minutes?

Mr. COOLEY. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALLEN of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LUDLOW (at the request of Mr. GREENWOOD), for this week, on account of death in his family.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 328. An act for the relief of the estate of Letha F. McCubbin, the estate of Mary B. Hodge, and the estate of Walter H. Mansfield;

H. R. 1231. An act for the relief of John Munroe;

H. R. 3067. An act for the relief of John Edgar White, a minor;

H. R. 3201. An act for the relief of Bertha M. Harris;

H. R. 5487. An act to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 46, sec. 643); and

H. J. Res. 221. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, Dallas, Tex., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 24, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at 10:30 a. m., Wednesday, March 24, 1937. Business to be considered: Hearings on H. R. 3683, conveyance of portion of Oakland, Calif., post-office site for street-widening purposes, and H. R. 3135, for the exchange of land in Hudson Falls, N. Y., for the purpose of the post-office site.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will meet on Wednesday morning, March 24, 1937, at 10:30 to consider the following bills: H. R. 3424, for the relief of certain aliens illegally in the United States; H. R. 4291, to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, March 24, 1937. Business to be considered: Hearing on natural-gas bills. In view of the hearing which the committee held last year, it is hoped that the hearing this year will be limited to new matter as far as possible.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Wednesday, March 24, 1937, at 10:30 a. m., to hold hearings on the project for the modification of the Calumet-Sag Channel, Ill.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

There will be a hearing before subcommittee no. 4 of the Committee on the Judiciary at 10:30 a. m., Saturday, March 27, 1937, on the bill H. R. 2271, to provide for trials and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1937

The Reverend Russell J. Clinchy, D. D., minister of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, who has watched over the thoughts and ways of man since time began, we would come before Thee to acknowledge that we are not straws blown in a wind of chance, but that we came from Thy mind and love and are moving toward some appointed destiny formed by Thy thought. Before all else that we are, we know that we are children of God and that Thou hast set not only the considerations of this life but eternity in our hearts. Therefore, we would shape the affairs of this life which we know on earth, not in the passing terms with which children build cities of blocks conscious that they are for a moment and will be tumbled down only to be built over again by another hand, but with the faith that, as we are of God and are going to God, we can build with enduring materials a life which will contain significance and be fraught with glory and power. For such adventure we shall need Thy touch and Thy love, which will give us heart to endure the long struggle without the loss of faith; the understanding to see afar off the shining city of God on earth even through the mists of our slothfulness, stupidity, and selfishness; the awareness of soul which will interpret suffering and frustration as gates which open unto life to those who are pure of mind and lowly of heart. Be with us and be our God, even as Thou hast been the God of our fathers, and as we pray Thou wilt be the God of our children in the ages to come. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, March 23, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting several nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war", approved August 31, 1935, as amended, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Mr. BLOOM, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. FISH, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

STABILIZATION OF DOLLAR VALUE—NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that the Senate program may not become too monotonous, tomorrow, or on the next legislative day, after the morning hour shall have been concluded I shall address the Senate on the subject of the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar. At that time I shall introduce a bill and explain it.

SAFETY IN THE AIR—ARTICLE FROM FORTUNE MAGAZINE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have in my hand a very remarkable article from the current Fortune Magazine on The Air Is How Safe? It is too long for printing in the RECORD, but it is such an interesting and convincing article, and in my opinion a very correct article, that I think this much attention should be given to it.

TITLE TO LAND AT GAITHERSBURG, MD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to accept title to a certain parcel of land at Gaithersburg, Md., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COURT ORDERS RESTRAINING ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS (S. DOC. NO. 41)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the National Mediation Board, submitting the information requested by Senate Resolution 82 (agreed to Feb. 17, 1937), calling for certain information concerning injunctions or judgments issued or rendered by Federal courts since March 4, 1933, in cases involving acts of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following Senate resolution of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolution to memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033

Whereas previous sessions of the General Assembly of Ohio have enacted legislation for the purpose of improving the housing conditions of the low-income group of the population of the State and for the purpose of encouraging and making possible the clearance of expensive and socially undesirable slum areas in the cities and towns of the State; and

Whereas, pursuant to said laws, housing authorities have been created in many Ohio cities, including Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo, Warren, and Youngstown, to administer said laws and carry out the purpose of the legislation; and

Whereas low-rent housing and slum-clearance programs have been undertaken in several cities with the aid of funds from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works; and

Whereas no further moneys are now available to continue this program unless a permanent Federal agency is created with power to make loans and grants for housing, and unless Congress makes the necessary appropriations for a continuation of the program; and

Whereas the Senate of Ohio, during the ninety-first general assembly, has memorialized Congress to enact this type of desirable housing legislation, as have many Ohio city councils, mayors, housing authorities, as well as many civic organizations and individuals; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033, which, if enacted will make possible the continuation of the low-cost housing activities in this and other States, and embodies the major provisions of the Housing Act passed by the United States Senate last year and the passage of which was recommended by the Ohio Senate: Be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact, at the earliest date possible, the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill No. 1685, and that the House of Representatives be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact the identical measure, being H. R. 5033; be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States be and is hereby requested to use the influence of his great office to further the enactment of this measure; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Ohio be, and they are hereby, requested to do everything within their power to carry out the purposes of this resolution; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Senator HUGO BLACK, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor; to Representatives HENRY B. STEAGALL, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives; to Senators ROBERT J. BULKLEY, and VIC DONAHEY, of Ohio; and to the following Members of the House of Representatives from Ohio: JOSEPH A. DIXON, HERBERT S. BIGELOW, BYRON B. HARLAN, FRANK L. KLOEB, FRANK C. KNIFFIN, JAMES G. POLK, ARTHUR W. ALESHIRE, BROOKS FLETCHER, JOHN F. HUNTER, THOMAS A. JENKINS, HAROLD K. CLAYPOOL, ARTHUR P. LAMNECK, DUDLEY A. WHITE, DOW W. HARTER, ROBERT T. SECREST, WILLIAM R. THOM, WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, LAWRENCE E. IMHOFF, MICHAEL J. KIRWAN, MARTIN L. SWEENEY, ROBERT CROSSER, ANTHONY A. FLEGER, JOHN MCSWEENEY, HAROLD G. MOSIER.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas a bill, no. 1369, providing that the transportation in interstate commerce of advertisements of alcoholic beverages be prohibited has been introduced in the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas the advertising of such beverages has assumed such proportions that its continuance threatens to defeat the purpose of the intelligent use of such beverages, for which purpose the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was repealed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the Houses of Congress be urged to pass the said bill, and that the members of the Vermont delegation in Congress be requested to lend their favorable support to this measure; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each member of the Vermont delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, favoring the enactment of legislation amending section 402 of the Naturalization Act, so as to reduce the $10 fee in subsection (a) thereof to $2 as applied to persons covered by the provisions of section 377 of said act, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. VANDENBERG.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, favoring the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court in certain instances, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. VANDENBERG.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a town meeting of citizens of Lexington, Mass., protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of New York City, favoring the prompt enactment of the so-called Wagner-Steagall low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2257) to provide old-age compensation for the citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GIBSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens, being members of William French Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Bellows Falls, Vt., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rutland County, Vt., praying for the enactment of neutrality legislation laying mandatory embargoes on arms, munitions, and other essential war materials, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present for notation in the RECORD a resolution adopted by members of the American Labor Party of Bronx County, N. Y., making a strong appeal for the passage of the President's proposed court reorganization bill, and likewise a largely signed memorial from citizens of Rome, N. Y., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposal. I ask that the resolution and memorial may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the nature of the request of the Senator from New York?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York presented a resolution and memorial and asked that they be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. McNARY. And noted in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. And noted in the RECORD. That action will be taken.

(The resolution, presented by Mr. COPELAND, adopted by members of the American Labor Party of the third and fifth assembly districts of Bronx County, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States; and the memorial, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Rome, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, or any similar legislation, were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.)

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted by the Association of Heating Contractors of Greater New York, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation extending title I of the National Housing Act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Mid-Town Tenants' Association, of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Steagall low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York League for Speech Improvement, New York City, favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 1634) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Rochester (N. Y.) Society of Architects, favoring the allocation of additional funds to the Public Works Administration in aid of public works projects, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Westchester County Chapter of the New York State Society of Professional Engineers, Inc.; the Town Board of Greece, Monroe County; Local Union No. 13, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steam-Fitters; Local Union No. 27, International Union of Elevator Constructors, Operators, and Starters; Local Union No. 72, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; and Local Union No. 86, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, of Rochester, N. Y., favoring the creation of a Federal Department of Public Works, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a convention of the Queens County (N. Y.) Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, endorsing the proposal for a 30-hour workweek, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a convention of Queens County (N. Y.) Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, favoring the enactment of legislation making it a treasonable offense for an American-born Communist to preach sedition and disrespect for the American flag or Government, and providing adequate punishment therefor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Civic Association, of Hollis, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of House bill 5474, to amend section 1001 of the Revenue Act of 1932, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, New York City, N. Y., favoring the prompt ratification of treaties formulated at the recent Inter-American Conference at Buenos Aires, Argentina, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of members of Peace Council No. 89, Daughters of America, of Schenectady, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Reynolds-Starnes bills, providing restriction of immigration and certain regulations relative to aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Eugene S. Smith Council, No. 189, of Syosset, Long Island, and Warren G. Harding Council, No. 118, of Mineola, both of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of more stringent alien and immigration-restriction legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York (N. Y.) Board of Trade, protesting against the enactment of legislation materially increasing the cost of maintenance and operation of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Capper-Culkin bill, restricting liquor advertisements, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Westford, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Capper-Culkin bill, restricting liquor advertisements; and also the so-called Hatch-Fish bill, relative to the narcotic traffic, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Catskill, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation suspending permanently (if necessary) and restricting all immigration for a period of at least 10 years, so that the United States may be freed from the disloyal acts or utterances of persons attempting to overthrow the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution of the Bronx (N. Y.) Council of the Emergency Peace Campaign, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment of a civilian commission to study and define national defense needs, and also legislation to unite the Army, the Navy, and the air forces in the interest of economy and efficiency, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of members of the Genesee Brotherhood of the Genesee Baptist Church, of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the placing of embargoes on shipments of basic war materials, including cotton and oil in addition to munitions, to belligerent nations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Nevada, and, in accordance with the rule, ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, is as follows:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Resettlement Administration to provide adequate credit for restocking ranches in Nevada and other Western States, so as to restore their earning power and land values, with the rate of interest on such loans reduced to the minimum

Whereas the stock ranches in Nevada and other Western States, comprising the livestock area of the Western States, have suffered a decided depreciation in the livestock therein; and

Whereas farming in these States is largely incidental to the livestock business, requiring an adequate livestock population in order to maintain the farms, without which farming in this area is doomed to bankruptcy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to provide, through the Resettlement Administration, adequate credit for restocking farms and ranches in Nevada and other Western States at a minimum rate of interest; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that copies thereof be transmitted to each of our Senators in the United States Senate, to our Representatives in Congress, and to the Resettlement Administration at Washington, D. C.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to enact certain changes in the naturalization laws

Whereas section 377 of the laws governing naturalization proceedings provides as follows:

"Any person not an alien enemy who resided uninterruptedly within the United States during the period of 5 years next preceding July 1, 1914, and was on that date otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States, except that he had not made the declaration of intention required by law and who during or prior to that time, because of misinformation regarding his citizenship status erroneously exercised the rights and performed the duties of a citizen of the United States in good faith, may file the petition for naturalization prescribed by law without making the preliminary declaration of intention required of other aliens, and upon satisfactory proof to the court that he has so acted may be admitted as a citizen of the United States upon complying in all respects with the other requirements of the naturalization law"; and

Whereas under the interpretation of the phrase "upon complying in all respects with the other requirements of the naturalization law" such persons are required to pay a $10 fee under the following requirements of section 402 of the naturalization laws: "(2) For making, filing, and docketing a petition for citizenship, and issuing a certificate of citizenship if the issuance of such certificate is authorized by the court, and for the final hearing on the petition, $10"; and

Whereas such interpretation has resulted in hardship to many thousands of persons who would be good citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Michigan Legislature hereby petitions the Congress of the United States to enact such changes in section 402 of the naturalization law so as to reduce the $10 fee in subsection (a) to $2 as applies to persons covered by the provisions of section 377 of the naturalization law; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolution urging Congress to authorize additional Justices of the Supreme Court in certain instances in accordance with the program of the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt

Whereas the President of the United States has requested the Congress to authorize additional Justices of the Supreme Court in certain instances; and

Whereas the purpose of this request is to provide assistance to the Supreme Court and prevent delay and obstruction in the administration of justice; and

Whereas the effect of this proposal will be to hasten those urgently needed governmental and economic reforms demanded by the people which have been obstructed by the political and economic opinions of certain present Supreme Court Justices; and

Whereas the public welfare has suffered almost irreparable harm as a result of decisions denying the protection of labor legislation to the worker, abolishing the assistance given farmers and otherwise placing legal technicality above the general welfare; and

Whereas the action proposed by the President of the United States would remedy this condition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the House of Representatives of the Michigan Legislature respectfully urges the Congress of the United States, and in particular the Representatives of Michigan in the Congress, to vote in the affirmative upon this question of authorizing additional Justices of the Supreme Court in certain instances, to the end that justice may be served and the principles of democracy may prevail in the Union; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Michigan Members in the Senate House of Congress.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the Knoxville (Tenn.) Housing Authority, endorsing the pending low-cost housing bill. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution referred to may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KNOXVILLE HOUSING AUTHORITY,
Knoxville, Tenn., March 22, 1937.

The Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As secretary of the Knoxville Housing Authority, I am instructed to forward to you a copy of the following resolution unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Knoxville Housing Authority on March 18, 1937:

"Whereas there exists in Knoxville and other cities throughout the country a great need for decent, safe, and sanitary housing within the means of families in the lower-income groups; and

"Whereas the continued existence of slum areas in American cities should on longer be tolerated,

"We urge the Congress and President of the United States to enact into law the Wagner-Steagall low-rent housing bill."

Respectfully submitted.

KNOXVILLE HOUSING AUTHORITY,
DAVID A. JOHNSTON, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1088) for the relief of the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 236) thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3630) for the relief of E. C. Willis, father of the late Charles R. Willis, a minor, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 237) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1094) for the relief of Clark F. Potts and Charles H. Barker, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 238) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1089. A bill for the relief of Charles M. Perkins (Rept. No. 239); and

H. R. 1091. A bill for the relief of Capt. J. H. Merriam, Supply Corps, United States Navy (Rept. No. 240).

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 590) for the relief of the estate of Grace M. Moore, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 241) thereon.

He also, from the same committee to which was referred the bill (S. 1590) for the relief of Warren J. Fox, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 242) thereon.

He also, from the same committee to which was referred the bill (S. 420) for the relief of A. D. Hampton, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 243) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 102) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 244) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported certain amendments to the bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, highway grade-crossing protective devices, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation, heretofore reported by him from that committee, and submitted a report(No. 245) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF WOOL PRODUCTION, TRANSPORTATION, AND MARKETING—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 90, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 90) increasing the limit of expenditures for the investigation of the production, transportation, and marketing of wool (submitted by Mr. ADAMS on Mar. 3, 1937).

The amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was, in line 7, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, agreed to July 10, 1935, authorizing a special committee to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, as extended by Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, agreed to June 6, 1936, is hereby increased by $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

By Mr. BORAH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) proposing an amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SALMON FISHING PRIVILEGES IN ALASKAN WATERS

Mr. BONE. I submit a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to take steps to safeguard from the aggression of Japanese fishermen certain salmon fishing privileges in Alaskan extraterritorial waters. I desire to make some remarks concerning the matter a little later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 98) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is requested to take all necessary steps as quickly as possible to safeguard from aggression by Japanese fishermen, and to secure recognition of, the special rights of the United States in the salmon fisheries in Alaskan extraterritorial waters.

That the Secretary of State is requested to enter into negotiations with the Imperial Japanese Government to this end.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN SENATE RECORDS TO CUSTODY OF ARCHIVIST

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 99), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed, upon the requisition of the Archivist of the United States, in accordance with sections 3 and 6 of the National Archives Act (48 Stat. 1122–24), to transfer to his custody for storage and preservation in The National Archives Building, any and all archives and records of the United States Senate which the Secretary of the Senate may deem not necessary for use in the current business of the Senate or which he may consider to be in such physical condition that they cannot be used without danger of damage to them, and for which, in his opinion, he is unable to provide adequate or safe storage.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution just submitted by me I ask that an explanatory statement in relation to the matter and also the regulations governing the temporary withdrawal by governmental agencies of material deposited in The National Archives Building, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement and regulations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM STATEMENT MADE BY DEPUTY EXAMINER REGARDING SENATE RECORDS

None but the more recent records are in good condition. The older legislative papers need repair. They are folded in the original manner, they are dirty and brittle and cannot be handled without danger of serious damage. I have found documents dampened by the rain which had seeped through the skylight; although they are stored in metal containers, they are not free from danger, as they are accessible to the dust and soot that is blown through the roof. With few exceptions, no documents prior to the Fiftieth Congress are in envelopes. They are grouped by Congresses, but little numerical or alphabetical order within the Congresses is maintained, and many papers have been misplaced. Since the Fiftieth Congress many of the papers are in envelopes, but they are still folded and the proper sequence is not maintained. In view of the inadequate organization, and the conditions of storage, the collection is of little practical use.

The Chief of the Division of Repair and Preservation has pointed out the condition of the volumes stored in the basement.

From the standpoint of historical as well as intrinsic interest, this is perhaps the most valuable collection of records in the entire Government. It touches all phases of governmental activity and contains a vast amount of research material that has never been used. It is almost never used by the Senate, and there is little reason why it should be retained by that body, particularly in view of the absence of adequate facilities in the Capitol for its care. There is every reason why the entire collection should be removed, repaired, and reorganized into its proper order. I am recommending the transfer of all records prior to the Seventy-first Congress and certain records for the most recent Congresses. Papers accompanying private bills and matter submitted as evidence are often carried from one Congress to another as bills are reintroduced. It is believed that the Secretary's office would desire to keep that type of material for the last few Congresses.

There are 3,652 cubic feet and 6,488 linear feet of records in the entire collection.

JANUARY 26, 1937.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING THE TEMPORARY WITHDRAWAL BY AGENCIES OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OF MATERIAL DEPOSITED IN THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES BUILDING

The following regulation has been made and promulgated by the Archivist of the United States pursuant to the authority vested in him by The National Archives Act, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122–1124):

Public records in the custody of the Archivist may, with his approval, be withdrawn from The National Archives Building temporarily, for official use, by any agency of the Government of the United States. All applications for permission to withdraw records from The National Archives Building shall be made in writing on forms furnished by the Archivist. Such forms shall be signed by the head of the agency making application or, in his name, by his representative, thereunto duly authorized.

R. D. W. CONNOR,
Archivist of the United States.

PROBLEMS OF FEDERAL TAXATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LA FOLLETTE

[Mr. NYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of Federal taxation, delivered by Senator LA FOLLETTE before the Federal tax committee of the American Bar Association on Mar. 20, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR COPELAND

THE PRESIDENT'S COURT PROPOSAL—ARTICLE BY HAL H. HAYNES

[Mr. MCKELLAR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Hal H. Haynes entitled "Lawyers, Judges, and Written Constitution", published in the Bristol Herald-Courier, of Bristol, Va.-Tenn., in the issue of Mar. 21, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed, and the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the calendar was called yesterday. I do not know that there is occasion for calling it again today. I ask that that order be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELIGIBILITY OF JOSEPH P. KENNEDY FOR MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 110.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) limiting the operation of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, with respect to qualification of member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110), which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as a member of the United States Maritime Commission and his service on said Commission shall not be deemed to be in violation of the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, notwithstanding any pecuniary interest he may now have or may have had within 3 years prior to his appointment in any carrier by water, shipbuilder, contractor, or other firm or corporation or in any person who derives a substantial portion of his revenue from any business associated with ships or shipping.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have always entertained the idea that the chairman of a committee should make a full and complete disclosure of what occurred before the committee before asking the Senate to act on a measure of which he has charge. It is very unusual for the chairman of a committee to ask that a measure be made the unfinished business and then sit down.

Mr. NYE. A sit-down strike!

Mr. MCNARY. Such a thing is not going to occur in the Senate if I have my way. [Laughter.]

I stated a few days ago my views on the subject. I may be compelled briefly to restate them today. Before the Commerce Committee certain evidence was produced to support this very unusual joint resolution, the first of its kind in the history of the United States. However, this is a day of unprecedented action, so I shall not further discuss that phase of the matter.

I ask the chairman of the Commerce Committee, who is in possession of the facts in the case, to make disclosure through a statement. There is nothing wrong in that request. Such disclosure will give Senators now present an opportunity to consider intelligently and to pass upon the joint resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, out of courtesy to my friend from Oregon I shall submit a few facts regarding the matter. I wish to say to him that I have no purpose to indulge in a sit-down strike, because I do not believe in that course of procedure.

Some days ago the President sent to the Senate the name of Joseph P. Kennedy, of New York, to be a member and Chairman of the Maritime Commission. Mr. Kennedy very reluctantly consented to this action on the part of the President. I say that he did it reluctantly. I speak advisedly in so saying. I have in my hand a personal letter from Mr. Kennedy under date of March 11, wherein he speaks about his great unwillingness to leave his private affairs to resume governmental activity.

There can be no question about the desirability of Mr. Kennedy's membership on the Martime Commission. I am frank to say for myself that the first glimmer of hope I have had for a long time came with the presentation to the Senate of the nominations for the Maritime Commission, and particularly the nomination of Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy is a very well-to-do man. Never having been in that happy condition myself, I am able only to surmise that men in his circumstances do not know just exactly what their holdings and possessions may be. When the matter was presented to Mr. Kennedy by the President and the request was made by him, Mr. Kennedy said, "I am not sure about my eligibility. I hold 1,100 shares of Todd Shipbuilding Co. stock."

Following that disclosure, if I may call it such, the President submitted the matter to the Attorney General, who ruled that under the law that holding did not represent a substantial interest, and that the question might be waived. Later, however, Mr. Kennedy himself, a very manly gentleman, was worried about his eligibility and wrote me, giving a full list of his holdings in any corporations which might be considered connected with shipping. Among those holdings it was found that he had a $20,000 mortgage on a very small oil tanker belonging to no fleet but operated by Mr. Kennedy's brother-in-law. Under a literal interpretation of the law the ownership of this mortgage would represent a direct interest in shipping, that being another feature of the same paragraph of the bill. When this information came to me I forwarded it, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to the Attorney General who, apparently through one of his assistants, felt that it did raise a question of eligibility.

The proposal which is now before us and which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] has asked me to explain was presented day before yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The joint resolution seeks to make Mr. Kennedy eligible for this position in spite of the literal wording and provisions of the law.

I admit that it is an unusual procedure; it may be novel; but I do not think it is at all revolutionary. Here is a man who, in the opinion of the members of the Commerce Committee, and I dare say of all the Members of the Senate, is felt to possess unusual qualifications for a position requiring great ability to fill. I may say that unless we have the shipping situation dealt with intelligently and aggressively we are going to have no American merchant marine. Most of our shipping lines are just one jump ahead of the sheriff, and unless the Nation is afforded some relief in the building of new ships, in 10 years' time our flag will practically disappear from the seas, and at the end of that period we will have no ships, in my judgment, except the 20 or 30 ships which were built under the Jones-White Act.

We must have an informed, aggressive, capable Commission. I am sure it is not an unreasonable request, when we have an opportunity to vote for a man of the capabilities of Mr. Kennedy, if for no other reason than to placate his own mind, to make him certain and relieve him of all question of his eligibility, we ought to do it. Further, for the protection of anything the Maritime Commission may do in the future, having in view the possibility of a taxpayer's suit or some other legal action, we should take this action.

Mr. President, I think I have given to the Senate a frank statement of the facts, and I close by simply expressing the hope that the Senate, without hesitation, will pass the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understood the statement to be made by the chairman of the committee, either from memory, orally, or by reading a letter, that Mr. Kennedy expressed a desire that his nomination not be brought up for confirmation until he had reasonable time to dispose of his holdings.

Mr. COPELAND. The Attorney General——

Mr. McNARY. I am not speaking about the Attorney General. I am asking about Mr. Kennedy's expression of desire.

Mr. COPELAND. I did have a letter from Mr. Kennedy, which I appear not to have before me, in which he expressed a desire to dispose of his stock in the Todd Shipbuilding Co. by placing it in the hands of certain brokers in New York. Let me read the language. I have it here:

> The procedure I should like to follow, if agreeable to your committee, is to turn this stock over to Mr. Elisha Walker, senior partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., with instructions to dispose of it within the next 60 days. The reason for my putting a time limit on it is because very rarely, if ever, is any of the stock sold; and, as the newspapers have already given notice that I propose to sell it, I feel there will be a thin market and it will take a little time to dispose of it. I shall put it beyond my control, however, before taking oath of office. I think an understanding of these facts will clear my position much more satisfactorily, at least in my own mind.

So, Mr. Kennedy, by this act, will place beyond his control any ownership of this stock. The other stock that he has is in an irrevocable trust created for the benefit of his children. The third matter in question is the one which brings this joint resolution to us—the fact that he has a $20,000 mortgage on a very small oil tanker.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator object to changing the form of the joint resolution in the interest of candor? Why not frankly say that section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, shall not apply to the appointment of Mr. Kennedy instead of the Senate undertaking to stultify itself by saying that a violation is not a violation?

Mr. COPELAND. If we were to change the language as suggested, would it then be in a form which would command the vote of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes, Mr. President. Personally, I am very anxious to have Mr. Kennedy confirmed.

Mr. COPELAND. Then let the Senator suggest the exact form of language he would prefer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me the joint resolution might preferably read:

> Resolved, etc., That the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, shall not apply to the apointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator would not recite "notwithstanding any pecuniary interest that he has"?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No. By the use of this phraseology we would finish the matter; we would eliminate Mr. Kennedy from the provisions of this particular section.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the form of the joint resolution. The action I am anxious to have taken, and the action the committee desires to have taken, is that the joint resolution may be in a form which will make clear that Mr. Kennedy himself may have a clear conscience, and that those of us who ultimately vote for his confirmation may be of the same state of mind.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, my sole feeling about the matter is that there was a reason for including in the law a prohibition of this general nature, and technically I think Mr. Kennedy probably falls within the prohibition. I think, however, there are perfectly obvious reasons why the prohibition should not apply to Mr. Kennedy; and I think we ought frankly to say so, instead of setting a precedent for, perhaps, shadow boxing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In my judgment, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan would not change the effectiveness of the joint resolution, and I do not think it is objectionable; but in view of the record which has been made before the committee, adduced at the instance of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and in view of the facts which were conceded day before yesterday when the joint resolution was introduced, I believe it should take something like this form:

> That the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, shall not apply to Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy, notwithstanding the fact that he may have some pecuniary interest in shipping.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection in the world to that language.

Mr. ROBINSON. In other words, while I have had no opportunity to consider the Senator's amendment, I think the idea underlying the change he suggests would perhaps improve the joint resolution; but I think, as suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], that there ought to be a reference to the provisions of the statute from which we are exempting Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, would it read like this?—

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201–b of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, the appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as a member of the United States Maritime Commission, and his service on said Commission shall not be—

What?

Mr. ROBINSON. "Shall not be deemed in disregard or violation of law."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I think the suggestions that have been made would improve the form of the joint resolution; but it seems to me the object could be accomplished simply by saying:

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, Joseph P. Kennedy is declared eligible for appointment under the terms of said act.

Mr. ROBINSON. That goes back to substantially the present form of the joint resolution; but it is entirely acceptable to me, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the language submitted by the Senator from Maine be taken down as the proposed amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Is this what the Senator proposes?

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, the appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as a member of the United States Maritime Commission, and his service on said Commission, shall not be deemed in violation of law.

Mr. WHITE. That was not what I said.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may the other Senators know what the proposed amendment to the joint resolution is? I think we are entitled to know something about it.

Mr. WHITE. If I may repeat what I said a moment ago, if I were going to offer this amendment—and I am not offering it as an amendment, because I do not approve of it—if I were to do so, I should say something like this:

> That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, Joseph P. Kennedy is declared to be eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may the proposed amendment be read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read.

The Official Reporter (Percy E. Budlong) read the suggested amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this may not be a very important inquiry; time may answer it; but, as I understand, under the proposed amendment the Senate recognizes the fact that Mr. Kennedy is not eligible for appointment unless the law is amended, and the effect of enacting the joint resolution will be to amend the law; and until the joint resolution is approved by both Houses and signed by the President we cannot consider the nomination of Mr. Kennedy. I understood the majority view of the committee to be that under the law Mr. Kennedy is nevertheless qualified to fill this important office. I do not know. I wish to ask more distinguished lawyers than myself whether I am right about that particular interpretation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, I believe that Mr. Kennedy is eligible at the present time. I believe that the opinion of the Attorney General was correct, to the effect that the ownership of 1,100 shares in the Todd Shipbuilding Co. was not such a substantial interest as to make Mr. Kennedy ineligible. I further believe that the possession of this irrevocable trust, which has been held by the Treasury Department to be such, does not make Mr. Kennedy ineligible; nor does the holding of a mortgage on a small tanker, not a part of any common carrier, as collateral security for a loan make him ineligible.

With all due respect for the great legal ability of the Senator from New York, however, I disagree with him on the proposition that the joint resolution as proposed to be amended declares the ineligibility of Mr. Kennedy. The joint resolution as proposed to be amended would simply provide that Mr. Kennedy shall be eligible, notwithstanding any ineligibility which may develop in the law. That is not because a majority of the members of the committee believe, I think, that Mr. Kennedy is ineligible at the present time, but the action is proposed in order that in entering upon this very important constructive work—one of the most arduous missions confided to any citizen of the United States in the recent past—Mr. Kennedy may do so without any possible embarrassment which might arise by reason of any question whatever of his eligibility.

It seems to me to be entirely consistent for Senators to believe that Mr. Kennedy is eligible at the present time; but for the purpose of relieving any possible embarrassment or preventing any possible impairment of his efficiency in the office to which he has been appointed, we should pass the joint resolution making his eligibility unquestionably clear.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I understand that the probability is that Senators will not be called upon to consider the nomination of Mr. Kennedy until the joint resolution shall have been approved by the President.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. I still desire to insist that by amending the joint resolution as is proposed the Senate will recognize the fact that ineligibility exists at the present time; and I am speaking as one who is extremely interested in the confirmation of Mr. Kennedy, because I think the country is fortunate in having a man of such extraordinary ability to fill this very important office.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the original joint resolution raise as much question, and recognize as having as much force the contention that Mr. Kennedy is not eligible, as the proposed amended form of resolution? Both of them are predicated upon a doubt as to eligibility, which the Senate is desirous of removing.

Mr. WAGNER. I have not carefully read the original resolution, but I thought it reflected the thought expressed by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], namely, that the circumstances under which these stocks are held do not make Mr. Kennedy ineligible to hold the office to which he has been appointed. However, if the nomination is not to be considered for several days, it does not make any difference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think there is sufficient difference between the joint resolution as presented and as it is proposed to amend it to justify the slightest controversy. The joint resolution as proposed declares that the appointment of Mr. Kennedy as a member of the Commission shall not be deemed to be in violation of the act limiting appointments, with certain qualifications, notwithstanding any pecuniary interest he may now have or may have had within 3 years in shipping interests. That unquestionably makes him eligible if there is a doubt as to his eligibilty.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], as modified at the instance of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], would accomplish exactly the same thing by declaring that, notwithstanding the provisions of the act, Mr. Kennedy shall be considered eligible. So that, so far as the two propositions are concerned, the legal difference is very slight, if any exists. Both the original resolution and the amendment recognize the existence of a doubt as to the eligibility of Mr. Kennedy, and, so far as I am concerned, I admit that a doubt existed in my mind as to his eligibility when I introduced the joint resolution. My purpose in offering the resolution is to clear the matter of any doubt.

I can readily see that Mr. Kennedy might be held eligible even though he has these comparatively small holdings connected with shipping interests; but Mr. Kennedy is scrupulous about the matter. He would prefer to have that question settled before the matter of his confirmation is determined, and I think it is right and fair that that may be done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to point out to the Senator that when I have to vote on the resolution, the problem which confronts me is different under the two hypotheses. As the resolution is originally presented, I am required to vote that I do not deem Mr. Kennedy's infirmity to run counter to the law, whereas I think it probably does. Under the alternative form, I am permitted to vote that Mr. Kennedy shall be exempted from such ineligibility if it does exist, and I am not required to say something concerning which I have grave doubt. I am sure the Senator sees the distinction I am trying to make.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, I wish to cooperate in establishing Mr. Kennedy's eligibility.

Mr. ROBINSON. The distinction is not quite as clear as daylight.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is very clear to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the assurance of the Senator from Michigan that there is a distinction in his own mind, and with my own opinion that there is no material difference in the effect of the two propositions, I make no objection to the amendment, so far as I am concerned. There have been instances heretofore, though I cannot at the moment cite the precedents, where the Congress has taken some action relative to the eligibility of nominees under statutes. My attention was called to that matter by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], but, as already stated, my memory is not definite enough to recall the precedents accurately. But whether there be precedents or not, I think everyone in this Chamber has high regard for Mr. Kennedy as a conscientious, broadly experienced, capable officer, possessing great powers for decision and action; and under those circumstances, if there were no precedents, I should feel justified in asking the Senate to consider and pass favorably upon the joint resolution.

I do not believe it is necessary first to determine the question of Mr. Kennedy's eligibility as a court would determine it. Doubt has arisen in his own mind, doubt exists in the minds of some Senators, and, while the preponderance of the argument might be to the effect that he is eligible, there is no reason why he should not be relieved of any question of doubt if the Congress wishes to have him serve.

As I stated the other day, Mr. Kennedy did not apply for this position; he did not seek it. After long consideration of the subject the appointing power asked Mr. Kennedy to take the place for a time, and he is willing to do so, and, frankly recognizing that a question of his eligibility may arise, he would like to have that question settled without further doubt, and it seems to me that if we wish to have him serve we should relieve him of the doubt.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure it will be very gratifying to Mr. Kennedy to know that throughout the debate in the Senate and in the committee there has never been raised the slightest doubt as to the desirability of his appointment to the position for which he has been chosen. I am happy, in a way, that we had this discussion, because it will encourage him to undertake the tremendous job before him, and I am sure he will carry it through to success.

Now, Mr. President, I may say for the committee that the proposal of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is entirely acceptable, and I hope it will take the place of the original joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I agree in large measure with everything the Senator from Arkansas has said as to the form of the joint resolution. There is no substantial difference in the effect of the resolution as presented by him and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. However, I feel that the amendment a little more clearly recognizes precisely the problem before us, and that it is a little more direct and unequivocal in its statement of what we are actually doing, and for that reason alone I rather prefer it to the original joint resolution.

I think I am in complete agreement with what the Senator from Arkansas has said as to Mr. Kennedy himself. I think there is unanimity of view that he is a man of great ability, that he is a man of character, that he has rendered distinguished public service, and that in this new office he would make a great contribution to the public welfare.

The difficulty, as I see it, however, is that I am unwilling to say that a provision of a statute enacted by the Congress of the United States shall apply to 121,000,000 people and that it shall not apply to one citizen of these United States singled out for exemption by the Congress. I cannot give my assent to that proposition. In the committee I voted against reporting the joint resolution, and I shall be obliged, because of the very deep convictions I entertain, to vote against the passage of the joint resolution by the Senate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. NYE. The Senator makes the point of the singling out of one man to whom the law shall not apply. I share with him very largely his sympathies in connection with this entire matter.

If we adopt this joint resolution, are we not in effect saying that of 125,000,000 or 130,000,000 people there is really only one qualified for this position, and that we are obliged to waive the law to meet the situation created by his appointment?

Mr. WHITE. Of course that is pretty near what we are saying.

I desire to repeat that I do not believe anyone can question the qualifications, other than the legal qualifications, of Mr. Kennedy. We wrote into the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 a perfectly foolish provision with respect to the qualifications of the members. Now we confront our folly, and instead of amending the law we are proposing, by congressional action, to place one man beyond the reach of the law. I cannot give my approval to that, and I am not willing to give my approval to anything which brings about such a result.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am sure it is unnecessary to add anything to what has been said already with reference to Mr. Kennedy's character and exceptional fitness for the office for which he has been nominated. However, because I have known Mr. Kennedy longer than has any other Member of the Senate, I fear that my silence with reference to his qualifications for this appointment might be misunderstood by my constituents who regard Mr. Kennedy with special pride.

When I was Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1914, Mr. Kennedy was a humble clerk in the banking department at the State House. From that time to the present I have known him intimately. He was born in Massachusetts, and lived there all his life until a few years ago. His wife is a Massachusetts woman. He still spends his summers in Massachuetts. There is no young man within my acquaintanceship who has made such progress and achieved such deserved success in the commercial and business life of America as has Mr. Kennedy.

I wish to emphasize the fact that in addition to all the other excellent qualities he possesses, he is a self-made man. I knew him when we was without wealth. But success and wealth have not spoiled or changed him. What he has accomplished and achieved has been the result of his own efforts, his own industry, and his own ability. I desire to concur in all that has been said with reference to the admirable qualities he possesses with respect to this appointment.

Incidentally, Mr. Kennedy's father-in-law, ex-Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, of Boston, has been devotedly interested in maritime problems for many years. No one in Massachusetts has been more interested or has accomplished more for the development of the port of Boston than has Mr. Fitzgerald.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, from what has been said I think it is established that Mr. Kennedy is well qualified for this position; but it seems to me most unfortunate that he cannot comply with the provisions which were placed in the bill establishing the Maritime Commission when it was enacted. It seems to me rather strange that we should be called upon to set aside the provisions of that law when the first appointment comes up for confirmation by the Senate.

In speaking of the qualifications of Mr. Kennedy, I will say that this morning I looked in Who's Who to find out a little more about him than I had heard or knew. I ascertained that when he was 24 years of age he became the bank examiner of Massachusetts and acted as such from 1912 to 1914.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I happened to be Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts at the time spoken of by the Senator from North Dakota. At that time Mr. Kennedy was in the bank examiner's office, but was not acting as bank examiner or bank commissioner.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am quoting from Who's Who. That is my authority; but I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for the correction.

From 1914 to 1917 Mr. Kennedy was president of the Columbia Trust Co., of Boston. From 1917 to 1919 he was assistant general manager of the Fore River, Mass., plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. He was manager of the Hayden-Stone Co., investment bankers of Boston, from 1919 to 1924. He was president and chairman of the board of directors of the Film Booking Offices of America from 1926 to 1929. He was chairman of the board of directors of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Theaters Corporation from 1928 to 1929; president and chairman of the board of directors of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., from 1929 to 1930; and engaged in corporation finance from 1930 to 1934. Mr. Kennedy was appointed to the Securities and Exchange Commission in July 1934, elected Chairman in 1934, and resigned in 1935. Who's Who gives the list of clubs to which he belongs—eight clubs, all the way from New England to Palm Beach, Fla. Mr. Kennedy is well fitted for this job. There is no question about it.

Besides that, I understand he has other qualifications. He was a large contributor to the Democratic campaign fund in 1932, and was kind enough, I understand, to lend $50,000 to the Democratic National Committee. If those are not qualifications for a little job of this kind, I do not know what would be qualifications; and it seems to me that by all means the law should be set aside so as to let this eminently qualified gentleman have this appointment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am glad to hear that Mr. Kennedy is so well qualified for this position, because he is going to undertake the biggest job he ever had. His past experience will be beneficial to him.

Mr. President, I now move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the language which was suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, Joseph P. Kennedy is declared to be eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to say one word in reference to Mr. Kennedy. He has been a friend of mine for a great many years, but I do not want that to be held against him. When I was candidate for Vice President he furnished his automobile and his chauffeur for my use in traveling through New England. I think I was one of those who first got him interested in the present administration. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Kennedy is a rich man, a man who has made money, he was originally a poor boy in Massachusetts, my home State; and I am sure that if he is selected for this position he will discharge his duties in a very capable and efficient and honest manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I expressed my views a few days ago when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Democratic leader, attempted to bring about consideration of the joint resolution by unanimous consent. I have not altered my views. They do not relate to the fitness of Mr. Kennedy. I stated frankly that day, and I stated yesterday before the committee, that I think he is eminently qualified and will make an excellent Chairman of the Maritime Commission. I have opposed, and I now oppose, the form which this procedure takes. I say, with some knowledge of legislative procedure, that I do not recall during my service in the Senate any occasion when there has been an attempt to exempt one individual from the operation of the general provisions of a statute.

Mr. President, the change made by the amendment to the joint resolution suggested by the junior Senator from Maine is but a shadow. The substance is still there. The very act we are about to commit will come back to plague us at some time. It is that feature of the subject which I desire to discuss.

There has been a very great attempt to dodge the issue and present the question of the fitness of Mr. Kennedy for this position. This is an orderly body, and Congress should proceed in a way that is calculated to bring about the best results from the standpoint of legislation. The days of childishness have gone. I like direct legislation, logical legislation, and sensible legislation. We are doing something here today—for I know it will be done—which is without precedent in the history of this country. It is an attempt to say that, while we have a restrictive provision in an act, we are going to exempt a nominee from that restrictive provision, but we are not going to change the wording of the statute itself. The frank and honest way to handle this matter would be to amend the act by striking out the provisions regarding disqualification.

The other orderly procedure would be, as has been done in all cases, to bring Mr. Kennedy's nomination before the Senate for confirmation. I have stated that I should vote for his confirmation. I share the first opinion of the Attorney General that probably Mr. Kennedy's holdings are not of such an aggregate quantity and volume and substance as to make him ineligible. I desire to vote for his confirmation, and probably the confirmation of other nominees, without an attempt being made to exempt one individual from the provisions of the statute.

Mr. President, I recall that when this subject was before the Commerce Committee of the Senate it received careful consideration, and it was the judgment of the members of the committee that there should be some restrictive language with respect to a person having holdings or owning interests in the merchant marine of the country. After some considerable study, this language was placed in the act, which is found in section 201 (b):

No person shall hold office as a member of the Commission who, within 3 years prior to his employment, shall have been employed by, or have had any pecuniary interest in, any carrier by water or substantial pecuniary interest in any other person who derives a substantial portion of his revenues from any business associated with ships or shipping.

Experience had taught the Congress, Mr. President, that from a public standpoint the best results would come by having as members of the Board men wholly dissociated from the shipping business or any financial interest therein. I still believe in that concept. I think it is ethical and that the provision of the law ought to be carried out literally.

It is strange to me that a joint resolution should be introduced and that the Senate should proceed to its consideration in an attempt to qualify a candidate who thinks himself disqualified. This very joint resolution is an indictment against Mr. Kennedy; and, if I were he, I would take no comfort or pleasure from the fact that my friends are bringing this charge into the Senate through the medium of a measure designed to relieve him of the ethical and moral provisions of the statute. They are doing him a disservice. I think his friends should meet the situation in the logical and usual way of having his nomination reported to the Senate and asking for its confirmation.

If this practice is to be adhered to—and the gist of my opposition has to do with that aspect of the matter—if we are to follow this practice, and if in the future, as has frequently happened in the past, bills proposed for the consideration of Congress are to contain such a provision as is found in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, all that need be done to circumvent it is, if there are sufficient votes and force behind the proposal, to introduce a resolution saying in effect, "While our man is disqualified, notwithstanding that circumstance, we want him on the board."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCNARY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Since this matter has been before the Senate, I have had a vague recollection, which has been somewhat refreshed today by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], that within the past 10 years at some time, either in the Coolidge or Hoover administration, a similar resolution was adopted with respect to the appointment of somebody whose name had been sent to the Senate. I am not able to give the instance, because I have not looked it up, but I do have the recollection that the Senate passed on a similar matter some years ago where there was a technical ineligibility or the fear of a technical ineligibility. Does the Senator have any recollection of such an instance?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have a very excellent recollection of what occurred legislatively during the occupancy of the White House by President Coolidge and President Hoover.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not certain that it was in either of those administrations.

Mr. MCNARY. I have been a very regular attendant on the sessions of the Senate, but I do not recall such an incident, and I now declare that there never was a resolution of this kind introduced in Congress during its history. I think the Senator should look into that very carefully.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am going to do so. I have not had a chance to do it; but I still have a vague recollection that something like this was done at a former session.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have said practically all I desire to say on this question. I repeat, it is not good practice to adopt a procedure of this kind. The position I take is not directed against Mr. Kennedy but against the vicious practice that is now proposed under this joint resolution. I have an interest in this body and in the entire Congress and the fashion in which legislative work is conducted, and I think, Mr. President, in the years to come, when we look back upon this resolution and contemplate its folly and its unfairness to the candidate, Mr. Kennedy himself, we will consider it to be a species of very deceptive, deceitful, and dissembling legislation.

Mr. BONE obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have no desire to occupy the floor if a vote is about to be taken.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I appeal to the Senator from Washington to defer for a few moments his address, which I wish to hear, in order that the Senate may pass the joint resolution? "Time is of the essence."

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish to express my hearty agreement with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I do that in the same fashion that he has expressed himself, with full knowledge of the merits of Mr. Kennedy and with full approval of Mr. Kennedy's nomination. But, Mr. President, look at the situation in which we put ourselves. We question—or it may be said Mr. Kennedy questioned originally, but we question now—the eligibility of Mr. Kennedy; we consider the question of his eligibility of sufficient doubt to pass upon it here, and we pass a joint resolution that he is eligible, and does not come within the purview of the section of the law to which reference has been made. Where does that lead us? Ultimately we reach the conclusion as to Mr. Kennedy, of whose eligibility there was a doubt, that the doubt is removed by the Senate passing a joint resolution; but the doubt still remains. The proper way, I think, in which to deal with the subject is to dismiss the joint resolution, to withdraw it, and then, as the Senator from Oregon has said, when Mr. Kennedy's nomination comes before the Senate let him be confirmed, if that be proper.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, since I had the colloquy with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has called my attention to the form of the resolution which the Senate has frequently passed exempting from the operation of certain criminal statutes lawyers whose services were desired by some department. It may be that that is the matter which engaged my attention at the moment. The Senator from Missouri has just handed me a bill which I suppose he intended to call to the attention of the Senate——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that I happened to have that bill in my pocket because it is the form of a bill that has been very frequently passed with regard to specific cases where the Department of Justice desired to employ lawyers whose employment would be in contravention of the statute prohibiting lawyers who had been in Government employ from practicing before a department. I happened to have it in my pocket, because I was planning to introduce a bill of that sort in a particular case.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, except by virtue of the passage of measures of this sort, no lawyer who comes within the provisions of the Criminal Code would be eligible to such appointment?

Mr. CLARK. That is entirely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So we have at least a number of times passed resolutions exempting such lawyers from the operations of the code which otherwise would prohibit their employment for a period of 2 years at least, and in some cases more, because of their connection with a department at a previous time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been ordered engrossed and having been read a third time, the question is on its passage.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) was passed.

On motion of Mr. COPELAND the title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution declaring Joseph P. Kennedy eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

A FAIR PRESS FOR OPPONENTS OF PRESIDENT'S PLAN

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon when I returned to my office from the session of the Senate I found upon my desk a package delivered there by the American Railway Express. Upon opening it I found it contained such scurrilous, scandalous, libelous matter against the Jewish race that, of course, I reached the conclusion that it came by express only because it could not be sent through the mails. I am sure that we all denounce that sort of thing, and probably all of us have consigned such matter to the wastebasket, where it ought to go; but my sense of fairness was appealed to by a sheet that accompanied this propaganda. I hold that sheet in my hand. It seems that the person who sent the propaganda and accompanied it with this sheet was making appeal to the free and powerful press of this country and complaining that the press was not giving to the opponents of the President's Court proposal a fair press.

I wish to appeal to the fair press and the powerful press of this country, by all means, to give the opponents of the President's proposal a fair press. Give them all the big headlines to which they are entitled, and play up their stories to as great an extent as they are entitled. In the name of fairness, I urge the free press, the powerful press, to do that thing.

How free the press is we may determine, of course, by reading its articles during the last campaign, and how powerful it is we may determine by reading the election returns. [Laughter.]

The leaflet which I hold in my hand, which makes an appeal to the free and powerful press, is as follows:

The people spoke at Carnegie Hall.

A historical political New York mass meeting developed into a patriotic pro-Christian conference grimly determined to preserve the Supreme Court and the Constitution.

The real news was not reported by the press control in its publication of the anti-Roosevelt Supreme Court "packing" mass meeting of 4,000 at Carnegie Hall March 12, when Senators WALSH, of Massachusetts; BURKE, of Nebraska; and COPELAND, of New York, scathingly denounced the President's proposal—branded as a "rendezvous with death" for the Constitution and the Republic.

The undersigned was present and makes the following report as an independent journalist.

(1) The meeting had practically no advance newspaper notice.

Think of that. Why, I even saw it in the New Albany (Ind.) Tribune.

Yet there was standing room only at 8:30 p. m. from orchestra floor to gallery.

I understand Carnegie Hall holds 4,000 people. In a city of 5,000,000 it could be packed without much effort with one-legged men.

(2) No Jewish "officials" were present, and there were few, if any, Jews in the audience; yet New York is nearly 50 percent Jewish. Are they in reality for "packing"?

(3) Senator COPELAND's incidental praise of Jews was heard in silence.

I am sure that those of us here who know the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] know that they would not lend their names and presence to any meeting which was "packed" against any racial group or minority in this country; and I am sure, if they hear me or read my statement, they will be surprised to know that that meeting was "packed" against any racial group.

(4) It was a political meeting.

That is news to me. I thought it was to be a great nonpartisan Christian movement.

Yet, while awaiting the arrival of the speakers, Christian as well as patriotic songs were continually demanded by the audience from the orchestra, and Onward Christian Soldiers was sung with militant fervor in a 1776 crusading atmosphere.

(5) Roosevelt was repeatedly hissed and loudly booed; and sarcastic reference was made by one of the speakers to an "alleged mandate."

Of course, I could not possibly figure out which one of the speakers that was.

(6) The gallery was packed with high-class Americans.

Of course, I did not think anybody who was against the Court proposal would be a party to "packing" anything, even a meeting in Carnegie Hall, with "high-class American citizens." I can visualize that Carnegie Hall meeting. I imagine all who attended had on dress suits and tuxedoes, as they did in the Liberty League meetings held there during the campaign.

(7) The crowd permitted no frivolity—displaying intense earnestness, concern, and grim determination.

I can see those embattled patriots, just like Nathan Hale as he stood before the firing squad and said, "I am sorry I have only one life to give for my country." I can see the grim determination in that "packed" audience in New York.

(8) Under the spell of the deep emotion of the crowd, Senator WALSH delivered deadly anti-Roosevelt logic with great dramatic power and patriotic fervor.

I can believe that, because I sat before the radio and "emoted" a little myself. [Laughter.]

(9) The speakers were exceptionally heartened, Senator COPELAND publicly admitting that he had never seen so large an audience in Carnegie Hall.

Carnegie Hall holds 4,000 people and is located in a city of 5,000,000 people. I can get that many people out to hear me speak in Indiana, believe it or not.

(10) When the speakers finished, crowds stood around talking of the significance of the great patriotic demonstration for Court and Constitution, apparently reluctant to leave. Probably 90 percent left that meeting militant, patriotic missionaries.

And those who came to scoff remained to pray! [Laughter.]

(11) There were other important features which it would be impolitic to publicize at this time.

Perhaps a lot of people were measured for their white shirts or black shirts.

But the paramount consideration is:
The people spoke—

In a "packed" crowd—

The people spoke—and in no uncertain warning tones.
Patriotism still lives! Heed your hopes, not your fears—and work unceasingly to smash the alien "gag" of the press, without whose freedom the Republic falls.

I know a lot of people who have been "gagged" by some things that came from the press, but I never knew of the press being gagged.

Mr. President, I know this appeal will not be lost on a free press. I am sure they will give the opposition the consideration they ought to have. I am so sure in my conviction on that point that, after reading in a newspaper the other day that the Governor of Massachusetts had appointed a Chinaman as justice of the peace in Massachusetts, I make the assertion that if that Chinaman should come to Washington and appear before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and testify against the President's proposal he would get bigger headlines than Chief Justice Hughes. The press would probably trace his ancestry and finally discover that he was a great authority on the Chinese constitution and perhaps a direct descendant of the great Chinese lawgivers.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I do not know just what he is driving at, but I have a glimmer of hope that I may discover some time.

Referring to the meeting held in Carnegie Hall about a week ago, I say again what I said then, that during the many years I have been living in New York City I never saw such a crowd in Carnegie Hall. It could not hold the people who wanted to get in; it was packed to the top of the fourth gallery, and, according to the police, about 20,000 persons were turned away.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Is there not in New York City a building called Madison Square Garden? Would not that have held them?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it so happens that this was a gathering of the common people. There were no dress suits, there were no tuxedos. Those who attended the meeting did not drive up in limousines. The citizens of New York who contributed the money to hire that hall contributed small amounts of $1, $2, $3, $4, or $5. They did not have the Liberty League or some similar great organization to furnish the money to hire Madison Square Garden. I assume the Senator from Indiana has been on Broadway enough to know that it costs money to hire that great hall.

Mr. President, I had not thought that I should at any time say anything on the floor regarding the great issue which is before the American people. But I want Senators to know there is a tremendous movement on in the country, a movement of the plain, ordinary people who have been taught from their youth to revere the flag and the Constitution and the courts.

I give great credit to Mr. Roosevelt for what he did at the beginning of his administration. I think what he did may have prevented some sort of a revolution in America. I give him credit for that. I was glad to help with my weak voice and vote in many of those early measures which had to do with pacifying the people and bettering their condition. But, Mr. President, let no man misunderstand the mood of the people today.

The Senator from Indiana, noted for his sarcasm, may seek to belittle what happened in Carnegie Hall and what is happening in the town halls and in the schoolhouses of every county and every State of the Union. Let him not try to pass off this great outpouring of people in New York City as a group of dress-suited, limousine-driving citizens. It was a group of Christian women and Christian men, and of Jewish men and women from all walks in life. It was an outpouring of people who feel that the very foundations of the Republic are in danger. Let not the Senator from Indiana think that by this sort of a speech he can change the fact that in the hearts of men and women all over this land there is great distress.

I wish I had with me, Mr. President, a letter I received only yesterday from the wife of a farmer in northern New York, a letter two pages long, written with pen and ink. She said, in effect:

I am not interested in the high taxes on our farm. I am not interested in the high price of cow feed. I am not interested in the low price of milk. I am not interested in the low price of farm products. My heart now is on the question of what will become of my boy if we have a break-down of American institutions. I stay awake nights worrying about my family and what may happen.

Let not the Senator from Indiana pat himself on the back, and, by a sarcastic speech, think he is conveying to the great Senate of the United States and to the people in the galleries, and through the RECORD to the country, a message which will bring a thrill of pleasure and delight to millions of our people. On the contrary, there will be millions of our people, in his State as well as others, who will be hurt by what he has said today.

Mr. President, I have had thousands of letters since the Carnegie Hall gathering, as I have no doubt my colleagues have. I have taken pains to read many of them; and hundreds of them come from the State of Indiana, as well as from every other State of the Union. Let not the Senator from Indiana think he may stand on his feet and, by a sarcastic speech, change the attitude of those fathers and mothers of America who have been taught what Americanism means.

The meeting in Carnegie Hall was the most remarkable meeting I have ever seen outside of a church revival. It was an amazing meeting. The people did sing patriotic songs and hymns up to the time of the speaking, and when the speaking was over they stayed in their seats to sing them.

Mr. President, when the religious fervor of the country is aroused, let me say that we can ill afford to take any chances on what we are attempting to do.

There may be a revolution at some time, but it is likely to be a revolution which involves the very best thought of America—not the thought of Wall Street and of the Liberty League, but the thought of the plain, godly people of America, who are stirred as they never have been before in my lifetime.

Mr. President, I had no thought whatever of saying anything on this subject. But in response to the sarcasm of the Senator from Indiana I wish to say this much for the plain, simple people of Indiana, as well as the plain, simple people of the State of New York and the other States of the Union.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I had not expected to arouse so much interest on the part of the Senator from New York. I had expected only to direct the attention of the free press to a complaint that had been lodged against it to the effect that the opponents of the judiciary proposal were not having a fair press in this country. I had not thought the Senator from New York would use this occasion to lecture me about patriotism and what the people of Indiana thought and would do.

I think I know what the people of Indiana want; and, if I know what they want, I think they want the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt carried out. I cannot believe that the people on the farms in Indiana from whom I hear have in mind any thought that they are tearing down the institutions of this country when they cry out that the program of the President of the United States shall be carried out, as three times in elections they have asked it to be done; and I do not want the Senator from New York to point his finger at me and say that I am unpatriotic, because I support the President of the United States in this proposal. I do not want him to say that I do not believe in constitutional government and the guarantees of freedom that the Constitution contains. I believed in it enough so that in May 1917 I offered my life in defense of my country, and I spent a year overseas on some of the battlefields of Europe; and I do not want the Senator from New York to lecture me about my patriotism.

So, Mr. President, I submit the little leaflet only for the purpose of directing the attention of the Senate to what everyone knows to be the fact—that certainly the opponents of this measure have no cause to complain about the kind of press they are getting. To show how the propaganda is proceeding, just this morning, in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] made a little innocuous remark to the effect that it was expected that some distinguished constitutional lawyers would be brought down to testify before the committee; and all at once the audience broke into uproarious applause, which suggested the thought that perhaps the meeting over there, against "packing", was itself packed.

So, Mr. President, I submit for what it is worth this wholly ridiculous little leaflet about the freedom of the press.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the recent meeting at Carnegie Hall, in New York City, and other meetings for and against the reorganization of the Federal courts have been treated by some persons outside this Chamber loosely, unfairly, and at times with ridicule and contempt. This is bound to follow all discussions of political questions.

I leave to our colleagues the propriety of any Senator bringing in circulars written by possibly unresponsible persons which comment favorably or unfavorably upon gatherings attended by Senators or upon comments made by Senators outside the Chamber.

I am not concerned about the circular presented by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], except for one feature of it.

One feature of the pamphlet troubles me—its reference to the audience hissing the President. I do not care what exuberant or exaggerated language there is in the pamphlet about me or about the meeting or the cause in which I am interested; but there was practically no hissing of the President at that meeting. If any, it was inconsequential; and, if even by one or two persons, reprehensible. The enthusiast who wrote that circular should not be taken seriously, even to the extent of having it read, in view of the fact that he exaggerated what occurred at that meeting and referred to it as being somewhat uncomplimentary to the President. The fact is that there was some cheering of the President, as there ought to have been, for the President has rendered public service of an extraordinarily high character. One of the Senators in particular praised him and all were most respectful. With many of his objectives practically every man in this Chamber agrees and is in accord. It is inconceivable that a man could be President of the United States and leader of a great political party without there being differences of opinion between him and his fellow citizens, and even between him and members of his own party from time to time.

I plead with my fellow Senators that during this discussion we shall recognize the dignity, importance, and greatness of the Presidential office, and extend the utmost respect and esteem to the Chief Executive of the country. He is not only entitled to it by reason of his accomplishments and his office but he is deserving of it because of his own personality.

So far as I am concerned, I desire to emphasize once and for all the fact that this issue is going to be fought by me on principle and nothing else. This does not mean that the views of myself and of those who oppose will not be forcibly presented. But there is going to be no abuse or criticism of any living man, in or out of this Chamber, who differs with me. If my years in public life have not led me to raise issues of this magnitude and importance above personalities and above party, then I think I have been spending my years without profit to myself or credit to the men and women who honored me by electing me to service in this body. A great, tremendous principle is involved here; and I am sure even the Senators who are in favor of the proposal of the President must recognize, believe in, and agree with that statement. Now, some of us find ourselves differing with him. It, indeed, is not pleasant to differ with the President of the United States when he is of one's own political faith. In my opinion, one of the most generous compliments paid to my speech, to which reference has been made, was that it had in it a tone of sadness; and everything I shall say in the discussion of this momentous question will have a tone of sadness in it, in that I find myself differing with the leader of my party, that I cannot go along with him in what he believes to be for the best interests and the welfare of our country.

Mr. President, I desire to repeat that we should not get excited; let us not become disturbed over freak communications pro and con, tirades, irresponsible circulars, and documents which are coming to us from all sides. Let us be worthy of membership in the Senate of the United States and fight this great issue as Senators, fight it on principle, and only on the issue, and recognize that it is a great constitutional question, involving, as many people believe, the future welfare of a great institution of this country, namely, the Supreme Court.

I do not accuse those who do not agree with me of trying to destroy that institution. Many people, nevertheless, believe the contemplated action would take a prop from under the great institution which has been our safeguard and the protector of our liberties, as many of us believe, for the last 150 years. I shall not say more.

Mr. President, I want my words in reply to the Senator from Indiana to be merely a plea for discussion of this great question on a high plane, on a plane worthy of this great body and its honored traditions. Let us fight it out on principle—not on party lines and not on personalities, least of all on the personality of the great man who is President of the United States.

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the floor for a period to discuss one particular section of the so-called Neutrality Joint Resolution that was passed by the House on March 18. Preliminary to my statement I should like to have subsections (a) and (b) of section 4 of the joint resolution as it passed the House printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 3 of this act and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to said belligerents named in the proclamation issued under said section 3, or to a state wherein civil strife has been proclaimed to exist, is deemed necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace or neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives and commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe, for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials overseas to any belligerent state, or any state wherein civil strife exists, named in said proclamation or proclamations issued under section 3 of this act, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, such belligerent states or within such state where civil strife exists. The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate the articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to transport.

(b) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations under section 3 of this act, and he shall thereafter find that the placing of further restrictions on exportation of commodities from the United States to the belligerents, or to any state wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace or neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives or commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim and it shall thereafter be unlawful except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe to export or transport from the United States to any belligerent state or state wherein civil strife exists named in said proclamation or proclamations issued under section 3 of this act, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, such belligerent state or such state wherein civil strife exists, any articles or materials other than personal goods and effects whatever until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. The shipper of such articles or materials shall be required to file with the collector of the port from which they are to be exported a declaration under oath that there exists in American citizens no right, title, or interest in such articles or materials, and to comply with such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated by the President. Any such declaration so filed shall be a conclusive estoppel against any claim of any American citizen of right, title, or interest in such articles or materials.

Insurance written by American underwriters on any articles or materials, the exportation of which is prohibited by this act, or on articles carried by an American vessel or airship contrary to subsection (a) of this section shall not be deemed an American interest therein, and no insurance policy issued on such articles or materials and no loss incurred thereunder shall be made a basis of any claim put forward by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate of the United States passed Senate Joint Resolution 51, commonly known as the Pittman measure. That resolution represented a realistic and intelligent approach to the problem of neutrality, which in my judgment is the most important issue now confronting the American people. I say "most important" because if by some misadventure in war trade this country of ours becomes embroiled in another great international war, which seems to lurk just around the corner, it will be utterly impossible for us to bring about an orderly settlement of the vexatious and menacing economic problems that press so heavily for solution. Our entrance into a world war at this time would make impossible a sane and dispassionate consideration of these problems upon the solution of which so much depends.

I had hoped that the measure passed by the Senate, and which I am convinced in no small measure reflects the passionate desires of the overwhelming mass of American people, would pass the other branch of the Congress. My hopes in that direction have not come to fruition, for on the 18th day of March the House saw fit in its wisdom to adopt a wholly different measure which in all essential features is a complete departure from the principles enunciated in the so-called Pittman neutrality bill.

The country is too familiar with the provisions of the Pittman resolution to require a recital of them in these remarks, and my purpose here is to make clear precisely what is to be found in the House measure upon which the Senate must now act either by acceptance or rejection or by the adoption of some sort of compromise between House and Senate conferees. Others may and doubtless will speak on this substitute measure which comes to us from the House. I sincerely hope that they will and that other voices will be added to mine to protest against the hopeless and barren results which it achieves in the matter of neutrality and peace.

The House substitute is not a neutrality or peace bill, as I will endeavor to show, in that it opens wide the gateway to an untrammeled and unrestricted trade with belligerents in time of war, in this respect being the exact opposite of the Pittman resolution which was rejected in the House.

Let me digress for a moment to say that I would go far beyond the provisions of the Pittman measure. I share the belief that we ought to cut off trade with belligerent countries in time of war. I am impelled to accept the Pittman resolution because it is the best approach which Congress so far has seen fit to adopt.

It were well for those who are interested in this problem of peace, so far as it affects our country, to be fully informed of the fundamental difference of these two measures. By their express terms they represent philosophies as far apart as the poles.

I desire now to examine the House substitute for the Pittman joint resolution for a short time. It provides that whenever the President finds to exist a state of war between foreign states he is to proclaim the fact. I have no quarrel with this provision because it is a part of the Pittman bill and is a logical provision. Upon such proclamation, it shall thereafter be unlawful to export or attempt to export arms, ammunition, and implements of war to any belligerent power and the embargo is to be extended to other countries becoming embroiled in the controversy. I agree wholly with this provision.

By the proposed House amendment the President is required to enumerate the various kinds of war implements which may not be exported to belligerents. I disagree with this provision because every kind of war munitions should be denied export privileges and no discretion should be given to the President to permit export of such commodities by omission from any such enumeration.

The fatal weakness of the substitute offered by the House is made very apparent in section 4. I do not believe I have ever seen a more adroit interpolation of qualifying words in any piece of legislation. This particular section 4 destroys everything secured in all previous attempts at neutrality legislation adopted beginning in 1935, and while I disagree wholly and completely with the queer provisions of section 4, which junk and destroy all hope of neutrality and open wide the gateway to our entrance into another world war, the cleverness with which words have been used in this section would otherwise tempt me to express unstinted admiration for the wit and ability of those who drafted it.

The word "and" is one of the most harmless words in the English language, but its use in the third line of subdivision (a) of section 4 changes the whole meaning of that section. It is the beginning of a series of words, clauses, phrases, and grammatical subtleties that not only make the measure a grant of complete discretionary power on the part of the President, but finally break down all barriers to trade and make it possible to ship any kind of personal property to belligerents in time of war, and such shipments can be transported in American bottoms. As far as war trade with belligerents is concerned, we would be in precisely the same legal position as we were immediately before we entered the World War—in fact, we would be in a worse position, because the American people will have been lulled into a sense of security by the passage of this kind of legislation, and if they do find themselves hopelessly involved when it will be too late to undo the evil encouraged by this House substitute.

Section 4, subdivision (a), provides that—

Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 3 of this act and—

And again I call attention to this word "and"— he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war to said belligerents is deemed necessary to promote security and preserve the peace and neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives or commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim.

In other words, the whole matter rests in the hands of the President of the United States, whether he in his wisdom will see fit to bar the shipment of any item of commerce to a belligerent nation outside of arms and ammunition, and even in that case he may enumerate certain arms and ammunition which might or might not be restricted in shipment.

By interpolating the word "and" into this paragraph there is given to the President the unquestioned discretion as to whether or not he shall at any time issue a finding that the placing of restrictions on the export of "certain materials or articles" is necessary. The purpose of using words in this fashion will be obvious to anyone familiar with the drafting of legislation.

Let us go a step further in analyzing section 4, so that we may clearly perceive its purpose. By the use of the word "and", it is made apparent that the President may or may not, according to his impulses, make the finding referred to. He is only required to make such a finding if it "is deemed necessary" and, of course, the question of necessity is made wholly one of Presidential discretion. If the President in his wisdom cares to exercise this discretion, it shall thereafter be unlawful for American vessels to carry such articles or materials except—and at this point I again direct the attention of my brethren to the use of the word "except"—under such "limitations and exceptions" as the President may prescribe.

It will be obvious to everyone that this wide discretionary power would allow the President to except one article or one material or any number, or, if he chose, he could except all materials and let them all go to any belligerent state.

Subdivision (a) proceeds further down this pathway of complete Presidential discretion and vests the President with statutory authority definitely to enumerate the articles and materials which he will not permit to be shipped and to do this "from time to time." That is more loose grant of power.

Visualize the picture of the President of the United States sitting in the White House listening to committees of high-pressure politicians and representatives of big business who will tell him that the country will head hellward if he does not permit the commodities their business is producing to be shipped to a country torn by war—a country whose sons are dying by thousands every day on bloody fields. The number of boys who died in Europe averaged 5,000 every day, day after day and month after month.

I want Senators to visualize the crowds of businessmen who would come bowling into Washington to "put the heat" on the President of the United States and to do the very thing which they denounce so fervently when they declaim against so-called pressure groups. These business interests do not like veterans' blocs, farm blocs, labor blocs, or any kind of blocs, but this country will never see such a pressure group or groups as would be coming to Washington in time of European war for the purpose of securing the exceptions to any order preventing the shipment of "articles or materials" to warring nations which they want and which this bill permits.

Bad as it is, appallingly weak as it is, and as destructive to the principle of mandatory neutrality as it is—and I want to say parenthetically that I sincerely believe that 90 percent of Americans passionately want mandatory neutrality; they want this war business stopped—subdivision (a) of section 4 does not achieve the complete extinction of neutrality, but that felicity is reserved for the country in subdivision (b) of section 4, where the last vestige of control over wartime trade is swept away and utterly destroyed.

Let us examine this subdivision (b) of the substitute for the Pittman resolution and see how completely it destroys all hope of curbing or even mildly restricting trade with belligerents, the trade which, in my humble judgment, sucked us into the World War and left as its heritage the crucial problems we now confront. This subdivision goes on to say that if the President thereafter finds that the placing of further restrictions on exports of commodities to belligerents is necessary to promote security, preserve peace, and protect the lives of our people, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful except—and I call the Senate's attention to this word "except", which seems to possess so fatal a fascination for the drafters of this section—under such limitations and exceptions—more exceptions—as the President may prescribe, to export or transport from this country to belligerents any articles or materials—and here comes what seems to be the master joker of all congressional legislation that I have ever read—"any articles or materials other than personal goods and effects" until the title to these has been transferred to some alien.

Mr. President, just what does that sort of language mean when it is broken down and the surplusage and excess verbiage is removed, as any court of final resort would do when passing judgment? I shall now read to the Senate precisely what the language in section 4, subdivision (b), is, and it is exactly how a court would read it. It may be asserted and it may be suggested that this interpolation was made on the floor, a practice which everyone familiar with legislative matters knows results sometimes in very peculiar sort of language being put into a bill—language which looks ridiculous when contrasted with the context of the bill. But let me read to Senators exactly what this language is when the verbiage and the unnecessary language is removed from this subdivision; and as Senators hear me read this, I ask them to judge exactly what a court would do when it was called upon to pass on this language. I am going to refer to some court decisions and some statements from legal authorities that are worth while—at least for which I have been taught to have some respect in 25 years of law practice.

This, gentlemen of the Senate, is the way the language would appear in a court decision when a court broke it down and removed the surplusage and the excess verbiage:

SEC. 4. (b) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations under section 3 of this act—

That is, that a state of war exists—and he shall thereafter find that the placing of further restrictions on exportation of commodities from the United States to the belligerents, * * * is necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace or neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives or commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe to export or transport from the United States to any belligerent state * * * any articles or materials other than personal goods and effects * * * until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government—

And so forth.

In other words, it forbids the exportation of property "other than personal goods and effects."

It is a fundamental rule of law with which every lawyer in this body is familiar, that a court will not read out of a statute plain, simple words that are there, that by the context are not limited in their meaning. That rule of evidence and that rule of statutory construction is hornbook law to the average lawyer. So when we find in this statute the words—

Other than personal goods or effects.

without any limiting clause and without any words in the statute limiting their meaning, what do we as lawyers confront? Suppose any of us were on the bench and this bill came before us and some person was asking the right to transport goods and personal effects to a belligerent country, and we found in the bill the language that the President may prohibit the delivery of—

Articles or materials other than personal goods and effects.

Then we would have to say, "Well, gentlemen, personal goods may be transported to a belligerent country." A court could do other than leave the language in the act unless it violated every rule of evidence with which every lawyer is familiar.

Let me refer to Sutherland on Statutory Construction, to read a few lines out of it which are familiar to every practicing attorney:

It is an elementary rule of construction that effect must be given, if possible, to every word, clause, and sentence of a statute. Statutes should be so construed that effect may be given to all of their provisions, so that no part will be inoperative or superfluous, void or insignificant.

I read another citation from Sutherland:

Where there are two provisions in a statute, one of which is general and designed to apply to cases generally, and the other is particular and relates to only one case or subject within the scope of the general provision, then the particular provision must prevail; and, if both cannot apply, the particular provision will be treated as an exception to the general provision.

Apply that provision of law to what is in this resolution, and, if this be a particular provision, obviously it must prevail. If it be merely an expression or clause or phrase, the Court will breathe the breath of life into it in interpreting the statute.

I read another citation from Sutherland:

Common or popular words are to be understood in a popular sense. * * * It is a familiar rule of construction, alike dictated by authority and common sense, that common words are to be extended to all the objects which, in their usual acceptance, they describe or denote.

I quote another reference from Sutherland:

General words should receive a general construction unless there is something in the statute to restrain them.

I read another citation:

The change is often found—

That is where there is some peculiar wording in the statute, as in this case—

The change is often found to be the result of carelessness or slovenliness of the draftsman.

I am advised, Mr. President, and I may say parenthetically, that this amendment was interpolated into the joint resolution on the floor of the House, which is probably the reason why it is here, but its legal significance is the challenging thing and not how it came to be placed in the measure.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In the opinion of the Senator, is there any difference between the term used in the amendment "personal goods" and the more familiar general legal term "personal property"?

Mr. BONE. No; and I am coming to that.

Mr. CLARK. "Personal property" means everything except real property. So if a 16-inch gun did not happen to be firmly anchored on a concrete emplacement in connection with real estate, but could be moved and placed on a transport or other vessel, that would be personal property, would it not?

Mr. BONE. There are so many forms of personal property that it is pretty difficult to draw an exact line, but I want to cite three or four authorities which are fundamental and with which every lawyer in this body is familiar, as it seems unnecessary to go beyond that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would the Senator mind reading that clause again? I could not hear it.

Mr. BONE. May I send it over to the Senator? I will send over to him the joint resolution itself.

Mr. BORAH. No; I merely wish to see the clause which the Senator was discussing.

Mr. BONE. I will read further a list of citations.

It is a cardinal rule that all statutes are to be so construed as to sustain rather than ignore or defeat them.

In reference to the matter to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has referred, again I wish to say that there is nothing in the measure which qualifies the words "other than personal goods and effects"; there is no qualifying language in the context of the joint resolution so that any other meaning would be obvious to a court. That is to say, any attempt to limit the meaning would be obvious to any court. The words stand out and speak for themselves, and the rule of ejusdem generis cannot be followed in such a case, because the very nature of the language employed forbids the application of the rule.

I quote from another case:

The terms "personal goods" and "personal property" are convertible, and, in their general sense, mean the same thing.

That is from a decision of the Tennessee Supreme Court.

I cite just a few of these authorities. I had a ream of them, but I cannot bring here and burden the Senate with a long list of citations dealing with this matter.

In a case arising under a criminal statute involving larceny of goods the court had this to say in a case:

When any personal goods are wrongfully taken or wrongfully detained * * *.

The term "personal goods" is broad enough to cover title deeds, since the papers within themselves have no intrinsic value.

And as to the words "personal effects"—

The words "personal effects" in a will, when not restricted by the context, mean everything embraced within the description "personal property."

Citing a Wisconsin case.

Here is a citation from Corpus Juris, a volume with which every practicing attorney is very familiar:

As used in wills its meaning may be derived from descriptions of articles and specifications immediately preceding—

Even the rule of ejusdem generis might be invoked, but the Corpus Juris goes on to say—but when not restricted by the context it may mean everything embraced within the description "personal property" (48 Corpus Juris, 1046).

Mr. President, I wish to suggest a most careful examination of this queer language. The words "other than personal goods and effects" constitute the most interesting and meaningful phrase in this substitute for the Pittman resolution. As it appears in this substitute for the Pittman measure the words mean, and they seem plainly intended to mean—and the courts have said that they are going to give effect to what the words obviously mean—that "personal goods and effects" could be shipped to belligerents without any restriction whatever imposed upon their shipment. And, what is worse and what is more provocative of war, all of these "personal goods and effects" can be lawfully shipped in American bottoms—in American ships with American crews, with the American flag flying from the masthead. And when such a cargo containing "personal goods and effects" goes out on the high seas bound for a belligerent country where millions of boys may be locked in a bloody and deadly struggle with an enemy, we can expect the gray wolves of the sea to make that vessel their immediate prey and sink it if they can. That is what happened in 1916, 1917, and 1918, and it will inevitably happen again.

We do not have to cudgel our brains in an effort to interpret the meaning of such plain and simple expressions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator, in order that I may follow fully his logic, would the phrase "personal goods and effects" apply to a corporation? Could a corporation have personal goods and effects?

Mr. BONE. I think so. I have here a list of decisions——

Mr. BORAH. I am not informed myself, and I thought perhaps the Senator could give me the information.

Mr. BONE. There is no question of doubt about a corporation's right to own personalty, because, if a corporation had no corporate or legal right to own personal property, practically every corporation in the United States might or would have to go out of business.

Mr. BORAH. The words "personal goods and effects" I supposed related probably to the goods and effects of an individual.

Mr. BONE. If that were true, then this sort of loose and careless language which a court must interpret, and which I think any careful lawyer would find immediately challenging, ought to be qualified and restricted by saying that it means that a man may have about his person a toothbrush and his pajamas and his shoes, and not leave the door so far open that not only one truck but a fleet of trucks may be driven through it. If that were to be the interpretation given it, then gentlemen are doing a distinct disservice to their own measure in not making that point very plain. For instance, they might add to the bill or make their expression read something like this, "other than personal goods or effects worn or carried about for his personal use by the person using and owning such goods and effects."

Such a clause would make the meaning very plain, too plain for cavil or dispute; but there is no such limitation in the measure, and we are dealing here with courts. I have heard some observations of late about the carelessness with which the courts construe statutes and the Constitution which make me feel that we ought not to trust ourselves to a court definition or a court construction, but should write into this measure exactly what Congress wants written into it. We would have no right to criticize a court for construing this expression exactly as it is written, because what could judges do when they confront such language and confront a ream of decisions a mile long holding that personal goods and effects are personal property? However, I am going to make some further reference to personal property a little further along in my remarks.

"Personal property", in law and in practical usage, is estate and property other than what we commonly know as real estate. It consists in general of things that are movable, such as chattels. Personal effects are defined to be effects of a personal character, and, of course, comprehend and include what we all know to be personal property. Every lawyer in this body, without any suggestion from me, knows that personal property includes, and would include, and would be so construed by any court, such commodities as wheat, flour, cotton, oil, gasoline, steel, copper, nickel, pig iron, rubber, trucks, corn, automobiles—in short, the very kind of personal property which is not only used and useful by any nation in time of war but is vital to the support of its civilian population and its army in the field. What seems to have been the clear and studied purpose of the author of this language was undoubtedly the exemption of such forms of personal property from the entire scope and operation of this measure. If that was not his purpose, he might very readily by interpolating a few more words have made his purpose very obvious and clear. But when a man merely contents himself with a reference to personal goods and effects, there is no limitation whatever in that sort of an expression.

I wish to point out what seems another unfortunate suggestion which lulls us into a false sense of security, for the remainder of this section contains a provision that the shipper of articles which do not come under the category of personal property must file a declaration stating that an American citizen has no title to such articles. Aside from arms and ammunition, about the only thing left to which such an affidavit could apply would be real estate; and if I were a bit cynical I might say that there must be great regret in certain quarters that we cannot sell and transport our real estate to a belligerent nation. It is a terrible visitation of congressional wrath on the poor real-estate operators that we deprive them of the privilege of shipping real estate to warring nations, but, unfortunately, the Almighty has made that impossible. Otherwise, the war traders would assuredly ask us, by some exception, to make possible a brisk trade in real estate as an adjunct to the delightful operations of modern warfare.

I withhold comment on other portions of the joint resolution because the matters I have adverted to completely strip the heart out of the assumed attempt to create a piece of neutrality legislation.

I do not believe that any Senator has ever seen a more all-embracing set of exceptions in any piece of legislation than are to be found in the House joint resolution which I have been discussing. It contains so many exceptions that it practically excepts from the operation of the measure everything that goes to constitute war trade, aside from actual combat munitions of war. The presence of these exceptions in this proposed law truly stamps it as a complete abandonment of an effective program of neutrality and peace, which I think is one of the highest aspirations of 90 percent of the American people at this moment. If this resolution becomes law—and it will if the Senate does not reject it—it will be a patent, open bid to every business institution in the United States to go into war trade up to the hilt. Mr. President, even if the President of the United States wanted to stop war trade in the commodities I have mentioned he could not do it under this measure. He is tied hand and foot as completely as though he had a ton of baling wire wrapped around him by a baling machine. He is stuffed into a veritable legal mummy case by this kind of legislation. The hands of the courts would be tied as well. It is misstatement of terms to call the sort of thing laid out in this bill by the designation of "Presidential discretion."

There can be no discretion when the resolution itself says that personal goods and effects are not brought within the scope of the commodities the shipment of which the President can under any circumstances check or stop. But even if it were a measure granting full discretion—which it does not—I would still be opposed to it, and I think the overwhelming mass of Americans will be opposed to it. I certainly feel that Congress should be opposed to it, because such a discretion would both force and authorize the President of the United States to create conditions which might inevitably lead to war. The joint resolution would create such an intolerable condition that Congress, under the whip and lash of public opinion aroused over the sinkings of American ships, might feel impelled to declare war.

Congress alone has the constitutional right to declare war; and, regardless of my admiration for the President, I would not place in his hands the power to produce conditions or be forced into a position which would produce an inflamed public opinion and compel Congress to declare war even against its will. Having the sole power to declare war, Congress should not only have but should exercise the power to prescribe the conditions which might or might not lead to war—and no amount of sophistry will divorce us from that cold, hard fact. If by some awful mischance I should be called upon in my capacity as a Senator to vote for or against a declaration of war, I want to be certain that I would have something to say about the creation of the conditions which our experience has taught us may be one of the outstanding factors leading to war. If there is any logical answer to that philosophy, I am not aware of it.

I want to write into the RECORD my most earnest protest against such an abandonment of the hopes and aspirations of the American people as is to be found in this joint resolution. The time may soon come when the sons of American mothers will be dying on foreign battlefields and their bodies rotting in foreign soil because we deliberately elected to sustain the sordid trade of war hucksters—a trade which we will call into existence by the wording of this joint resolution. We do not permit it to come into existence by mere negative action. We actually send forth a clarion call for the war traders to get ready for the financial killing.

This measure is worse than no neutrality legislation. If we wiped out every line of our neutrality legislation, we might at least cherish the hope that we could appeal later to the sound judgment of Americans to put something worth while on the books. It were a million times better that we should not lead the people of the United States to believe, in the passage of this resolution, that we have enacted legislation which in any wise restricts war trade. If, God forbid, the time should again come when we hear the voices of the bugles in our streets, the roll of drums, and the rustle of the war flags—and their very rustle will whisper of things too horrible to describe—it should be known, even though it be too late, that a protest was registered against this open bid to the doing of a thing which may drag us into war.

We know from bitter experience that the nations who bought from us in the World War so manipulated this crazy picture of war finance that they made Americans pay their war debts, which are now represented in the form of Liberty bonds which we are retiring in our income taxes. These debts represent war trade. It must give all of us a wonderful thrill to know that the profits of war that went to the powder and steel outfits and to the copper crowd and all the rest of the war hucksters are being paid year by year in our income-tax bills. We are a patient people, a people familiar with sorrow and acquainted with grief, but this sort of financial operation ought to make our cup of misery overflow.

There is and can be no profit in war. Europe borrowed $12,000,000,000 from us, and our Government is sweating it out of us right now. We loaned the money to European nations to buy the kind of personal goods and effects which this substitute allows to be freely sold to belligerent nations. Of course, the war hucksters made a lot of money out of it, but all the rest of us are paying this money back year by year. We had to do more—we also paid for this trade in an army of dead, an army of insane, an army of fine young fellows whose bodies had been battered and broken. We paid for it with an army of Gold Star Mothers. We paid for it with pension rolls and debts that may stretch ahead for generations. These things constitute a panorama of misery and wretchedness too sad for words. They are the price, the heritage of war. They represent the immolation of people on the altar of war profits. They are an exemplification of man's inhumanity to man. They are the legitimate offspring of that savage, uncouth, and antisocial doctrine commonly designated as "freedom of the seas", which no longer exists except in legal literature.

If this joint resolution becomes law and another war starts in Europe, American ships will again start across the ocean filled with these personal goods and effects which this measure says may be shipped without interference. I say this with full knowledge that I may not convince some Americans that they ought not make profit out of that hell called war. But Americans should engage in that traffic only with full knowledge on the part of the people of the terrible price they will have to pay to sustain it. If the ships again start across the ocean filled with high-priced and profitable commodities—the "personal goods and effects", such as wheat, oil, gasoline, coal, cotton, corn, copper, steel, trucks, flour, pig iron, rubber, tin, nickel, tires, automobiles—in short, the personal property the traffic in which this joint resolution invites—just so sure will an army of American boys be following soon after with the uniform of their country on their backs and rifles on their shoulders to sustain this glorious but bloody doctrine of freedom of the seas. That is exactly what Admiral Sims, commander in chief of our Navy during the World War, said this sort of traffic meant. Today the very men who defend this doctrine admit that its basis is the right of Americans to indulge in war traffic with belligerent nations, and their reason for defending it is that such a right is worth fighting for. I admire their candor and frankness, and if we are now misled let it be recorded that it was in their own vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to yield to me to mention certain phases of this matter? I am sure he will be interested with reference to the use of the term "personal goods and effects" as incorporated in the House bill. It is my impression that the body at the other end of the Capitol intended to limit the commodities excepted to goods which affect persons, such as clothing and goods of that sort. In other words, in my opinion, the intention of the language was not to exempt the articles to which he refers—articles in the nature of contraband—but to limit the exemption to a very narrow field, to such articles as pertain to the person.

Of course, the term "personal goods and effects" has been variously defined by the courts. Some of them have given it a very broad definition to include personal property of all kinds. However, it is my belief that the intention was to limit it to the character of articles I have just stated. I thought I ought to call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, if I could search the heart and know the exact purpose of the man who wrote the expression, I would not be making this speech, but I am putting myself in the position of a court which would have to pass judgment on the words themselves. I believe the Senator from Arkansas was not in the Chamber when I read a number of citations holding that where language is in an act the court must give that language effect. Where there is nothing in the context which limits the effect in the application of the words, or the clause, or the phrase, the courts must give effect to the words.

It may be true that the gentleman who suggested this language had locked in his breast some entirely different idea, but I have just sent to the Senator from Arkansas, by a page boy, a suggestion as to a change of wording which, if the joint resolution were now before the Senate, I should offer as an amendment. If it be the clear purpose of the author of this clause to restrict it in the manner the Senator from Arkansas has suggested, then he might have done it by the language I have suggested.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the proposed amendment which the Senator has been kind enough to send to me, an amendment which relates to the House bill, carries out the purpose of the House as I understand it. I think it is a proper amendment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am greatly concerned only because, in the first place, the almost universal rule of statutory construction would compel a court to read the words of this act in their normal, ordinary meaning; and therefore a court, if it were a good court, would not attempt to construe that language in such a way as to write out the obvious meaning of plain, simple words. Second, the joint resolution in itself is a patent bid to enter into war trade; and if this additional loose language is left in, the sky is not even the limit. We shall have very casually removed the sky, if I may employ that metaphor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in this connection I call the Senator's attention to an opinion of the Supreme Court of Minnesota in the case of Barney v. May (160 N. W. Reporter 790). I do not know that it contravenes the position taken by the Senator as to the meaning of the words "personal goods and effects", but it is stated in the syllabus that—

> The term "personal effects" commonly means such tangible property as attends the person.

Manifestly, if the words "personal goods and effects", as used in the House joint resolution, are to be given the construction which the Senator is suggesting, the measure would need modification.

Mr. BONE. I suggest to the Senator that in order that I might not be charged by some persons with having lightly raised an issue which was a futile and useless one, I called into consultation some able lawyers in this city very highly connected with the Government and I presented my problem to them. I said, "I am going to challenge this language on the floor of the Senate, and I do not want to be asserting a danger which may not exist." I may say to the Senator that they agreed with me that the language was clearly open to the interpretation I have given it, and their judgment was that the courts would so construe it.

If the words "personal effects" were used alone, they might raise a doubt in the mind of the Court; but "personal goods and effects" is about as sweeping and inclusive an expression as one could find, and it certainly ought to be a challenge to every lawyer on this floor. Why use that sort of general language in the joint resolution when the author of the language could have made his intended purpose very plain by some qualification?

I read today some statements from Sutherland to the effect that if a man wants to limit the application of a thing he should employ limiting words; otherwise the Court must give the language its normal meaning. We ought not to expect the Court to defend us against our own ineptitude in drawing legislation. It probably is fair and due to the men who handled the joint resolution on the floor of the House to say that when amendments are put into a measure on the floor, of course, everyone knows that frequently unhappy results follow; but it is not for me to decide whether it is or is not good grammar.

The fact is that these words in the joint resolution, in my judgment, would permit not one truck but all the trucks ever made by General Motors and Chrysler to be driven right through the joint resolution, and the courts would be handcuffed. I will say frankly to the Senator that if I were on the bench and the joint resolution allowed personal goods to be shipped abroad, I should be constrained to give the language the interpretation which the average man would give it.

Besides, we are going to have men coming down to Washington saying, "Except my things from the effects of this bill. I want to ship my stuff. The country is going to hell if I do not get an order authorizing me to ship, and giving me one of these beautiful exceptions." If we ever saw pressure groups, and political manipulation, and maneuvering, we are going to see them when this joint resolution becomes law, if it ever does, and a war breaks out in Europe. Every fellow who sees wheat going to three or four dollars a bushel, and copper to 30 cents a pound, will be down here getting his beneficent exception.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In support of the suggestion I made a few moments ago that the language was not intended to embrace personal property generally, such as might be used for war purposes, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the language of the House joint resolution is:

> It shall thereafter be unlawful except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe to export or transport from the United States to any belligerent states or state wherein civil strife exists named in said proclamation or proclamations issued under section 3 of this act, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, such belligerent state or such state wherein civil strife exists, any articles or materials other than personal goods and effects whatever until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national.

In view of that context the meaning of the language used by the House is that the exception, "personal goods and effects", is not to be given the broad construction which ordinarily would be applied, but is to be given a narrow construction; and, as has been suggested to me by a Senator near me, it is perhaps inaptitude of expression which may be corrected by some such language as the Senator from Washington has proposed. In other words, I should like to say that I do not think there was any thought or purpose on the part of the proponents of the House substitute for the Senate joint resolution to broaden the exemptions from a possible embargo to the extent the Senator is suggesting. I merely make that statement in order to be, as I conceive it, entirely just to the House committee and to the House itself.

Mr. BONE. I realize the Senator's position. I desire to be just and fair to them; but, on the other hand, I also desire to be just and fair to the country, which will be placed in a position of jeopardy if the courts should construe this language as I think they would.

Three terms are employed here. At the top of the page we find the word "commodities." Farther down we find the words "articles or materials." The third expression is "personal goods and effects." There is no restriction anywhere in the context on any of them, and no definition. This looseness of expression may lead to trouble.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the language the Senator has proposed—namely, "other than personal goods and effects worn or carried about for his personal use by the person owning such goods and effects"—would accomplish the purpose which the framers of the measure had in mind. I do not think they had in mind opening up the proposition to every commodity which might be considered personal property.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the bill itself is so liberal in allowing shipments of war materials that in my judgment it comes neither within the classification of a neutrality measure nor that of a peace measure. There is not a single line in it which, in my judgment, is going seriously to interrupt the flow of materials to Europe in wartime; and if this joint resolution becomes law we are going to find ourselves in a war boom and upward spiral, until we head the other way into an abyss. That occurred and will occur again. I am opposed to the fundamental provisions of the McReynolds resolution, but I call attention to this one particular thing as an evidence of how legislation may inevitably lead us right down to the edge of the abyss of war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator what, in his opinion, would happen to the McReynolds resolution or the Pittman resolution if Europe were tomorrow to find itself in a state of war, and wanting our cotton at 28 cents a pound, or our tobacco at 50 cents a pound, or our copper, or other commodities which we produce here in America.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator wish to know what we would do?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I wish to know what we would do if we should find at that time—and we should—all of our cotton farmers from North Carolina coming up here and clamoring for the right to export their cotton. They are now getting about 15 cents a pound for cotton. If war should be declared in Europe, and we should find Brazil and Egypt and India and China and all the rest of our 48 competitors in the production of cotton selling cotton to the warring nations of Europe at a tremendously high price, I know, and I believe the Senator will agree, that all of those engaged in the production of cotton in North Carolina and South Carolina and Georgia and Alabama and Mississippi and Texas and Louisiana would be up here clamoring for the privilege of sending their cotton to Europe.

Mr. BONE. I quite agree with the Senator. In fact, I agree with him so thoroughly that I went out to Denver not long ago and made a speech before the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, in which I stated exactly what the Senator has just said. I said that if we attempted to embargo the exportation of this stuff, which is very profitable, we might have all the labor unions and the farmers and all the others concerned coming down here and proclaiming against such embargo laws, and we might have another Theodore Roosevelt indulging in another outburst of flaming Americanism and talking about a "yellow" Congress. But let me further tell the Senator what would happen. We might as well have this all out in the open.

Of course, I do not do myself the honor to think that posterity is going to read my humble and rather inept expressions here; but it is just as well to write my position into the RECORD right now, and I prefer to go on record now, before any war starts, for I know how I shall vote when it does come, if I am here. The very farmers who would want $3 a bushel for their wheat, and the very cotton farmers down in the Senator's part of the country who sought to get 20 cents a pound for cotton would have to make up their minds to one thing. This is what would happen:

The 20-cent cotton would start across the ocean to a belligerent nation, and the nation fighting the one to which the cotton was consigned would naturally blow the ships out of the water if they could. The Senator will agree with that, will he not? It would not be long after that until the son of a farmer who was getting $3 a bushel for wheat, and the son of the cotton grower who was getting 20 cents a pound for his cotton, would have a uniform on his back following that cotton and that wheat across the ocean to vindicate the right of his countrymen to engage in that traffic. That is the exact picture presented; and I may say to the Senator that I believed that the Veterans of Foreign Wars agreed with my views expressed at their convention.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I cannot agree with the Senator. I am of the opinion that if the farmers of North Carolina had an opportunity to sell cotton at 20 or 25 cents a pound in case of war in Europe, if the farmers of the State of Tennessee had that opportunity, they would sell it, and they would bring such pressure on us here, as pressure would be brought on us by those who engage in the raising of wheat in the West, that the treaties we are making in the form of neutrality laws would be torn up. But we are not going to send any of our boys to war, because, as the Senator has repeatedly stated, the American people are against war.

If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that we are enacting neutrality laws—and the probability is that I am going to vote for the measure we are now considering—but I do wish to avail myself of this opportunity to express my opinion about the whole matter, which I have not done heretofore.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I will not yield for the Senator from North Carolina to make a speech in my time. He can take the floor after I conclude and I will be happy to listen to him.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is in line with what the Senator is saying.

Mr. BONE. I know, but I am not yielding for that purpose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will spare me just a moment—he made mention of the fact that the ships to which he referred would be blown up. I desire to make a statement in regard to that.

When we are prohibiting the American marine from carrying goods from this country to any other country we are absolutely destroying the American marine. We are prohibiting the American people from riding on foreign ships in war zones. I say, and I say it unhesitatingly, that if an American citizen has no more sense than to ride on a ship through a war zone, or on a foreign ship, he ought to be blown to hell. That is my statement about it. I will not interfere further with the Senator.

Mr. BONE. That is precisely what the Pittman resolution provides, and that is why I said in the beginning that the Pittman resolution is, in my judgment, a realistic approach to a proper solution of this problem.

I am just as well aware as is the Senator from North Carolina that if an attempt is made to embargo shipments, we will have the men who want to make profit out of shipping goods coming here and raising a rumpus about it. I do not believe there is any question about that. I think we are all aware of that simple, elemental fact. But the assumption-of-risk doctrine, which involves a man carrying goods at his own risk, is an entirely different thing from underwriting that sort of traffic with the guns of the Navy and the bayonets of the Army. When we tell an American by law that he rides on a ship of a belligerent nation at his own peril that is a plain, simple statement which even the dumbest person can understand. The Pittman resolution provided for carrying this trade at the risk of the man who carries such goods. The shipper has to separate himself from the title to the goods if they go overseas to a belligerent. The Senator will recall that I offered an amendment, which was agreed to, which provided that the ship which was carrying the dangerous stuff must carry such cargo at its own risk, because the American Government would not make a claim in behalf of the owners of the ship if it went into a dangerous business and was sunk.

I am sure the Senator does not feel that his boy, if he has one, ought to die to sustain this kind of war trade. Later in my remarks I shall have something to say about what this may cost, but let me digress a moment now to say that the people of this country are beginning to understand this matter, but if they do not, it will be too late when war comes and we get embroiled. It would not make any difference then whether they understood it or not.

If this world of ours becomes embroiled in another great international war and we get into it, it is my judgment that the result will be so terrible, the impact will be so terrifying, that we may not survive it as a nation, and it seems to me utterly futile for any of us to stand on the floor of the Senate and talk about our "rights" in war trade; about our depriving a cotton farmer of the opportunity to make 20 cents a pound for his cotton, when the result of our getting into a war to sustain that kind of trade may be to drag our civilization down to utter ruin. That is about all there is to this. If we have so much reverence for trade, in the uncertain state of international law, when nobody knows what it means; if we are willing to pay the price which will be exacted from underwriting that trade with our Navy and our Army, gentlemen of the Senate, that price would terrify us if we could see it now. It might easily mean the end of our civilization.

The strange thing is that people talk about our "rights." What were our rights during the World War? We loaned Europe $12,000,000,000 so they could buy something from us—and if I am in error in this, someone should correct me. We loaned them $12,000,000,000 so that they could buy from us; so that we could give full play to the huckster impulse that stirs in our breasts. We felt so good over war trade that we loaned Europe money so they could make business good in the United States. They spent that money here, and the farmers got 20 cents a pound for their cotton, $2.50 for their wheat, and 30 cents was paid for copper; and the trade was fine while it lasted.

Then a peculiar thing happened. It makes this freedom-of-the-seas business stand out for exactly what it is. The countries of Europe told us, in effect, they would never pay back the twelve billions. They do not even make a token payment now; they do not even so much as give us a lead nickel on account.

Who is paying for all this war trade, this 20-cent cotton about which the Senator speaks, the $2.50 wheat, and the 30-cent copper? The Senator is paying for it, I am paying for it, every Member of this body is paying for it, every American is paying for it every time he pays his income tax, because the $12,000,000,000 for all this wonderful war trade finally became translated into Liberty bonds. And what are Liberty bonds? They are debts and obligations of the good old United States of America. Who pays them? American citizens. Who put up the money for the "powder" crowd and the "copper" crowd, and all the rest of them? American citizens.

Of all the funny hocus-pocus, of all the crazy things on earth, that picture of war trade is the craziest and, as I have indicated—and probably it does not rest heavily on the conscience of some—we paid for it in an Army of boys who died, and an Army of boys who came back with battered and broken bodies and diseased minds. The Gold Star Mothers paid for it. It is the saddest picture ever presented to this country. We paid for it with pensions and debts and with problems so great that they are a deadly menace to us as we grapple with the economic depression which confronts us. That is a true picture of war trade; yet, gentlemen, we talk about our having rights for which we are going to fight. But who is to do all this fighting?

If we sold the countries in Europe 20-cent cotton they would never pay for it. They would again borrow from us to pay for it. The Senator from North Carolina would pay for it, I would pay for it, the American people would pay for it. How could Europe, broke as it is now and spending the last nickel in a mad armament race, ever pay 20 cents a pound for cotton with any hope on our part that they will ever pay for it? It is flirting with the nether regions to talk about trade now when the countries in Europe, on their backs, are almost ready, like another desperate Samson, to throw their brawny arms around the pillars of the social temple and pull it down around our ears. Yet gentlemen stand in the Senate and talk earnestly about our rights and about international law, when there is no such thing in wartime, except it be found in books.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that we are trading today with every country in the world that is at war. Not only that but we are trading today with every country in the world that is preparing to go to war. We are sending war materials into Spain. We were sending them into Ethiopia. The Senator will not deny that.

Mr. BONE. The Senator knows, as I know, and as everyone knows, that when war comes on, the tempo of expenditures goes up inordinately. It is like putting a thermometer in a bucket of boiling water. The expenditures will step up so inordinately that to compare our present-day trade with war trade would be like contrasting a summer's zephyr with a cyclone.

Warring nations could only hope to get the necessary funds with which to buy from us, either through the sale of securities which they own, American securities—and England has many—or from some other source, and that traffic would inordinately step up production in our American factories.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, How is it that the European countries are going to become indebted to us, under this measure or any other, if we require them to pay us in cash, in gold, before materials of any sort or description leave our shores?

Mr. BONE. The Senator has not done me the honor to listen to all of my statement, and it is not my fault that he has not been in the Chamber. Under the Pittman resolution they would be required to buy the stuff before it left American shores, and it would have to be paid for in American coin. There is no such provision in the measure as it passed the House, including in the text, the phrase I have described.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not read the McReynolds bill, which was substituted for the Pittman resolution in the House, but it is my understanding that under the McReynolds bill—and I see Representative MCREYNOLDS in the Senate Chamber at this time—the foreign countries are required to pay cash before the materials leave our shores. They are not permitted to use bonds.

Mr. BONE. The thing to which I object in the resolution is that it is full of exceptions and limitations. Under the measure as it passed the House anything could be sold if the President decreed it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will ask the Senator whether he does not really think that as a matter of fact we ought to begin now to look out for the American people instead of giving so much thought and shedding so many tears over whether or not the countries of continental Europe and Asia are going to become involved in war.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from North Carolina may cherish any opinion he pleases about this question of war, and the people of his State and history will have to pass judgment on the accuracy of his conclusions, as they will pass on the accuracy of my conclusions. Our feet may be guided only by the lamp of experience, and I know what we did during the last war, and I know what we will do in the event of another war.

Mr. President, I do not want to yield any further because I do not wish to take up too much time. I desire to finish my remarks, which I have almost completed.

So far as my feeble voice can make this fact known, I want the mothers and fathers of America, whose boys may die in foreign lands and whose bodies will molder in trenches in an alien land, to know that we deliberately elected to put war trade above the lives of these boys. I want these fathers and mothers whose boys have no stake in this horrible game except the stake of death to know that not a single belligerent country that participated in the great World War paid any attention to the rules of international law which we are assured protect us in such a war trade. I want these mothers and fathers to know that when some of us assert that the rules of international law are entirely abandoned in wartime because of the impelling necessities of these nations that fight for self-preservation, that the apologists for this condition tell us that while it be true that the rules are suspended during wartime and will not keep us from getting into such a bloody holocaust, it is a happy and pleasant duty to return to the standards of international law after the conflict is over. The fact that this law allows us later to assert a claim for damages is little consolation to a wrecked nation.

The whole picture of war trade, as exemplified by our experience in the last war proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that international law will not protect us in a war trade; that it is futile to invoke the principles of international law in wartime against a belligerent nation fighting for its life; that if international law will not protect us and keep us out of war, it is stupidity and folly to invoke it to protect traffic to which it affords no protection. If there is any one duty on the Congress of the United States, it is to be practical. What is the use of invoking the canons of international law to get damages from some country after the war is over? The horrible part of this business is that international law does not and will not keep us out of war, and will not prevent an orgy of blood-letting and the creation of another national debt that would hopelessly wreck this Republic. International law has certainly not imposed upon debtor countries any very deep sense of obligation to meet their solemn contracts and commitments to us; and yet we are asked to lean on the frail support of international law at a time when men have become mad and the world is in such a frenzy of rage and hatred that the very foundations of organized society are shaking.

I had hoped that our experience in the World War would impress upon us a sobering sense of social responsibility. All about us empires are crumbling under the impact of economic forces generated by bitterness growing out of the last war. Another world war will, in my judgment, unleash forces that may liquidate our civilization and there will be nothing left to quarrel over. There will be nothing but the bare bones—the remnants of a magnificent civilization. The greed of men may exact that terrible price.

Even assuming that there is nothing inherently immoral in the impulse to trade and to make profits, that conclusion is open to direct challenge by every normal man when the exercise of the privilege of trade carries with it the certain and deadly threat of being thrust into the bloody maw of war.

To rely upon the resolution that is now before us is the most futile hope ever indulged in by a people. The flames of war may engulf Europe at any moment, and to employ this proposed piece of legislation as a barrier to our entrance into war is equivalent to spitting into Vesuvius to put out the fire.

I ask every student of the English language to read this resolution in its present form and see if he can find anything but a series of exceptions that will permit the freest sort of commercial intercourse with belligerent nations. The resolution says it shall be unlawful to transport any articles or materials named by the President "other than personal goods and effects." Never forget this queer language. The President can stop everything except "personal goods and effects." That is all war traders want. It is all they need. The permissive goods include practically every commodity that belligerent nations would want. As I have previously indicated, we could not ship our real estate. I have more than a lurking suspicion that if the world again becomes embroiled in another international conflict and that hellish orgy of death and destruction lasts long enough, even the real estate of the United States may be forcibly detached from its owners by forces engendered by the very wretchedness and despair of the people.

We face so many serious issues in this country that it is a national tragedy that we do the thing that may superimpose upon these issues the supreme tragedy—war. It is no answer to my argument to say that I am overstating the case, and yet that will be the answer that will spring to the lips of those who would justify war trade even though it be at the price of war. If war comes, and I am right, as I feel I am, it will be forever too late to undo the terrible blunder of judgment of which I think we will be guilty if we enact this legislation. The world cannot stand the impact of another great international conflict without wrecking our present-day civilization. All that is beautiful—everything about us that represents a conservation of 60 centuries of human progress—may go down and out in a veritable welter of blood. The next war, if of any great magnitude, will be as much more destructive in its effects upon society as the World War was destructive, by comparison, with the Revolutionary War. Another world war in which we participated would involve not only our financial structure and the lives of our boys, but it would hopelessly involve our civilian population and the whole social fabric. The only reason advanced for taking this ghastly chance—for indulging in this dalliance with the hell-born evil of war with all that it implies—is the desire to permit trade for profit with belligerents. That is all there is in this resolution. And to preserve that thing we may hurl our civilization into the vortex of chaos as though it were a worthless bauble.

The hands of Congress should be clean of any responsibility for enthroning any such monstrous doctrine in these tragic times. Read this resolution; read it carefully, and even prayerfully, for lurking in its language Senators and Representatives will find the seeds of national and international disorder and death. Of what avail to settle the other momentous issues that confront us if we juggle with our civilization in such a careless fashion? I would much rather pass a law in which we announce to the whole world that we intend to trade freely with whoever we please during war and that we will support that traffic with the guns of our Navy and the bayonets of our Army. That would not only be the forthright but the honorable thing to do. But in this resolution we go nine-tenths of the way down that route toward the fierce fires of war, but we couch our abject surrender in language that will deceive those who look to us with such passionate yearning in their hearts for protection against war.

How much better to be brave and bold and forthright and tell the world that we want to trade so badly that we are willing to defy everybody and anybody to carry on war traffic? Such a statement would be more in keeping with the assertion that we have rights "worth fighting for." If these rights are worth fighting for, let us boldly tell the world that we intend to assert them, because even though international law is said to protect such rights within certain spheres, everyone in this body knows that international law remains in abeyance in war. If this resolution becomes law, practically all that has been accomplished heretofore in the fight for neutrality is lost. In these uncertain times, when the very future of the human race seems to be uncertain and humanity cries for bread, we offer them this stone. If American mothers whose boys will die in such cruel fashion in the next war could only realize how serious this is—how much more important it is than all else we now contemplate in the way of legislation—I have a feeling in my heart that they would make their passionate desires known to us.

I would not have felt tempted to speak as I have were it not for the fact that enacting this resolution will be a blunder from which there will be no retreat if great nations should become involved in war before the Congress can meet again.

I merely want to call attention to one more brief matter, and then I am through.

Mr. President, the rules of international law go back to the time when Grotius undertook to formulate these rules in some orderly fashion. The advent of such things as the submarine and the airplane created an entirely new problem in the realm and field of international law. One might have suspected that when the airplane, which can destroy a vessel from the air, and the submarine, which can surreptitiously destroy a vessel from beneath the surface of the sea, came into existence that nations whose very fate may depend upon how those instrumentalities of war are used would undertake to write into the fabric of international law some rule dealing with the use of the submarine and the airplane.

This country of ours entered into two wars in which the freedom of the seas was the chief item, the chief element, the very heart, the soul, and the essence of the war and the cause of the war. We went through those two wars—the War of 1812, ending with the Treaty of Ghent, and the World War, ending with the Treaty of Versailles—both of them involved and meshed into and hopelessly tied into this problem of the freedom of the seas the right freely to trade with belligerent nations or any other nation during wartime.

Yet those treaties of peace, Mr. President, are silent, they contain not a word, not a phrase, not a clause, about freedom of the seas; not a line is written in there by the brilliant gentlemen who wrote these treaties of peace; not a word, not a flicker, not a murmur about this thing that stands like Banquo's ghost in sea lanes shaking its gory locks at this country.

The Declaration of London, I think it was in 1908, when the nations came together and tried to come to some common understanding about what would be contraband of war, ended in a fiasco. These great, civilized, Christian nations of ours refused to sign it. Not one of them, as I recall, signed the Declaration of London. And when the war came on, with the question of freedom of the seas and contraband of war, and what was contraband of war unsettled from the time of Grotius, we found Great Britain arbitrarily putting hundreds of things on the contraband list, and notifying us that if we attempted to ship them to any nation with which Britain was at war, or even to a neutral, where she could seize them, she would regard them as contraband of war, and our vessels were seized on the high seas and taken into British ports under prize crews.

Then there was a conditional contraband list gotten up by the gentlemen who were running the war in Europe. Representative LUCKEY was kind enough to put one of these lists into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the other day.

With respect to the rules formulated by the Italian Government, Representative LUCKEY said:

> The Italian Official Gazette publication of prize rules shows the sweeping character of contraband goods in modern warfare. Those rules defined only two kinds of noncontraband: Medical supplies and the stores designated solely for the use of the ship and its passengers.

We have gotten to a point in war, Mr. President, where practically everything is contraband; and if anything leaves our shores going to a neutral nation or a belligerent that one of the belligerents wants to seize, that belligerent nation will seize it. If one of our ships carrying a cargo that is authorized under this resolution starts across the Atlantic Ocean and is blown up by a submarine belonging to a nation whose boys might be killed by what is in that vessel, our national honor will again be outraged, although there is not a boy under the American flag that has any real stake in that cargo; only the stake of possible death. But, Mr. President, our national honor will be outraged, and all the newspapers will point with horror to the fact that the American flag went down, and all these little fellows sitting in front of me, these Senate pages, and boys older than they—good cannon fodder—will again go out and die in a war which is the outgrowth of that incident. They will support freedom of the seas with their lives, so that some may make fortunes out of war traffic.

What real stake have the boys in America in any shipload of cotton? Perhaps it comes from South Carolina, and it is of importance to the Senator from South Carolina, but why should little boys in the State of Washington die because a cargo of cotton went to the bottom? What stake do they have in it? What stake has my boy in a cargo of powder? My boy has this stake—the stake to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred a while ago, as I recall—a well-ordered civilization. Our job here, Mr. President, is to keep our boys out of war, but our whole argument—and I call upon Senators to bear witness to the correctness of my statement—as this question is discussed the argument in the Senate, the burden of our argument, will not be the lives of boys or the sanctity and security of American homes or what is going to happen to the boys who are going to die so horribly in case of war, but what will we do with and for our trade. Merciful God! Cannot we get the huckster instinct out of our breasts just once? Cannot we quit being hucksters just once and think a little about the boys who are to die?

Mr. President, I saw a shell described in some interesting literature put out by a munitions outfit. They guaranteed that shell would burst into hundreds of little fragments and that the metal of the shell was impregnated with so deadly a poison that if a tiny sliver of that metal entered a boy's body he would die in horrible agony in 4 or 5 hours. That was one of the guaranties. Another guaranty that accompanied the shell was that there was no known medical antidote for the poison. I wonder how American mothers would like to have their boys die in horrible agony, after 4 or 5 hours' suffering, with no known medical antidote available? It would be so much more merciful if the "buddy" of that boy put a gun to his head and let his spirit return to his God rather than have the poor boy die after hours of horrible agony. But the hucksters we have enthroned must have their way. We have plastered the dollar sign over practicaly everything, and now we want to plaster it over the American flag. Is that the heritage of 150 years of noble American traditions? The Congress should now spend its time discussing homes and boys who have to die and who may rot on foreign soil; discuss a new group of gold-star mothers, and not whether we are going to interfere with the trade of war profiteers.

Mr. President, I do not wonder that we have forces in America that men call subversive; I do not wonder that there is a growing and deep cynicism in America; that there is a feeling that we who stand in this legislative body have somehow lost the proper perspective on life; that we are not thinking about the sort of things we should. That is a dangerous attitude of mind for millions of Americans. The time has come to quit quibbling about profits and whether or not we are going to make a little money out of cotton. The time has arrived when we must do sober, serious thinking about whether we are going to protect the boys and girls coming on from the horrors of a social break-down, which would be the inevitable heritage of another war.

Mr. President, I hope I have not trespassed too long on the time and patience of the Senate, and I thank Senators for listening.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was unavoidably prevented from hearing all the Senator's speech. However, I had some idea in advance of what he would have to say.

In speaking of international law, I think it is well to quote from Prof. John Bassett Moore. He has been quoted in the debate against the neutrality measure possibly more than any other writer on so-called international law, and he probably has written more on that subject than has any other living man. He has taken to task Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives because they have stated that there is no such thing as international law. In his last work, which is entitled "Fifty Years of International Law", printed by the Harvard Law Review, volume 1, no. 3, 1937, he states that because law is not obeyed does not mean that there is no law. Of course, the so-called international law has not any of the factors that a lawyer understands to be essential to the definition of law. It is not made by any power that is authority to make it. It is not binding upon anyone who does not voluntarily agree to it. There are no courts to which questions arising may be submitted. There is no remedy that may be enforced. But I wish to read just what Professor Moore has to say with regard to that. I quote him as follows:

> We are gravely told that governments may now frame whatever "neutrality" laws they like, because in the late war international law was "shot to pieces." This is a great boon to those who entered upon the study of international law after the war, as, having nothing to learn, they may freely indulge their creative propensities. But the theory will not bear examination. The ancient maxim "inter arma leges silent" merely states a fundamental legal principle, which was happily expressed by Shakespeare in the line "The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept."

Professor Moore freely admits there is no international law in existence during war; that during war it is silent; that during war it sleeps. The only time that we really need law, whether it be municipal law or so-called international law, is when there are grave violations of the principle involved, when rights are being destroyed, when customs of humanity are being violated. Yet during such a period of time the distinguished professor says that international law is silent, that international law sleeps. I do not know what we would need with an Army or a Navy if it were just as ineffective as the great professor says is international law. If our Army officers and naval officers and our soldiers and sailors and marines slept when we were threatened with war or were in war, I do not know what advantage having them would be. I think the statement by Prof. John Bassett Moore should be taken to heart by those who quote his opinion so often when he says that during war international law is silent, and quotes Shakespeare, who says:

> The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.

Again I wish to say to some of the distinguished opponents of this measure that I did not desire to interrupt at the time of the debate, because I though it was better to obtain a vote. I have referred time and time again to the so-called Alabama case for the purpose of showing that international law was effective. It will be remembered very well that the Alabama case was the case of a privateer fitted out in British waters during the Civil War and put in command of Admiral Semmes, a Confederate naval officer, to prey upon the commerce of the Federal Government.

After the war was over our Government contended that the British Government had violated international law; that Great Britain had permitted that ship to be constructed and armed in British waters for the purpose and intention of attacking the commerce of a friendly government, to wit, the United States, and that they should have prevented the vessel leaving the harbor. As a matter of fact, there were steps taken by the British Government to prevent its leaving the harbor in Great Britain, but by reason of what they claimed to be unavoidable circumstances, the illness of one of their officers, one night the ship got out of the harbor. That was their moral defense against the claim. However, let me call to the attention of those Senators who cite the Alabama case as indicating that at one time international law was effective that the case was not settled on the principles of international law; Great Britain constantly denied until 1871 that the case came within international law; and then, in the treaty of 1871, which provided for the trial and determination of the Alabama case, in the very first section of that treaty is recited the incident and there are laid down three rules of law that shall govern the board of arbitration in considering the facts and determining whether or not damages were due from Great Britain to the United States, and, if so, how much. In that very section, however, there is a reservation by Great Britain in which it is asserted that the rules laid down are not the rules of international law, that Great Britain is not liable under international law, and that she simply adopted those three rules of law to govern the trial by reason of the then friendliness between the two governments and the desire to continue that friendliness. I refer to that because the Alabama case has been cited so often. The case was expressly tried on stipulations of law and on express assertions that it was not within the purview of so-called international law. I hope now we will drop that question.

But if there were international law, it would have to be by treaty, and, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] said, going back for hundreds of years no considerable number of governments have ever agreed together as to the fundamental principles of freedom of the seas. They never have agreed on what constitutes contraband. They came very near to agreeing once on what constitutes blockade. At one time neutrals gathered together with Russia and decided on what were neutral rights. They asked our Government to join with them. They were going to enforce those neutral rights against Great Britain and France by naval force. There is no question that when the neutrals in combination are more powerful than the belligerents they can name what constitutes contraband and they can prescribe what constitutes freedom of the seas. If, on the other hand, the belligerents are stronger than the neutrals, then the belligerents will, as they always have in the past, designate what constitutes contraband, and that is the very natural thing to do.

Even Grotius is quoted several times as having divided contraband into three classes—absolute contraband, noncontraband, and conditional contraband. All he can think of to place in the noncontraband list are those things which are simply used for luxury, for pleasure, for amusement. As to conditional contraband articles, he said they have a right to move freely on the seas to the enemy unless—unless, mind you—it is essential for one of the belligerent powers to take them for itself. That applies all the way through.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Under the Senator's joint resolution we are not permitted to ship any arms, ammunition, or munitions of war into Spain, are we?

Mr. PITTMAN. We are not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But we are permitted to ship them to Italy, are we not?

Mr. PITTMAN. We are.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mussolini stated publicly, according to the press of yesterday, that at the present time he has 50,000 armed men in the field and that he proposes to keep them there until they have won the war. May I ask the Senator if it is not just the same to sell those things to Italy to be shipped into Spain in favor of those who are fighting there as it is to ship them directly to Spain?

Mr. PITTMAN. The United States Government will be in endless trouble if it is called upon to determine what governments are helping other governments in time of war. I do not know whether the Italian Government is shipping arms and munitions to Spain, and I know of no way of proving it. I know, however, that 20 or 30 governments are now blockading Spain for the very purpose of preventing any arms and munitions from going in there from any place.

However, I feel that whenever we allow our sentiment or our feelings with regard to war somewhere else, with regard to who is suffering somewhere else, with regard to the cause of a war, to enter into our own personal case here we are involving ourselves in disputes and in the attempted determination of facts which cannot be determined, and it is a dangerous thing for us to attempt to do.

The law provides that any shipment to a neutral country for transshipment—for transshipment, mind you—to a belligerent country or now to a country engaged in civil war, is subject to capture and seizure and destruction as contraband of war, just as if it were shipped to Spain or any other belligerent country directly.

So we come down to the necessity of establishing laws to regulate reasonably our own people and our own commerce, and when we cannot do it by treaty we go to international law. We might as well face the fact that there is a tremendous number of statesmen, of lawyers, of professors, and others in this country who believe that in time of war there should be an absolute embargo on all commerce to belligerents. I believe the Senator from Washington favors that principle. He would rather have all our commerce with a belligerent stopped than to have us again be placed in the danger of being dragged into war as we were into the World War, and we all know the history of that conflict. A strong argument can be made for that position, but, on the other hand, as was stated at one time by the able senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] on the floor of the Senate, we are not responsible for a foreign war not of our own making; we should not be required to destroy our entire economic system by reason of a futile, useless war somewhere else with which we have nothing to do.

So the committee of the Senate have attempted to compromise the differences between those who hold, as does the Senator from Washington, that we had better cut off all commerce with belligerents than to be dragged into a foreign war not of our own making, and, on the other hand, those relying on the freedom of the seas who do not believe that we should have any of our commerce with belligerents interfered with. Let it be remembered that this has reference only to commerce with belligerents and not with any of the other powers of the world. So we compromised that matter. We provided there should be no exports from the United States, or its Territories or possessions, of arms, ammunition, or muntions of war to a belligerent. As to everything else we said our citizens should not take the responsibility of delivering other merchandise to a belligerent. There is no reason why they should take the responsibility. Such responsibility should be taken by the belligerents themselves or by any other neutrals with whom the belligerents may be able to arrange to carry the merchandise.

The only difference is that the belligerent, for instance, France or Germany or Italy, will determine that question, and determine it on the high seas. That is where it will be determined. If Great Britain, who has one of the powerful navies blockading Spain against the admission of arms and munitions to that country, finds one of our ships going to Italy, and if Great Britain should be satisfied with the proof that the cargo is intended for transshipment to Spain, it would be stopped. If they find arms and munitions going to Italy for transshipment to Spain, under their convention now with twenty-odd nations, it would be their duty to stop it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Would not they stop it regardless of any law Congress might enact? They would not care whether or not Congress had enacted a law to that effect. If a ship were leaving an American port for Italy and a nation now opposed to Italy in the civil war taking place in Spain knew the cargo was going to be transshipped to Spain, they would certainly stop it, regardless of any enactment Congress might make, would they not?

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly; and for that very reason I do not wish to have enacted any law stating that we will not permit the shipment of anything to a neutral country, and Italy is a neutral country. That question must be determined by the people over there who are fighting, and not by us.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Along that line, may I ask the Senator another question? Does his joint resolution provide that nothing shall be shipped to Ethiopia, where war now is actually in progress?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have not been informed that there is war there at the present time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume that the Senator is thoroughly familiar with the reports which are daily coming out of Ethiopia to the effect that war is now being waged there; and no longer than 2 weeks ago the press dispatches, which I am disposed to believe, stated that some six or seven hundred Ethiopians had been killed.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, we have had to allow someone to determine when war exists. So far we have not left the determination of that question to the newspapers. We have left it to the President of the United States. If the Senator has in his possession evidence which convinces him that a war is now going on between Italy and Ethiopia, I should say that the matter should be presented to the President; but we cannot determine merely from newspaper articles that a war is going on.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am sure the Senator will agree with me that a war has taken place in Ethiopia.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the war has been declared by the President of the United States to be over.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am sure the Senator will also agree with me that war is still going on in Ethiopia.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will not agree with that, because I may disagree with the Senator as to what constitutes war. As a matter of fact, practically every country in the world today has recognized the conquest by Italy of Ethiopia; and not only have the various countries recognized it but they have commenced to remove their former diplomatic officers. The attempt by a nation to preserve order in a country over which it has sovereignty is a different thing from war. It may constitute civil strife but not war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But in Ethiopia there never has been a surrender.

Mr. PITTMAN. There has, however, been a recognition of a conquest.

Mr. REYNOLDS. A recognition of a conquest by Italy.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would the Senator desire us to declare at this time that war still exists between Ethiopia and Italy?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my personal opinion that war today exists in Ethiopia, because the Ethiopians have never surrendered. Italy only has declared that she was all-powerful, and that she has won the war, and that the conquest was hers.

Along the same line, I desire to ask the Senator another question. Would the joint resolution prevent the Japanese from buying from us any munitions of war which they might use in Mongolia, or in Manchukuo, or in Jehol, which they are now endeavoring to conquer?

As the Senator knows, all the scrap iron in this country is being bought up by the Japanese. I read just yesterday, in a small weekly newspaper published in North Carolina, an editorial in which mention was made of the fact that every single ounce of scrap iron that can be found anywhere in Halifax County has been gathered up, and unusually high prices are being secured for it. Of course, that scrap iron is being sold to the Japanese, is going to Japan, and probably will find its way into outer Mongolia, or into Manchukuo, or perhaps into some of the other provinces of China that the Japanese are now engaged in conquering.

I am asking the Senator these questions merely for my information.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I understand the Senator, I should like to have him introduce a joint resolution to carry out his theory.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If I were permitted to offer a suggestion, I should say that before we enact any neutrality legislation which we expect to be of any benefit to the children of whom my distinguished friend from the State of Washington [Mr. BONE] spoke, or of any benefit to the American people in keeping them out of war, we should get all the neutral powers of the earth to agree with us that neither we nor they should sell to any country which was at war with another country. I voted for this proposed legislation, and I commend the Senator upon his noble effort; but I recognize the fact that, after all, if the Senator will pardon me, it will be a mere scrap of paper when the countries across the sea become involved in war. When all the other countries of the world are selling to belligerents and the United States Government is not selling to them, we then are truly going to begin to think about our children, not in terms of keeping them out of war—because this country will not become involved in war for a half century, so far as that is concerned—but we should begin to think about our children from the standpoint of keeping them employed and keeping our factories open.

I am going to be perfectly frank, if the Senator will permit this interruption, as he has most graciously done, and say that I think we in America have always thought too much about our brethren across the sea. We are constantly worrying about them. We do not want them to get into trouble. We do not want them to fight; and we are preparing to stop our commerce, and destroy our merchant marine, and close our factories, and add to the millions of unemployed—and there are about 10,000,000 unemployed persons in the United States today—despite the fact that we know that approximately 3,500,000 boys and girls are annually arriving at employable age.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me take up the Senator's speech in detail. I will take up the last part of it first, if I may.

Again the Senator says that this joint resolution proposes to look after foreigners instead of ourselves, and that it would close up our factories. If the Senator could find anything like that in the joint resolution, he should have offered an amendment to it on the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may say to the Senator——

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask the Senator to wait until I get through, please. I wish to answer one statement at a time. I do not wish to engage in another discussion until I answer what has already been said.

There is nothing of that kind in the joint resolution; and, as a matter of fact, it was strongly contended that there should be an embargo on the shipment of anything to belligerents. We did not do that. We said a belligerent could buy anything on earth he desired to buy in this country provided he took it across the dangerous water himself, or got someone other than an American citizen to do so. That is all there is to that. Does the Senator favor that or not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do favor that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well. That is what the joint resolution provides.

Now the other proposition: The Senator speaks of taking scrap iron from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Pardon me if I interrupt the Senator again. As I understand, that provision is in the substitute introduced by Mr. MCREYNOLDS.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it is in our joint resolution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But the cash-and-carry feature is likewise in the McReynolds resolution, is it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is in both of them.

Now let me refer to the scrap iron from North Carolina going to Japan and being made by Japan into arms for use in China.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Or perhaps to be sent to Italy in order that she may use them in Spain or Ethiopia.

Mr. PITTMAN. Every country of any importance is at the present time either attempting conquest on some other country or is preparing to do so, and we know it. Therefore, the Senator's only remedy is to introduce a joint resolution directing the President of the United States to place an embargo upon the exportation of scrap iron to Japan, to China, and to any other country which the Senator thinks is going to use it to make weapons with which to fight innocent people.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not think that should be done.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator does not think that should be done, then I say to him that there is nothing in this joint resolution which deals with anything except belligerents and countries that have civil war. If the Senator wishes to deal with other countries, neutral countries, he must suggest his own law on the subject. We do not know how to frame a law of that kind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask the Senator whether we should be permitted, under this joint resolution, to ship scrap iron to the loyalists in Spain?

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, to be sure; all the scrap iron that anyone wishes to export may be shipped to Spain.

Mr. REYNOLDS. To either faction?

Mr. PITTMAN. To anybody. As a matter of fact, when shipment is made to one faction, the other faction generally gets the commodity.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well. May we ship all the powder and the guns we desire to ship to them?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; we do not allow arms and ammunition to be shipped to any belligerent, nor to any country where there is internal strife of sufficient magnitude, or conducted in such a way that the shipment of arms and ammunition and implements of war would endanger the peace of this country. The President of the United States has found that the internal strife in Spain is conducted with such magnitude and under such conditions that our attempt to ship arms and ammunition and implements of war to any faction in Spain, to any part of it, or to any port, would involve us in danger of getting into the war. Therefore, he stopped it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I had about concluded my remarks. I rose simply to add to what the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] said with regard to the so-called international law on the subject.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a statement by me before he takes his seat?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I very heartily agree with what the Senator says about the doctrine of freedom of the seas. He has correctly stated the problem and has given a correct historical picture of it. I have repeatedly asserted on this floor that international law remains in abeyance during hostilities. That was the assertion of a conclusion, but it was based on a great deal of reading. I have previously indulged in research work, and I am now doing a great deal of it, dealing with the question of freedom of the seas, and it is a very illuminating history which may be dug out of the books. There has not been any clear statement of the principle, and the Senator from Nevada stated the matter absolutely accurately when he said that there is no application of this law during hostilities. The only consolation we have, and I think all that will be asserted on the floor, is that after hostilities are over we can go into some tribunal and assert our rights under the doctrine of the Alabama claims case; but that, of course, is poor consolation when civilization is imperiled and vast debts are created, such as were created in the last war; and I am very happy that the Senator has made that point plain.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That a comparative print of Senate Joint Resolution 51, the Neutrality Act, 1937, and the House substitute therefor be made and printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATE CONSTITUTIONS RESTRICTING SUPREME COURTS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, earlier in the month I introduced a joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 98, which provides for an amendment of the Federal Constitution, as follows:

No law of the United States or of any State shall be held to be unconstitutional by any inferior court, and not by the Supreme Court unless two-thirds of the members thereof shall specifically and by separate opinion find it so beyond a reasonable doubt.

At this time I desire to insert in the RECORD, in connection with that proposal, and for the purpose of eliciting information from the States I am about to mention, provisions of the constitutions of certain States.

First. Section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Nebraska contains the following provision:

The supreme court shall consist of seven judges, one of whom shall be the chief justice. A majority of the judges shall be necessary to constitute a quorum. A majority of the members sitting shall have authority to pronounce a decision except in cases involving the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature. No legislative act shall be held unconstitutional except by the concurrence of five judges.

Second. Section 89 of the Constitution of North Dakota contains the following provision:

The supreme court shall consist of five judges, a majority of whom shall be necessary to form a quorum or pronounce a decision, but one or more of said judges may adjourn the court from day to day or to a day certain: Provided, however, That in no case shall any legislative enactment or law of the State of North Dakota be declared unconstitutional unless at least four of the judges shall so decide.

Third. Section 2 of article IV of the Constitution of Ohio provides:

No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void.

Members of Congress from the three States which I have just mentioned advise me that no difficulty has ever arisen, to their knowledge, in the enforcement of these provisions of the several State constitutions, and that they have not resulted in the validation of laws that should have been held unconstitutional.

I make this statement because I know that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is very widely read, and that there is a great deal of popular interest in this subject at the present time, so I hope that, as a result of this statement, if the residents of any of these States have knowledge of any serious criticism or difficulty in connection with these provisions of the several State constitutions they will notify me.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of George E. Callaghan to be postmaster at Medina, N. Y., in place of A. L. Waters. (Incumbent's commission expired Feb. 17, 1936.)

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Erle R. Dickover, of California, now a Foreign Service officer of class 2 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Warren Stirni, of Delaware, to be aide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Paul Albert Smith, of Michigan, to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. That concludes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 25, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Infinite Spirit, creator of immortal souls, bear with us and hear our supplication in the name of our Lord and Master. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory and honor. O Divine One, let those influences which purify the world and give luster to human life mercifully flow from Thee. Our land, such a gracious providence, is so full of music, yet stifled and unexpressed. Almighty God, may it sound and resound in the hearts of our fellow citizens. The eternal harmony has never been broken nor has the rainbow ever ceased to span Thy throne. O may life's throng and press touch the hem of Thy garment; how much the pangs of hate and the wounds of paralyzing fear would be lessened. Arise, O Lord, in our Nation's sky with healing in Thy wings. Amid its crossroads hold all men to high purposes, lift our standards, and raise our ambitions. We beseech Thee, our Father, to clothe us with that faith which sanctifies the home, the common pathways of life, and that secures the perpetuity of our Republic. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 448. An act for the relief of C. C. Young;

H. R. 3898. An act to amend section 318 of the Communications Act of 1934;

H. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to amend Public Law No. 780, Seventy-fourth Congress, to authorize the acquisition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, for the purpose of making a correction therein; and

H. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution for the payment of certain employees of the United States Government in the District of Columbia and employees of the District of Columbia for January 20, 1937.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2291. An act to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73).

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

1937, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk that I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of the costs of government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few minutes' time this morning to call attention to the situation that exists with reference to the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission. It will be recalled that at the last session of Congress we enacted legislation with reference to authorizing that Commission to proceed toward the selection of a memorial for Thomas Jefferson. It was my thought at that time, and I expressed it by the introduction of a resolution, that the design for the memorial should be selected as the result of an architectural competition. It would have been in line with the spirit of the founder of the Democratic Party, and certainly in line with the thoughts and acts of his lifetime; and I regret very much that that resolution was not carried to its ultimate conclusion in the Congress.

I also regret the fact that the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission has not seen fit, to date, to hold a competition for the selection of a proper and appropriate design. They have proceeded without any policy as a guiding force and have named a design at the present time which, I understand, is subject to the approval of the Planning Commission. I sincerely hope that influence will be brought to bear emphasizing to that body of our own creation the importance of reconsidering their action and submitting the matter to architectural competition for the selection of an appropriate design.

That competition should be made under the supervision of the American Institute of Architects, and the latter body should be requested to select a committee of experts to decide upon the most appropriate design submitted. Through the aid of this appropriately democratic procedure young architects throughout the entire Nation would have an opportunity not otherwise afforded to rise in their profession. The very best thought would be brought out, as has been the case in the past. The principal portion of our memorials in Washington and the designs for the earlier buildings were all results of competitions. I discussed this particular angle of the situation at the time I introduced my resolution in the second session of the Seventy-third Congress. If the procedure I suggested at that time, and again urge upon those in authority today, had been followed, there would be no just grounds for criticism either of the type of the design for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial or the advisability of its construction at this time. With reference to the latter proposition I want to make it definitely clear that I am strongly in favor of erecting an appropriate memorial to the author of the Declaration of Independence in the city of Washington, but I believe we should proceed toward that end in such a democratic manner that the very best of the new and the old in architectural design will be brought out prior to the final selection of the memorial itself.

I have received letters and correspondence from all over the United States expressing opposition to the manner in which the present design has been selected. I would that I had the time and the space to insert in the RECORD letters from important architects and sculptors throughout the country from coast to coast and from Canada to Mexico who have been voicing this protest, many of them unofficially, because they do not care to step out in the open against other members of their profession.

Mr. Speaker, this is an all-important matter which means much to the members not only of the Democratic Party but to the members of all parties who are interested in appropriate memorials to men of importance in the United States. I urge upon the Memorial Commission the reconsideration of their action and ask them to take these facts into consideration.

Even at this late hour the members of that Commission and the architect of the proposed design should join hands in the face of the widespread criticism of the procedure that has been followed in this matter and cooperate in opening up the matter for a Nation-wide architectural competition. Again, I would remind the Commissioners that they should solicit the cooperation of the American Institute of Architects, asking that the latter organization supervise the said contest in accordance with the rules and regulations of the profession and select a committee of experts to make the award.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may sit during the sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF PRODUCTS OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if the bill is not sooner considered, for the consideration of House Joint Resolution No. 278, to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry, under the rules of the House, tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that before this request is granted arrangements should be made for the manner in which the resolution shall be considered, the amount of debate, and so forth. I would suggest that the gentleman modify his request to include an hour of debate, to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have already asked that it be considered under the rules of the House. I will further supplement my request, first, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that we take it up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman from New York will yield, that was not my suggestion.

We should like to go on and complete consideration of the pending appropriation bill the first thing tomorrow and before the special orders in reference to speeches have been disposed of. If the gentleman desires to come in immediately after that, I certainly would have no objection, but we do want to complete consideration of the appropriation bill that we had up yesterday the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, that is my request. I was under the impression the appropriation bill had been completed. My request is that immediately after the disposition of the appropriation bill now under consideration tomorrow I may call up the resolution referred to, and in response to the suggestion from the gentleman from New York, that debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman's request cover the proposition that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for consideration of this bill under the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] modifies his request and now asks unanimous consent that on tomorrow at the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill now pending he may have permission to call up the resolution indicated by him, to be considered under the general rules of the House and coupled with the request that general debate on the bill may be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that after the special orders for the day have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The request is that the resolution shall be taken up at the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill now pending before the committee. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution declaring Joseph P. Kennedy eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. GRISWOLD (when the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 146) to require contractors on public-building projects to name their subcontractors, materialmen, and supplymen, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 146, with Mr. RANKIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced 8 or 10 years ago and has been reported favorably by the committee with a unanimous report in each Congress. I may say that the bill originated through a former Member of the House, Mr. Goss, of Connecticut.

This is the first Congress in 10 years that the committee, of which I am chairman at the present time, has received a call on Calendar Wednesday, which explains why the bill has not been called up prior to this time. On one occasion it was called up under suspension of the rules, but lacked 6 votes of receiving the necessary number of votes to pass it under suspension of the rules.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is offered to defeat a very vicious practice that has grown up among general contractors bidding on Government work. The general contractor bases his bid upon figures received from various subcontractors. Naturally it requires expense and time for the subcontractor to prepare his figures. After the general contractor receives the various bids from the subcontractors he takes the lowest bids, adds a certain amount for overhead expenses and profit, then files his bid with the proper Government official.

After the contract is awarded, many of the general contractors then resort to what is commonly called bid peddling and chiseling. For example, they go from one to another engaged in the plumbing business, for instance, and offer the job to them at a figure below that which the subcontractor gave the general contractor in the original instance. In the end the man who was the original low bidder as subcontractor in many instances does not get the job. This practice prevails among the largest contractors in the country.

At the first hearing that we held on this bill, we were sitting down in the office of the Committee on Accounts just below this Chamber, and a man who had been low bidder for the woodwork on the Supreme Court Building, a responsible contractor from Cincinnati, appeared before that committee and said the general contractor was not going to give them the work, but was peddling the bid, trying to get someone to do the work cheaper than their bid, which was used by the general contractor.

There has grown up in this country a system whereby men are now becoming building brokers. They are financially able to finance a big job.

They have an office with estimators. They bid on big jobs. They have absolutely no other organization.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The broker uses the bids of the low subcontractors in submitting his own bid. Many of the so-called bid brokers do not as much as drive one nail in the construction of a building. They are using these vicious methods I refer to.

What is the danger? The danger is that when the subcontractor takes the job at a low figure he will, if he has the opportunity, to use the term the contractors use, "skin the job." He will not use the material he should use, if he can get away with it. The Government loses in the end in that it does not, on some of the jobs, receive the proper workmanship and materials which it should receive.

It is hoped this law will set an example for the States and municipalities. We feel, after careful consideration, this measure will eliminate the vicious practice to which I have referred.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. This is a matter about which I have not thought very much, though I remember hearing it discussed before. However, it occurs to me a bill of this kind, requiring the contractor to specify in his bid the names of the subcontractors and the amounts, with the terms of the contract restricting him to such parties, has a tendency to create a feeling of caution on the part of the contractors which might lead them to make their bids for a higher amount than would be the case if this were not the requirement.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is the argument which has always been used; but I may say to the gentleman a contractor looking for a job is going to bid just as low as he possibly can where he knows he can make a profit. There is no chance for him to lose, because he requires the subcontractors to file bonds. They are protected. Competition will exist as it does today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Contractors lose a lot of times, whether they expect to or not.

Is it not true that where there are certain requirements imposed upon them they will tend to make the bid higher because of those requirements?

Mr. COCHRAN. Probably some will, but others will not. In the end the low bidder gets the job; that is, the general contractor.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEITER. I realize what the committee has been trying to do in connection with this bill. I think it is a very good bill, and I am going to support it. However, I think the Government in trying to protect the third party is apt to destroy the second party. When the proper time comes I expect to offer an amendment, which I hope the Committee will accept. I know P. W. A. is now requiring that 25 percent of the work be done by the general contractor, and P. W. A. is the only Government agency which is doing it. It is a fine practice, and I hope all the other agencies will follow the same practice. I realize, too, that you are trying to get rid of the so-called "brief-case contractor", of whom there are a great many throughout the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. May I say to the gentleman if our committee had jurisdiction we would bring in tomorrow a bill requiring every contractor doing construction work for the Government to do at least 25 percent of the work. I think he should be required to do so.

Mr. BEITER. I hope the committee will report a bill of that nature. I shall be pleased to support a measure of that kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any member of the committee opposed to the bill who desires recognition?

I presume the gentleman from New York is opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides every man who submits a bid for a Government contract amounting to more than $5,000 shall name all of his subcontractors and materialmen at the time he submits the bid. It means he could not buy a pound of nails at a hardware store, he could not buy a pick, a shovel, or anything else of that nature, which might become necessary, as it frequently does, in connection with the construction of a building, unless he had named in advance the materialman from whom he expected to purchase the articles. I do not believe it is possible to put through this kind of a bill and escape increasing from 10 to 15 percent the cost which the Government of the United States will have to pay on every contract it lets for construction purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman goes far beyond the wording of this bill when he says the contractor could not buy a nail from other than the named materialman.

Mr. TABER. It is not beyond the wording of the act.

Mr. COCHRAN. When you use the word "material" it does not mean a nail.

Mr. TABER. It does.

Mr. COCHRAN. It means the man who is going to furnish the sand and the gravel, the plumbing fixtures, the woodwork, and so forth, which is named in the bid of the subcontractor. The gentleman is going away beyond the wording of the bill. He can buy and use what he wants if it meets the specifications.

Mr. TABER. Not beyond the wording of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is going away beyond that.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. He is making a misleading statement.

Mr. TABER. All right; I am just going to read the bill for the gentleman's benefit, and I hope he will listen while I read it, because evidently he does not understand the bill he has brought before the House.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. I speak from the standpoint of a contractor, having had 27 years in the contracting business. When we receive a plan we naturally send out word to different sub-bidders, and they in turn send bids in to us. We take the bid of the lowest responsible sub-bidder on the particular item and use it in our bid. This is the crux of the whole thing here. This bill calls for us contractors to name the bidder whose bid we use in making up our bid to the Government. Therefore there is no way of increasing the cost to the Government at all in naming the sub-bidder whose bid we use in our general bid. There cannot be any added cost at all. It is a question of protecting the sub-bidder from the contractor's peddling his bid after the contract is awarded.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this might, perhaps, protect a subcontractor who submitted a bid. On the other hand, it would tie the general contractor down so close that if he did any work himself he would have no chance to operate. If a general contractor is simply a broker who gets a bunch of bids in and relies on somebody else to do all the work, the statement the gentleman from Pennsylvania made might be so. However, if the general contractor does a big portion of the work himself—and I understand the requirement of several of the Government departments now is that a large portion of the work shall be carried on by the contractor himself—he is tying himself up into a knot from which he cannot extricate himself, and he cannot operate intelligently, effectively, and efficiently in putting across his job.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that the general contractor would undoubtedly be under bond to carry out the conditions of the contract, and what reason would there be for requiring him to state who is to do the work under him, as long as the contractor assumes the responsibility with the Government?

Mr. TABER. I can see no reason whatever. There has been agitation on the part of the subcontractors that they are being harmed in that after a contractor receives the contract he peddles his bids around and tries to break down the subcontractor; but there is also the feature that very generally these contractors can take a chance on saving a little money by efficient operation of their work and by doing a lot of things themselves on which some of the subcontractors have submitted high bids, and unless we are going to rely for Government contracting entirely upon bid brokers and not at all upon the contractors doing a large part of the work themselves, I cannot see how we can hamstring contractors and expect them to put in a decent, low bid from the standpoint of the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not read in this bill any provision that prevents a contractor from performing work.

Mr. TABER. There is none.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand the bill, the only requirement is that he shall submit all the names of the subcontractors he intends to use.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. DOWELL. He may use only one subcontractor if he desires and he can perform all the rest of the work himself.

Mr. TABER. No; he must submit a statement containing the names and addresses of the subcontractors, materialmen, and supply men whose services he intends to utilize, and then there is a penalty assessed under the bill unless the services of these subcontractors are utilized.

The evident intention of the law and the committee is that he shall make a definite statement as to the names of those he really intends to use rather than to give a group of names of those who would do a particular kind of work.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the way I read the bill; and may I suggest that, if the gentleman's construction of the bill is correct, that the measure requires that all the work be submitted to subcontractors, then, of course, there should be some change made with reference to that feature.

Mr. TABER. I have not made any statement that this bill required the general contractors to let it all out in subcontracts. I have not made any such statement; but I did say that unless the contractor was simply a bid broker, who did none of the work himself, he would be decidedly hamstrung on every single operation he carried on himself, and that we would not be able to get contractors who were real operators themselves to go out and bid on anything of this kind, with the chance that they could go ahead and, by efficient management, put across savings and submit low bids. Everyone would have his bid based entirely on absolute submission by subcontractors.

Mr. DOWELL. If I may ask the gentleman one further question—assuming that the contractor, under this bill, intends to perform all of the work and does not have any subcontract at all, what is there in the bill to prevent his proceeding by naming the materialmen from whom he expects to buy his material and then proceeding to do the entire work himself?

Mr. TABER. Oh, there is not anything, and I never said there was.

Mr. DOWELL. Then I should like to find out, as I only know a little about this bill, if there is anything in here that will in any manner affect the contractor, so far as the construction of the work is concerned.

Mr. TABER. Yes; he must name the material and supply men from whom he is going to buy his supplies and materials.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems to me, from what little I know about contracting, and I admit it is not very much, that the proponents of this bill are endeavoring to require of Government jobs an entirely different method of making contracts from what is ordinarily followed in private business. If you want to construct an addition to your factory or build a new home, you offer an opportunity to contractors to bid. After a contract has been entered into, it is my understanding that the man who has the contract then goes out and uses his own methods of securing subcontractors. For instance, in respect to plumbing, a carpenter is not a plumber, but the contractor may have used some plumber's figure in making up his estimates to submit to you, but that need not be the final figure he is to use after he has himself secured the contract. Why should the Government require a different method of business procedure from that which is ordinarily followed?

Mr. TABER. Of course, the gentleman is aware of the fact that this sort of thing is being attempted very generally with reference to Government work in order to make it cost more.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Would the contractors, under this bill, come under the provisions of the so-called Walsh-Healey bill?

Mr. TABER. I presume so.

Mr. REED of New York. Then they would have both of these complications, and, as a matter of fact, as I understand, under the Walsh-Healey bill they have to give a bond that they will comply with the provisions of that act, which means there is a small N. R. A. as applied to those men.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. And now they come along with another bill, and it seems to me that this is perfectly useless in view of the strait jacket they have put these contractors in under the Walsh-Healey bill.

Mr. TABER. Here is the situation the way it would work out, as I understand it. A bids for this Goverment contract. Previously he had received a bid from B, a plumbing contractor. The plumbing contractor we assume goes into bankruptcy. A cannot go ahead under this bill and let the contract to another without incurring a penalty.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield. The gentleman should be fair.

Mr. TABER. That is the way this bill hamstrings that contractor.

Mr. COCHRAN. I cannot agree with what the gentleman says. A moment ago the gentleman said that he would show by the wording of this bill where a man could not buy a shovel or a nail without giving the name of the man from whom he bought them. I want him to show me anything in this bill other than that which says the contractor must name the subcontractor and the material and supply men. It does not specify the material that is to be used. Any material that comes up to the specifications can be used.

Mr. TABER. The bill says that he must name those materialmen and supplymen who are going to do the job.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; the material and supply men, but the bill does not say what brand of material they shall use. They can buy this man's or that man's paint if it meets the specifications.

Mr. TABER. If that is the gentleman's idea, it will not have the effect of doing what the gentleman said it would with reference to protecting the subcontractors who submit bids under the general contractor. No paint can be bought except from the specified materialman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I say to the gentleman that every small contractor in the United States is in favor of this bill, and the only ones that oppose it are the big fellow and the bid brokers.

Mr. TABER. Yes; but the small contractor does not understand what is being put over on him.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I wonder whether the gentleman's interpretation of this phraseology on line 11 is the same as mine. The bill says that—

> The supply men whose services the bidder intends to utilize in the performance of the work.

I take it that that means that the general contractor would not be permitted to buy any material whatsoever from any person, in the construction of this building, unless that particular supply man had been named previous to the awarding of the contract. Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It seems to me that that is a correct interpretation—that you must name the supply men—and that means any person who furnishes any material of any sort. It could not be bought in the open market.

Mr. TABER. That is what I understand.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman is a paint manufacturer, and he bids on the paint job. He has 10 different kinds of paint. Every one of those 10 varieties come within the specifications. He can use any 1 of the 10 he desires, and there is nothing in the bill to prevent him from doing it, nor does the bill require him to specify what brand of material he must use.

Mr. EBERHARTER. But the bill says, on line 11——

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It says here on line 11:

> Supplymen whose services the bidder intends to utilize in the performance of the work.

That means every man who supplies any material of any sort to this general contractor must be named or else the general contractor is subject to a penalty. "Supplymen" means any person who would supply any material of any sort.

Mr. COCHRAN. "Supplymen" means the supplymen who have bid with the general contractor on the job, not what he supplies.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I take it that it means that the general contractor could not buy any material from any supplyman unless he had named that supplyman previous to the awarding of the contract.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am sure that the gentleman does not interpret it properly.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does the gentleman know that the general contractors' association carried on negotiations with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, in an endeavor to have this very proposition naming subcontractors and material men covered by contract in the contracts of the Treasury Department?

Mr. TABER. No; I do not understand it, but it might be so.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I suggest that the gentleman read the letter of Mr. Mellon.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman makes that statement, I accept it, of course. Let me ask this question: Is the effect of this bill that if a general contractor receives 10 bids from plumbing contractors, he may submit all those 10 names as the names of the contractors who are to do the plumbing job?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No; that is not the intent of the bill.

Mr. TABER. He must submit the actual one who is going to do the job.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Who is going to do the job.

Mr. TABER. That is the way the gentleman construes it?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. If it is to be construed the way the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] indicated a little while ago, and the general contractor could name a group of men from whom he was going to buy his supplies and have his subcontracting done, the general contractor could submit the names of all 10 plumbing contractors.

There seems to be rather a disagreement between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] as to what this bill means. I should like to have that ironed out.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I think the gentleman from New York misunderstood the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. TABER. I do not think so.

Mr. GRISWOLD. As a matter of fact, they bid only on the specifications. For every Government contract there is a specification that particularly stipulates the material to be used. When the contractor bids he knows what kind of material he is going to have to bid on, because that is covered by the specifications. He bids according to the specifications. I do not think there is any disagreement, even with the Department, about that.

Mr. TABER. Then the gentleman's idea is that he is hide-bound; that he must name the specific person from whom he is to buy or with whom he contracts for any particular portion of the job that he lets out?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That is the way I understood the bill to start with, but I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to explain it differently.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very much in favor of this bill, and I think if the gentleman understood it correctly, he would be in favor of it. I know the gentleman from New York is not in favor of a general contractor making a bid on a building and using the bids of the subcontractor or materialmen and being successful in getting the general contract, and then turning around and chiseling on those fellows that helped him to get the job.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; but this ties him up in every other way. If the gentleman had thoroughly read the bill, as I have for 8 or 10 years since it has been in the House, I think he would feel just as I do.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, why should he not be tied up if he used these other bids to get the job?

Mr. TABER. If you tie up a contractor so that he cannot make a move, you are fixing him so that he is absolutely unable to manage his job effectively and run the job the way it should be run.

Mr. HOUSTON. If those men were good enough to use their bids in the first place, they ought to be good enough to give the job to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As far as outlawing the "bid broker" is concerned, this bill is admirable. That is something we all want to do. The "bid broker" has no place in economic society today, as far as Government contracts are concerned. However, this bill has been here ever since I can remember, and I think the real delay in passing the bill is the fact that it does hamper and tie up legitimate contractors. We do not want to do that. We do want to get rid of the "bid broker." This thing was discussed when the hearings were held on the Walsh-Healey bill. I think everybody agreed we wanted to get rid of the "bid broker", but I think we should be careful about tying up the legitimate, honest contractor.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. In connection with the question that has been propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] with reference to supply men, on page 1, line 11, I am wondering what will take place in the event the Federal Government has another contract such as Boulder Dam, running over a period of from 6 to 8 years. How is he going to name his supply men and his subcontractors in that event? I am not a contractor, and I do not know anything about it, but I would think it would be almost impossible to name the subcontractors where a contract extends over a period of from 6 to 8 years.

Mr. TABER. I can see there is a very great deal to what the gentleman has said.

Mr. BEITER. Then there is the further question: What is to prevent a general contractor from naming the superintendent on the job as a subcontractor? There is nothing in this bill to prohibit that. That could be very easily done.

Mr. TABER. The subterfuges that might be used to get around it I shall not go into, but, of course, they would be tremendous.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would seem to me, from a reading of this bill, that perhaps its authors and supporters have in mind the construction of buildings about which there is not much technical difficulty, buildings of modest dimensions and of moderate price; but supposing this bill were passed and under its terms the Government were compelled to proceed in the erection of the new National Gallery of Art donated by Mr. Mellon. The first thought that strikes me is that the bidders on that enormous project, which is special in character—the Government of the United States has never attempted to build a building anything like it before—the first thought that strikes me is that under this law every bidder on that contract would have to put in his bid within 30 days after the invitation. It is humanly impossible for any general contractor to make up his estimates on a new type of building, specialized in thousands of instances in its construction, within 30 days and do it with any degree of reliability. Would not his tendency be to put the bid so high as to compensate him for unexpected difficulties which he might encounter? Will it not add greatly to the cost of construction?

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman has correctly stated the situation. At the present time, as I understand it, the general contractor is not given a great deal more time than necessary in which to get together the bids of his subcontractors and materialmen; as a matter of fact, very few of them have enough time in which to do it decently. A lot of things they must estimate at the present time on the basis of their previous experience. If they are obliged to have definite bids from everybody, even the fellow from whom they are going to buy a pound of nails, they are going to be hamstrung in such a way and there will be so much detail to it that the Government is going to have to pay for it. The contractors will have to increase their prices in order to break even on it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It certainly is not important, and it may not be interesting, but I have had only one experience in all my life in connection with the letting of a contract for a public building. Years ago the trustees of public buildings of the State of New York, of which I happened to be a member ex officio, asked for bids for the construction of the State department of education building. This building contained not only the offices of the department of education but the entire State library. The construction of the library was a special job. We could not possibly have gotten a reliable bid within 1 month from any reliable contractor. They had to study it for weeks, and then a series of bids came in, and they had to be revised, taken back, and gone all over again. It was a tremenously complicated thing; and the New York law would not for one moment have provided that on a job of that kind any bid to be valid must be submitted within 30 days. The State would have lost.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] referred to a 68-year contract on Boulder Dam. The contract was from 6 to 8 years.

Mr. TABER. I think some Members may have misunderstood the gentleman when he first spoke, but he corrected it later.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman know whether the Procurement Division and the general contract section of various Government departments have reported as to whether it would be possible to have bids prepared within 30 days?

Mr. TABER. There is nothing in the report that indicates that that is the situation. I do not know, of course. I do know from what little experience I have had in connection with Government contracts being let in my territory that it is absolutely impossible on a big job, for instance, such as the building of a veterans' hospital, or something of that character, for the contractors within 30 days to get together any such detailed statement as seems to be required in this bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is my impression that some departments of the Government allow as much as 5 weeks on bids. This bill, if passed, would probably affect the practice of a great many departments in the letting of contracts, would it not?

Mr. TABER. I should say that it would affect the practice of every department.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And many of the bids advertised necessitate trips to see the plans and specifications before a preliminary bid can be made, do they not?

Mr. TABER. They do.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is ample time allowed thereafter for bidders to contact all the supplymen, materialmen, and possible subcontractors they might have to see?

Mr. TABER. I would not think so with any such provision as this in the law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The bill carries a penalty for not naming these subcontractors after the contract is awarded. Am I not correct?

Mr. TABER. There is such a penalty. If the general contractors do not utilize them, then the penalties are withheld which are fixed in the contract.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I read the first part of the bill, it definitely provides that a contract cannot be awarded unless these names are actually specified in the bid.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then, after they are specified there are penalties if the general contractor fails to use them?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The bids will be incomplete unless all these parties are named.

Mr. TABER. And they must be named within 30 days from the date of the invitation.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I notice a statement in the report to the effect that this bill is designed to eliminate or curb a vicious practice variously known as bid shopping, or bid peddling, which witnesses testify now flourishes in connection with Government contracts. In the opinion of the gentleman, will this bill, if passed, either curb or eliminate the practice referred to?

Mr. TABER. I am afraid it will result in more vicious practices than we have had before. I do not believe it will prevent the doing of just the things which the proponents of the bill have said they were trying to prevent.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The general tendency of legislation of this character and of the Walsh-Healey bill is to place penalties and restrictions upon men who will not bid for Government contracts and inevitably leads to this situation: If the private contractor will not bid on these contracts because of these penalties and restrictions placed upon him by the Government, then the Government turns around and says: "Well, we have advertised for bids. We cannot get them. People will not bid, so we will go into the business ourselves and do our own work."

Mr. TABER. That is just what it leads to, as well as more inefficiency and more expense to the Federal Treasury on every Government operation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this committee I must say I was not present at the hearings held on this bill, which has been before us for several years. As a matter of fact, I do not think I was a member of the committee at the time hearings were held. However, I was informed this bill would be brought up this morning.

I recognize clearly the reasons for this bill, and I have a very sympathetic attitude toward it. There is a trail of frauds, failures, bankruptcies, and impositions on the part of some contractors and subcontractors. Failure to pay local bills as well as bills owed to those in the material and supply business, brought about especially by subcontractors who are not properly equipped financially to fulfill their agreements. Many of our supply houses do not wish to do business with many contractors now engaged in Government work. Failure to pay workmen leaves a train of bills such as for board and lodging, and affects many citizens. The situation as it now exists is a disgrace. There is no doubt about that. However, we do not want to flee to evils that may be worse than what we now have.

The contrast is made with reference to Government contractors as against private contractors. When we ask for a bid from private contractors we can accept the one we want, whether his bid is low or high; but when a contractor makes a bid on Government work and can furnish a bond therefor, the Government authorities have to accept the low bid. It is inconceivable to me that a bureau or department that has the authority in connection with the erection of a public building cannot use proper discretion at least contemplated in this bill. Even with the 30-day limitation the actual invitation for bids should not be issued until proper information had previously been given. If 30 days is not enough, let us amend the bill, giving more time. The intention is to get a prompt bid and to save the delay that we now experience. It is hoped that the 30 days will prevent the peddling around of the work and the coming into my community and yours and forcing the men in business to meet a supposed or a claimed figure which they tell our people they have from some foreign supply house, for instance, which may or may not be true. But our local supply people cannot prove it is not true. Our local contractors and supply houses are so often compelled to bid too low under misrepresentation and their desire to keep the business in the local community and to help local business.

What I am trying to effect in my own conscience is, What can we do to prevent the fraud that is being carried on to such a great extent without making matters worse? I cannot believe that the authorities who have charge of these contracts cannot use common sense. I cannot believe that if a fine is imposed it cannot be remitted, if necessary, by the department having charge of the undertaking. Some of these objections may be trifling. Some of them may be very important. I am like the rest of the Members; I want to learn more about the probable effects of the bill. This is the proper time, during the debate in Committee of the Whole, to bring out these things and see if the bill cannot be amended to properly cover the matter. The general features of the bill I certainly do favor.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. May I ask the gentleman if he favors this bill as it stands?

Mr. GIFFORD. Since the debate has started, and not having the opportunity heretofore, I confess to the gentleman I am troubled about the 30-day proposition. I am always troubled about the departments having control over these men who may have made honest errors, and that has been well brought out by the gentleman from New York. It may be we can draw a bill which will actually protect these contractors from unforeseen things that are bound to occur.

Mr. REED of New York. Do I understand the gentleman is a member of the committee?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am the ranking member on the minority side, but I was not a member of the committee when the bill was presented to the committee or hearings had by the committee.

Mr. REED of New York. When were the hearings held?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think a hearing was held some 8 or 10 years ago. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Goss, presented this bill at that time. It has been referred to on the floor of the House several times since, but I do not know of any hearings having been held lately.

Mr. REED of New York. No hearings have been held so far as the gentleman knows within the last 7 or 8 years?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to place any responsibility for the lack of recent hearings. This probably was thoroughly discussed before I had the opportunity of listening in.

Mr. REED of New York. I am not criticizing anybody, but this is an important bill and the very things that have been brought out on the floor which tend to weaken our convictions, so far as the soundness of the bill is concerned, might have been ironed out and a bill brought in here under conditions which would lead us to support the bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. There may be frivolous objections. There may be serious objections. We want to bring about action within the 30 days, of course, on some contracts. But shall we kill the bill because 30 days is not sufficient? Can we not believe that the Department could see to it if 30 days is not sufficient that more than a 30-day investigation will not be given? To me the great responsibility of the bill and the success of it lies in the common sense that may be used by the authorities involved.

If, Mr. Chairman, the expense would be greater to the Government in the end, that is another consideration; but the gentleman from New York did not bring out this point, which I thought he might.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, in awarding general contracts, bids are opened at a certain time and the low bidder if responsible is awarded the contract. He has obtained in advance subbids from subcontractors. He does not take these bids from irresponsible subcontractors. He accepts bids only from subcontractors who are responsible. The subcontractors have had sufficient time in advance of this to compute their bids and submit them.

When the general contractor is awarded the contract he knows what he is going to have to pay every subcontractor in the entire job. Then he goes back to the men on whom he has depended for his bids to find out what they will actually do the work for. I have known men in my community to make a bid on which they could live, yet, after the general contractor came back to them, having gone from one contractor to another, they have cut their bids as much as 20 percent, and have lost money every time.

The general contractor is the man who gets the profit and puts it in his pocket. The money which is saved by the general contractor does not benefit the Federal Government. It benefits only the general contractor. He makes that much additional money to stick down in his own pocket, and the Government loses.

Therefore, I favor this bill. It would be just as fair for the Government, after the general contractor has secured his contract, to go to other contractors and say, "What will you do the job for, and how much will you cut down this figure?"

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to agree with what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] had to say, that this bill probably needs some amending, yet the principle back of this bill is absolutely sound. I do not understand how any honest general contractor can object to legislation along this line.

As has just been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] the practical situation is this, and I know something about it, because some of my intimate friends have had experience in the matter.

The Government asks for bids to erect a public building. The general contractor solicits bids from all the subcontractors for the electrical work, the plumbing work, the stone work, the brick work, and what not. Based on these bids the Government awards the contract to the lowest and best bidder.

Immediately after the general contractor has obtained the contract he calls in the subcontractors. He refuses to give the subcontractor who was the lowest bidder to him the contract for the particular part of the work for which he bid. He then begins to chisel. He gets the subcontractors into hot competition for the work. After he gets them as low as possible he will say to one of them, "Reduce your bid $5,000 and I will give you this subcontract."

As has just been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE], such a practice does not help the Government one penny. Every cent of the saving resulting from the lowering of the bid goes into the pocket of the general contractor. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] just now stated that if there is any saving in that kind of a practice it should go to the Government, which is all well and good; but when the general contractor submits his bid to the Government for the entire contract he knows exactly what he is going to get.

It is nothing in the world except chiseling and unfair dealing when the man who has obtained the general contract goes out to the subcontractors and says, "If you boys do not kick in 10 percent, or some other amount, under the bid you submitted to me when I made the bid on the general contract, you will not get the subcontract." It is the worst form of peddling.

There may be some subcontractors, with perhaps a lot of men out of work, who are eager for the job. If it is a big job they may spend a month doing the figuring; and in order to get the contract and keep their men busy they will reduce their bid and gamble on results. The result is the contractor gets a profit of probably 10 percent on every subcontractor. Something ought to be done to correct that situation. Such a practice is not right or fair, and has forced a lot of honest men and firms into bankruptcy.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. On page 2, from lines 5 to 16, occurs the method by which the sums assessed and paid as penalties for failure may be remitted or refunded. In lines 13 and 14 it is stated—

> Was justified by reason of the inability or unwillingness of such subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman to furnish the material or supplies or properly to perform the work.

Does not the gentleman feel that this ought to be amended by adding at the end of the sentence the words "in accordance with previous agreement"?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I am inclined to think so, and I am also in agreement with the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that perhaps, especially in certain cases like the Mellon Art Gallery, which is going to be of unusual type and construction, 30 days would not be sufficient time, but, nevertheless, I repeat that the principle back of this measure is right and just and equitable.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think we ought to be able to save this bill; and I would like consideration of two amendments, that "contracts in excess of $5,000 and less than $500,000" or some suitable amount, be included as an amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I cannot answer the gentleman because I am not on the committee and do not speak for the committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I ask if that suggestion does not appeal to the gentleman?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I think the $500,000 amount is too low, because almost any of the better Government buildings cost from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000; but there might be some special instance like the Mellon Art Gallery, that is going to be of unusual type and construction, where certainly there ought to be more time.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will permit one further suggestion, I do not care about the $500,000 limitation. I would be willing to accept any amount that may appeal to the House. However, in line 11, would it not be very easy to insert "and addresses of the subcontractors, materialmen, and supplymen who have presented bids"?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Yes; and if they have presented bids, and based on such bids the general contractor gets the job, if he then goes out and chisels on the subcontractors, any reduction in the price that the subcontractors bid ought to be for the benefit of the Government. When the general contractor is awarded the contract he knows exactly what he will get for the completed job. His bid is based at least in part upon the bids of the subcontractors.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was intimated awhile ago on the Republican side that in the event this bill were passed and became law, it would tie the hands of the general contractor, thereby resulting in additional cost to the Government. I do not subscribe to this view.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. The general contractor knows what his bid is based on when he submits it. This bill will not result in the general contractor getting less but may reduce his profits.

Mr. HOUSTON. How can he change his bid after it has been accepted?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. He cannot, and he does not change his bid, but goes to the subcontractors and gets them to change their bids. For instance, I have a letter from a friend and reliable subcontractor containing positive evidence that a general contractor went to him and said, "If you do not reduce your bid $5,000, you cannot get it." The result was that the man had to accept the reduction or not get the job. This bill ought to pass and put a stop to this unfair practice.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this bill merely proposes to give the subcontractors and materialmen of the United States on Government contracts exactly the same consideration and the same protection that principal or general contractors have received ever since the Government started a public-building program.

I have heard considerable interesting discussion here today about the effect of legislation of this kind upon the cost of new Government buildings. I fail to see how there would be any increase whatever, if this law became effective and operative, upon contracts with respect to buildings constructed by the Federal Government. A general contractor, when he submits bids to the Procurement Division or the Veterans' Administration or any other agency of the Government of the United States, knows the day the bids are opened whether or not he is to be awarded the contract. Why are not the subcontractors and the materialmen who furnish approximately 75 percent of every such Government contract entitled to exactly the same protection.

We had for a period of years, beginning in 1928 and 1929, when the general contractors who built most of the Government buildings, whether they were small or large, owned no equipment. They brokered out every dollar's worth of work that was done. They made their profits entirely by chiseling upon the bids of the material dealer, the lumber dealer, the supply man, and the subcontractors, with the result that the general contractors filed a bid with the Government at actual cost and realized a very handsome profit by having their contractors and materialmen do the work and furnish the material upon a brokerage basis, and at prices that resulted in bankruptcy to literally thousands in the building-construction business.

This bill affects every community in the United States. We will take a small place where the Government is going to erect a $75,000 or $80,000 post-office building. Buildings of that class are usually constructed in cities of about 12,000 or 15,000 population. Perhaps some contractor with an office in Washington, or New York, or Chicago, or some other city, goes out and solicits bids from the plumbers, roofers, tile-floor men, electrical contractors, painters, and plasterers, and he sets up a bid, which he files down here in Washington, and he is awarded the work. Then he goes out and calls on these contractors and says, "Now, we want to patronize you local fellows, you are part of the community; we want to give you these jobs, we want you to do this work"—and we will say that the building is to be constructed in Indiana—then he will say, "We have a fellow from New Hampshire or New York who is willing to do this job for $1,000 less, and to show you what a good fellow I am and how anxious I am to have you do this work, if you will cut your figure $500, I will pay half the difference, and you can go ahead and do the work and receive the subcontract."

That is the condition that this bill seeks to remedy. Why are not the businessmen who operate as subcontractors entitled to the same protection from their Government as these "brief case" contractors who operate throughout the United States and who, generally speaking, have more or less a monopoly on the Government work, because of their practices? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] said that the extent of this bill should be limited to contracts of $500,000. The bigger the contract, the larger amount of chiseling that has been and is possible. These large contractors are the most serious offenders as far as legitimate subcontractors and materialmen in the United States are concerned, and I venture the assertion that during the vast building program that the United States Government has had under way in the last 6 or 7 years, taking it all in all, in the aggregate there is not a subcontractor in the United States who made a dime out of Government work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman know of any general contractor who went out and had a Government contract, got it on certain sub-bids that he had, and then went out and chiseled down the subcontractor and made a lot of gravy, who has ever gone back to the Government and handed it a certain portion of that gravy?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. No; that is profit. Practically all the profit that has been made in the large public-building program of recent years has been made by the general contractors at the expense of the subcontractors and materialmen.

Also there is a labor angle to this as I see it. I have been in this business all of my life. I have "tasted of the apple" and I have "felt the lash" of certain general contractors, and when the subcontractor is obliged to cut his price in order to get the job in his home town, or any other town for that matter, is it not the most natural thing that he will go to his employees, to his bricklayers, plumbers, and carpenters, and say, "Here, boys, I had to cut my price in order to get this job, and you fellows better work a little cheaper", and the general contractor, who receives the benefit of this chiseling and who gets his work done at a much lower price than he used in the computing of his bid to secure the general contract, cares not how the subcontractor or materialmen pick up the difference that he was obliged to cut, he does not care whether they go into bankruptcy, just so he, the general contractor, gets a profit, and I say the Government of the United States is too big to tolerate practices of that kind on the part of a comparative handful of general contractors.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that in Government projects that have been awarded to sections where they needed employment of labor to take them off relief, the subcontractors would bring in outside labor and deprive these local men of the job.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. They might if they were the victims of chiseling on the part of the general contractor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this bill because of the experience that I have had while deputy commissioner of labor in the State of Connecticut. I know of Government buildings that have been constructed, and the experience that has been related here this morning was the experience that I have had in Connecticut, where general contractors secured the contracts and then went out and worked one subcontractor against another until the job was chiseled down to a point where there was no profit at all in the job for the subcontractor. Next, then, who was the one that suffered? It is the laborer. Labor is the one that suffers under these subcontractors. I know from practical experience in the department of labor in Connecticut where the department was called on to go out and try to collect wages for some of these workingmen on some of these Government buildings, and found it impossible in a great many respects. I think the bill is a good bill, and I hope it will be amended to make it stronger, so that there will be a protection in the bill for the workingman who gives his all, his labor, and especially that there will be some guaranty of his wages.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The gentleman from Connecticut realizes, of course, that the Bacon-Davis Act is in effect, and that that is supposed to protect labor from the unscrupulous practices of both contractors and subcontractors?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and we have State laws that are in force.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, to a person who has written thousands of dollars in premiums on surety contracts this seems an attempt to write an N. R. A. for the subcontractor. You are trying to make the contractors good by law and you are going to have a tough time, because the history of the surety companies shows that when the "subbers" lose money they do so because of the chiseling of the general contractor. The general contractor who wants to beat the game is going to beat this bill. He will write in a 10-percent mark-up to take care of this angle that he would have chiseled out of the "subber." It is going to cost the Government more money, but if it will work justice to the subcontractor, then it is all right. There is one angle that the committee has forgotten in the bill, and that is the one who is chiseled the most in these sharp-pencil cases, labor; and labor is left out of the bill. When you chisel the "subber", the "subber" has to chisel labor, and the worst chiseler of all is the "subber" who chisels labor. The gentlemen who want to help labor can help labor tomorrow afternoon by putting back that appropriation for the Walsh-Healey bill in the Labor Department appropriation bill that the Appropriations Committee cut out.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

THIRTY-DAY TIME LIMIT UNWORKABLE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the 30-day limitation in this bill makes it unworkable for a great part of the country. During the time the debate has been going on this afternoon I talked with the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department and they were surprised that such a bill as this was on the floor without their having a chance to be heard.

They said that at the present time it is customary to let bids on public buildings in 30 days for what they call the eastern section, but in the midwest section they give 5 weeks, and on the Pacific coast and in the Southwest they give 6 weeks. It would be impossible for the contractors to get the specifications, get them out, go over them, and get the information necessary from the subcontractors and file the names of those people inside of 30 days.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will yield in just a minute. The suggestion that this is for the protection of the subcontractor and the laborers is a fine point, but the provision of the 30-day restriction on all bids on public buildings is absolutely unworkable because of the fact that the Procurement Division, because of the fact that the Veterans' Administration, with its construction department, has not had an opportunity to be heard. This bill ought to go back to the committee and an opportunity given to work it out so that a proper time limit will be placed in the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee will offer an amendment to change that to 60 days to meet the objection the gentleman raises.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does the gentleman know that the Procurement Division representative appeared before the committee and testified that 4 weeks was the normal time for the bid? That was Mr. Wetmore.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I understood someone to say that hearings had not been held on this bill at this time.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The bill now reads, word for word, as it did when reported out by the committee at the time of the hearing.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Was that 10 years ago?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No, sir. That was in the Seventy-fourth Congress. I claim no pride of authorship of this bill. It was a bill of Mr. Goss, of Connecticut, a Member on your side, who made a valiant fight for the bill and almost succeeded in having it passed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This afternoon the Procurement Division says that under present practices 4 weeks for the eastern division, 5 weeks for the Midwest and Southwest, and 6 weeks for the west coast are required.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I regret that they did not see fit to put that in the record when they testified before the committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. When did Mr. Wetmore leave the service?

Mr. TABER. Some 4 years ago, I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been on the calendar ever since I have been here. If it had been a good bill which would have helped the orderly processes of doing business with the Government, it would have been passed 10 years ago. It is so mixed up, it is so involved that it cannot possibly be a success and help the situation of the Government. It will increase the cost of contracts at least 10 percent and it will involve the Government in all sorts of pulling and hauling, which will delay jobs. It will tend to prevent the orderly processes of Government contracts, and I hope that the bill will not pass.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I have an announcement to make to the House which I know will be very good news. I understand, from what I believe to be reliable authority, that the Chrysler strike in Detroit is in the actual stage of settlement. The terms of settlement will be made known after a later conference.

Tomorrow morning when the press carries the headline that the efforts of Gov. Frank Murphy, of Michigan, have been successful in his handling of the great auto strike, then maybe it will become apparent to those who would have acted otherwise and would have thrown the fair city of Detroit into a state of grim reality of civil warfare that he has chosen the proper course to pursue. Tomorrow morning, I predict, the Chrysler employees will peacefully evacuate the plants orderly, without bloodshed, as a result of the conference and the leadership of the humanitarian Governor of the State of Michigan, the Honorable Frank Murphy. [Applause.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, some 8 or 10 years ago a bill very similar to this was introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Goss. I have always supported the bill, although it may not have been in the exact terms of the pending bill. The principle involved, however, was the same. It deals with fair practices, covering everybody from the general contractor down to the subcontractor and even down to the contractor. The principle involved is that the contractor obtains bids on a competitive basis from subcontractors and upon the figures and estimates thus obtained the general contractor makes up his bid. This fair competition exists among the general contractors where the Government gets the full benefit of competition. There is full competition also between various subcontractors under the general contractor. If the Government recognizes the right of the general contractor submitting the low bid to receive the bid, why is it not fair, on the same principle, that the general contractor use the subcontractors on whose estimates he based his bid? It goes on down to the laborer of the subcontractor. The subcontractor bids with the idea in mind of paying the prevailing wage, and the Bacon-Davis Act requires that they shall pay the prevailing wage. The general contractor who is awarded the bid ought to be fair with the subcontractors and give the subcontractors the same rights he has had, so that the laborer may likewise be treated fairly.

I think the bill makes for fair-trade practices all the way through; and the Government is interested in that feature of competition, of treating all alike. Labor ought not to be chiseled or have their wages reduced by a subcontractor going to them and saying that he intended to bid the prevailing wage but the general contractor had asked him to reduce and therefore he, the subcontractor, was asking the laborer to reduce his wages or to make some unfair arrangement as to hours or working conditions. So the Government is interested in having this on a full competitive basis from top to bottom.

As to the question of time allowed for the submitting of bids, I am willing to vote for an amendment changing the time if it is shown that 4 weeks or 30 days is not sufficient; but we do not want the time to be so long that a general contractor can receive estimates from subcontractors and then go around and peddle these estimates to others and try to chisel his subcontractors down before the contract is let. If the Procurement Division says that 4 weeks is sufficient, that ought to satisfy the Members. If that is the prevailing time that is now used, then I think the bill is written correctly. As I understand, those in charge of these contracts testified in the hearings that 4 weeks was the ordinary time that was used in letting these contracts.

I have supported the principle of this bill for 10 years. I think it ought to have been written into the law long ago. I am glad again to give my support to a bill that I think provides for fair-trade practices and honest competition from the general contractor clear down to the laborer. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have sought this time merely to add to my former statement this: That the Department suggested to me that the subcontractors in the far West and the Middle West would be the ones most penalized by a 30-day restriction. They said that at the present time the subcontractors need all the time they can get to make the proper bids so that they can be protected in the changing prices of material. I simply want the RECORD to show this additional information and want the House to have it for consideration at the time the amendment changing the time is offered. As I understand such an amendment will be offered.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Will the gentleman tell the House who in the Procurement Division gave him the information?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am sorry I cannot do that. I was switched to two or three telephones, and I did not get the name of the last party with whom I talked. I know that is so, however, because when contracts for public buildings are let in my district they allow 5 weeks' time in which to submit bids. In the far West it is 6 weeks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That contracts in excess of $5,000 in amount for the construction, alteration, or repair of any public building of the United States or of the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia shall be awarded only to bidders whose bids are submitted within 30 days after the date of the invitation for bids, and are accompanied by a statement containing the names and addresses of the subcontractors, materialmen, and supplymen whose services the bidder intends to utilize in the performance of the work. Such contracts shall also contain provisions for withholding from, or payment by, the contractor of such penalties as may be fixed in the contract for failure to utilize such subcontractors, materialmen, and supplymen in the performance of the work. Sums assessed or paid as penalties for such failure may be remitted or refunded, in whole or in part, by the head of the department, bureau, agency, or independent establishment of the Government or the District of Columbia which has made the contract on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, but only in case it is shown to his satisfaction that substitution for a subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman, as the case may be, was justified by reason of the inability or unwillingness of such subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman to furnish the materials or supplies, or properly to perform the work, as the case may be.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRISWOLD: Page 1, line 8, after the word "within" strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "sixty."

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment which seemed to be the cause of the controversy on this bill. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to tie this thing down hard and fast, except that the committee used the figures of the representative of the procurement division in fixing the 30-day period. That office stated that most bids were received in 4 weeks. This amendment would double that time. The intent, of course, is not to allow too long a time to intervene, which would permit the contractor further to chisel these bids, as happened in the case of the post office at Waterbury, where they were 3 months going around peddling one bid on marble after the excavation for the basement had been completed.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman inform us why the matter of time has to be fixed, why it cannot be left to the discretion of those asking for the bids?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It should be a matter of legislation, because they should all be on an equal basis in submitting these bids. As a matter of fact, most of the States and large municipalities have statutes and ordinances requiring bids on public work to be submitted within 30 days after advertisement. Further than that, the architects' association in practically all States and cities so require under their code of fair practice.

Mr. PACE. Does not the invitation to bid specify the time within which the bid must be submitted?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It does in some instances.

Mr. PACE. Different kinds of buildings and work require different lengths of time, anywhere from 15 days to 3 months for the submission of bids. Why will it not be sufficient to allow the department asking for the bids to specify the time within which they must be submitted?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I may say to the gentleman the reason we need this law is because we have left so much to the discretion of the departments and department heads.

Mr. PACE. I am not referring to the law.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am talking about this act here. The department heads have gone clear out of their way to cause trouble and to allow such practices as this to continue, which they themselves say in letters to the committee and in testifying before the committee are vicious, obnoxious, contrary to all good ethics and despicable and yet they do nothing to prevent the situation from arising. They state that they cannot cure the evil by their own contracts. We are therefore endeavoring to do it by legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question.

Would the provision of 60 days prevent a department from fixing a less time than 60 days? In other words, would any bidder or contractor have 60 days, regardless of any desire on the part of the department to have bids submitted within a less time? If the law gives the contractor 60 days within which to submit his bids, can that be varied?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I would say from a reading of the act it could be varied by circumstances, because it is stated they will not consider bids that are not submitted within 60 days. If the gentleman from Arkansas will notice the language, it says: "The contract will be awarded only to bidders whose bids are submitted within 30 days", as the bill reads now.

It puts a limit beyond which they cannot go. I do not think it would tend to prevent them from fixing in the specifications a less time. This is merely permissive and states a definite limit beyond which they cannot go.

Mr. KITCHENS. What I am trying to get at is this: Would a bidder have 60 days in every event within which to submit his bid and be able to force the Government to accept it?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No; I do not think it is so intended. I do not think he could submit a bid after 60 days and have a contract awarded to him. I do think that the department could fix a lesser time in the advertisement for bids and let the contract in less than 60 days, but it could not fix a longer time than 60 days. We merely fix a limit in this legislation and say, beyond this time you cannot go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 2, line 5, after the word "work", insert the following: "Provided, That no penalty may be assessed except where it can be demonstrated that the subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman has furnished to the contractor previous to the date on which the contractor filed his bid with the United States or the District of Columbia, security guaranteeing to the contractor the performance of the work bid upon at the price and under the conditions upon which the bid is made to the contractor."

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, certain scientists have frequently propounded the question, "Which came first, the chicken or the egg?" In this particular case I am just wondering whether the contractor, the subcontractor, the supplyman, or materialman is going to come first.

This bill is a good bill, and I am going to support it, but I believe it should be amended so as not to destroy the party of the second part, to protect the parties of the third, fourth, and fifth parts, the supplyman and materialman. You may realize what is going to happen to the subcontractor now that he has to mention or name the materialman and the supplyman when he accepts the subcontract. As I mentioned before, suppose he accepts a large job, such as the one involved in the building of Boulder Dam—and a majority of the governmental contracts are major—how is he going to name his materialman and his supplyman at that time? It is simply impossible.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have submitted is offered at the suggestion of the Associated General Contractors.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to read at this time a letter in which the reasons for offering this amendment are given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, this letter is addressed to me and is signed by Mr. Edward J. Harding, managing director of the Associated General Contractors of America. It reads as follows:

H. R. 146, a bill to require contractors on public-building projects to name their subcontractors, materialmen, and supplymen, and for other purposes, is on the Union Calendar, No. 57, and may be expected to be reached on March 17.

This bill is designed to give protection to subcontractors placing bids with general contractors on public-building projects. However, it places no requirement upon the subcontractor, materialman, or supply man to protect the general contractor when the general contractor, in good faith, uses his proposal in submitting his bid to the Government. It seems entirely just that if such subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman is to be provided with such protection, he should likewise be required to submit a guaranty in the form of adequate security to the contractor that he will perform in accordance with his proposal just the same as the general contractor is required to guarantee his bid with bid security when placing it with the United States.

It is, therefore, urged that H. R. 146 be amended by adding, in line 5 of page 2, after the word "work", the following:

"Provided, That no penalty may be assessed except where it can be demonstrated that the subcontractor, materialman, or supplyman has furnished to the contractor, previous to the date on which the contractor files his bid with the United States or the District of Columbia, security guaranteeing to the contractor the performance of the work bid upon at the price and under the conditions upon which the bid is made to the contractor."

The operation of this amendment would be to extend the protection of the measure only to such subcontractors who bid in good faith and have guaranteed this good faith. It does not seem that the proponents of the bill should object to such a reasonable proposal.

This proposed amendment is entirely germane to the issue, as the bill as drawn provides for penalties against a second party for the protection of a third party to a contract with the United States. The proposed amendment would apply these penalties only when the third party has made a condition precedent of protecting the second party. Unless such an amendment is added, the third party is privileged to withdraw his offer without penalty to the financial loss of the second party.

It is strongly urged that this proposed amendment be adopted.

Public hearings were not held on this measure, and therefore there was no opportunity to present this amendment for committee consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee will accept my amendment. This in turn will protect the general contractor and will not destroy the second party in order to protect the third party.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if adopted, would kill the whole bill and its effects. It is the same as the suggestion made by the Associated General Contractors when they appeared before the committee. They offer this amendment with the idea in mind of defeating the bill, just as they appeared before the Labor Committee and fought to the end to try to beat the Davis-Bacon Act and the Prevailing Rate of Wage Act.

This amendment, if adopted, would bring the third party into contact with the Government. We have no right to go back of this contract with the general contractor other than stipulate what he shall say in his contract or agreement which he enters into with the Government.

However, under this amendment the gentleman tries to make us go beyond that and not only enter into a contract with the general contractor, but go back of him and enter into a contract with third parties, consisting of subcontractors and material men, who are not directly interested with the Government in this contract. They are interested with the general contractor only. If you pass this amendment you will defeat the object and intent of this bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Does not the gentleman believe as the bill is drawn it is going to work a hardship upon the subcontractor too, who will be required to name the material men and the supply men at the time he accepts the contract from the general contractor? Is it not going to work a hardship upon the subcontractor? I am for the subcontractor.

Mr. GRISWOLD. May I say to the gentleman the subcontractors so carefully investigated this bill that they sent a committee to appear before our committee, representing 10,000 contractors who endorsed this bill as subcontractors. At the same time there appeared as the president of this association of subcontractors a man who represented an organization with which the general contractors were affiliated, and they at that time endorsed this bill without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t." They were for the bill as it was written, and they were for it insofar as the materialmen were concerned, for this reason—and I will give you a specific instance.

Over here at No. 1 First Street NE. we have an imposing white stone building, and carved upon it are the words, "Equal justice under the law." When Fuller & Co. had the contract for this building they went out to Moline, Ill., to get the furniture for it. They had the general contract. This was a building that required a lot of special furniture, cabinet work, and so forth, which had to be figured out over a long period of time. The Moline Furniture Co. put their people to work on it and submitted a bid to Fuller. This was the lowest and best bid and was acceptable. However, when Fuller & Co. were awarded the general contract, they went out and chiseled down prices until Fuller & Co. and some other contractor profited from the work of the Moline Furniture Co. in making the estimate. This is why the materialmen are interested.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed for 5 additional minutes to answer several questions I wish to ask him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman has stated that 10,000 subcontractors favor this bill. I have read the report very carefully, and I fail to find where the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, or any one of the 54 Government agencies has endorsed it. Can the gentleman tell me whether any one of these bureaus has endorsed this bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. The War Department has not endorsed it and the Treasury Department has not endorsed it, although Mr. Mellon in his letter to the committee stated the Association of General Contractors, whose proposed amendment the gentleman presents, had endeavored over a long period of time to get the Treasury Department to write into its contracts the requirement to name subcontractors.

The Architect of the Capitol in testifying before the committee stated the same thing, and said they would like to cure this despicable practice—that is the word he used—of bid peddling, but they could not do it under the law by writing it into contracts, because the Comptroller General's office had ruled they could not do it.

Mr. BEITER. I realize what the committee has been trying to do to protect the subcontractor. In fact, I have a concrete example in my own district in connection with two buildings erected by the Federal Government. One was the building of a veterans' hospital. The general contractor received his pay from the Federal Government and the subcontractor never received his pay. He did the work, did a good job, the work was approved, but he was left holding the bag. I should like to see something done to protect subcontractors in cases of this kind.

On the other hand, I do believe this bill is going to harm the subcontractor. I do not want to do that. I want to help him just as much as I want to help the party of the second part. I think requiring the general contractor to name the supply men and materialmen at this time without requiring the subcontractor to place a bond with the general contractor to assure the general contractor he is going to supply the material at the specified price or do the work at a given price is going to work a hardship upon the subcontractor. As for the legitimate man, well and good. This does not harm the legitimate man. This bill does not help him in any way.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am pleased to hear the gentleman say this does not harm the legitimate contractor.

Mr. BEITER. That is right, it does not harm him. It is aimed to go after the so-called "brief case" general contractor and the chiseling subcontractor.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If the gentleman admits this bill cannot harm the legitimate contractor, who is ethical, that the only person it can harm is the "brief case" contractor, then why not pass the bill and get through with it?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois and Mr. GIFFORD rose.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact the gentleman from New York did not say it did not affect the general contractor. He said it did not affect the legitimate subcontractor. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman further to the fact some subcontractors under our system of awarding contracts in the United States are much larger financially, physically, and in every other way, than some general contractors.

Mr. GRISWOLD. In many cases. I might further say to the gentleman, in connection with that, that it is true most of the material subcontractors are much larger than the general contractor.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. My question is simply this: Cannot a general contractor require a bond of a subcontractor if he wishes to, and does he not do so?

Mr. GRISWOLD. He can require a bond of the subcontractor if he wishes to. That is a matter of contract. When a general contractor submits a bid to the Government and the bid is opened, that bid is final. It may not be reopened for bids again after all the bids, including the cheapest, is known. If they could be reopened again for a second bid, the Government might get its building cheaper. But after the bid is let to the general contractor he reopens the bids of the subcontractors and, all knowing the cheapest bid, he proceeds to peddle the bid around and chisel some other subcontractor. He can require any kind of bond he wants from the subcontractor and as a result of his bid scalping he often makes an additional profit of 20 to 30 percent.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] that adoption of the Beiter amendment would absolutely kill this bill.

I do not see what right any of the contracting agencies of the Government has to tell subcontractors or materialmen, in effect, that they must submit bidders' bonds while a certain project is being prepared for estimates of construction. Most certainly in the bill as it is before the Committee, and without amendment, there is absolutely no restriction that prevents a general or principal contractor from requiring any subcontractor or building materialman whose bid or price he proposes to use from submitting to him some sort of evidence of his ability to go through with the contract or carry out the purchase orders that may be issued to him later on. Certainly it would be a mistake, in my opinion, to require these subcontractors and materialmen to submit a bidder's bond in the form of surety or a certified check and have this requirement come from the contracting officers of the Federal Government.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND] has well pointed out that no legitimate general contractor, no ethical general contractor, has anything to fear from the operation of this bill. This bill is not directed at the very substantial number of legitimate general contractors in the United States, but it is directed at the chiseling general contractor, the contractor who attempts to make all of his money by beating down the prices of the materialmen in every city of this country where a Government contract or a Government project is under way and where this type of contractor has been successful in securing the award of a contract. I do not believe we should hamstring this very fine piece of legislation by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER], who, I know, offers the amendment in very good faith. However, I believe his conception of the entire proposition of sub-bids is in error, and I therefore hope the Committee will defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2, line 1, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following language: "But no contractor or materialman or supplyman shall be required to be named where the total amount involved of the individual subcontract or the amount required to be furnished by any materialman or supplyman does not exceed $500."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered with the idea that the bill would not be so burdensome on the Government or so burdensome on the general contractor as it would otherwise.

The amendment provides that where the subcontract or the material to be furnished or the supplies from any one individual shall be less than $500, the subcontractor, the supplyman, or the materialman need not be named. This would give the general contractor a little opportunity to take care of himself on the small things, so he would not need to go out on every little thing that he required and get a bid. This would also give him a chance to get his materials together without such great expense or such great burden as he would be put to with the bill as it now stands. Frankly, I think the figure I have put in the amendment of $500 is low, but I thought I would put that in because I wanted to get something in the measure that would give the Government a little break under its terms.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think the gentleman's amendment is a reasonable one. I cannot speak for the committee as a whole, but so far as I am personally concerned, I would be willing to accept it.

Mr. TABER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Does the amendment refer just to material men or subcontractors?

Mr. TABER. Subcontractors and materialmen, because in case there is $200 or $300 worth of plumbing or $200 or $300 or $400 worth of lighting fixtures, you should not expect your general contractor to go out and get definite bids from all subcontractors and name them. You have got to give him some range or he is going to have a tremendous job in getting up his detail work.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say to the gentleman I am inclined to agree to the amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am also inclined to agree with the gentleman's amendment from the standpoint of the material men, but from the standpoint of the subcontractor, we might get into considerable difficulty.

Mr. TABER. If there is any subcontractor who is below $500 on any of these Government buildings, it is the kind of job where your general contractor ought to be allowed to go ahead and submit his bid without being required to go through all the rigamarole of getting bids from subcontractors.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is not my intention to oppose the gentleman's amendment, but the thought came to my mind of instances of painting and things of that kind.

Mr. TABER. I think your general contractor ought to be allowed that much range if the amount involved is as low a figure as $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEVER: Page 2, line 16, after the word "be", strike out the period, insert a comma and the words "in accordance with previous agreements."

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of clarifying any dispute that would come up over the question of the repayment or the remission of penalties under this bill. My colleague from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is unable to be here today on account of illness, and has asked me to present this amendment. The amendment simply clarifies the issues in case of dispute as to whether or not these penalties should be remitted. It requires each party to have something definite as to contractual obligations between them. It certainly could not hurt the contractor or the subcontractor if they should be required to present their agreement for the information of the department, which would show whether or not the contractor was entitled to have a remission of this penalty for failure of a subcontractor or materialman to comply with the terms of his contract and in case of the protest of the subcontractor he, too, would be compelled to show a violation of the agreement between him and the contractor.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to oppose this amendment. I think probably there is merit in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 2, line 5, after the word "work", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following language: "as well as for failure to pay such subcontractors, material men, and supply men (in proportion to the amount due them respectively in relation to the amount due the contractor on any payment date) as the contractor is paid by the United States."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this is not a pro-forma amendment. I am heartily in favor of the object of this bill, and simply wish to make it go far enough to reach the very serious condition and practice in the building industry whereby, under existing law, the contractors in many instances are enabled to finance themselves in the completion of their contracts, at the expense of the subcontractors. For instance, take a man engaged in the quarrying of marble, limestone, or any other natural stone. He furnishes $1,000 worth of the stone, delivered on the ground, accepted by the general contractor and actually used in the building. The contractor, after the first estimate by the Architect, will receive $850 for that stone, and yet he may never pay the man who furnished it.

I could give you illustration after illustration. Take the Terre Haute, Ind., post-office building in the State of the gentleman who is handling this bill, where $41,000 worth of Alabama marble went into its completion, was accepted and is now in use, yet not one dime of the money paid the general contractor for that marble, under the Architect's estimate, has ever found its way back to the man who went into the bowels of the earth to dig that marble, and cut, finished, polished, delivered, put it in place. Through the fault of this iniquitous system under which we are operating, the subcontractor furnishing this beautiful and everlasting marble is unpaid and will never be paid.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Terre Haute is my home town, and the gentleman is talking about one of the biggest jobs I ever had since I came to Congress, which was to help the subcontractors collect the money from the contractor.

Mr. HOBBS. I know the gentlewoman has been very active and helpful in that, and we may be able eventually to get a part of this honest debt paid by a bonding company. All this amendment asks is fair play; that as and when the general contractor collects money for materials furnished by subcontractors, he shall pay to each of them a sum in proportion to the amount he receives—their fair share.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman is aware of the fact that on these Government contracts they are broken down four ways.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Would the gentleman's amendment affect it in this way? Possibly the excavation has been done and the stone work has not. The man doing the excavation would receive his pro-rata share of the amount that was allowed under the contract for the excavation.

Mr. HOBBS. That is correct. In other words, this amendment says that the amount due each subcontractor, material man, or supply man, as it relates to the amount due the general contractor on any payment date shall be paid as the Government pays the general contractor. We should no longer permit the contractors to compel subcontractors to wait for their money until the contractors see fit to pay them. I know of one instance in which a subcontractor had to wait for 8 years, and but for the Heard Act and the Miller amendment thereto he would be waiting yet. This is a bona-fide, honest-to-God amendment that really will strengthen the bill. I am heartily in favor of the bill as it is written, but it does not go far enough. While it protects the subcontractors against chiseling, it does not say a word about payment to them of their honest dues, as the general contractor gets his money from the Government. I respectfully submit to the committee in charge of the bill that the amendment should be accepted.

I sincerely hope that every Member of the House will vote in favor of this meritorious amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama appears to me to work exactly in harmony with the present law governing contractors' bonds, and it covers the same subject that could well be covered in that statute, which the Congress considered and passed last year. I believe the amendment ought to be adopted. I do not think it could hurt this act, and I think it will render equitable justice to all of them and tend to prevent litigation between subcontractors and contractors.

Mr. HOBBS. That was exactly the purpose of this amendment as I drew it. It was to further the purport of your amendment to the Heard Act—exactly "down the alley" that is sought to be traveled by the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman is very constructive and will help the bill, and I hope by all means the Committee will adopt it.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEGER: On page 1, line 8, strike out all of line 8 and part of line 9, down to the word "and", so that the bill will read: "shall be awarded to bidders whose bids are accompanied", etc.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I have been connected with the building business for a great many years, and I know the Government has always stipulated the time within which a bid shall be rendered.

Here we are dealing not with a large amount or a small amount, five or ten thousand dollars. A man who is bidding on a $5,000,000 job may need more than 60 days. Some of the contractors might require 90 days or longer. The Department's Architect is more qualified to fix the time than we are here. I would like to bring that to the attention of the Committee. We should eliminate the time within which these bids are to be awarded, and have the bill simply read that it shall be awarded to bidders whose bids are accompanied, and so forth, eliminating the time feature. I do not think we can fix 30 days or 60 days as the proper time within which to submit a bid. We are inviting trouble for the architects if we attempt to fix the time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEGER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it permits the Department to specify how much time is required?

Mr. SEGER. Yes. I think they are better qualified to say than we are.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It leaves it to the discretion of the Department entirely?

Mr. SEGER. Yes, sir.

I ask for favorable consideration of the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, originally this bill provided for 30 days, because of the facts testified to before the committee, that practically all of these contracts were taken care of in 4 weeks. Now, we have more than doubled that time. First, there are the notices, then there is the invitation to bid, and then there is an opportunity to look over all the specifications. A man who has an organization of architects and engineers, a man who has something else besides a wheelbarrow and a brief case, a man who is in business legitimately with an organization, is in shape to go over the specifications and decide on his bid certainly within 60 days. If you strike out the time limit entirely and leave it to the discretion of the officer who lets the contract, there will be all kinds of delay. I called attention to the case at Waterbury, where they were months peddling around a bid for marble before they finally made a bid for that Federal building.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. SEGER. Of course, if there was a time set within which these bids should be rendered, they could not spend months peddling around a bid for marble.

Mr. GRISWOLD. But when you leave it to the discretion of the contracting officer, that is the way it is now. That is one of the evils that we hope to clear up at this time by this bill.

Mr. SEGER. Does the gentleman believe that he, or I, or Members of Congress, who are not builders, are better qualified to pass on the length of time required than the Supervising Architect?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does the gentleman think that when the Building Trades Employers Association, comprising some 15 different organizations of contractors, an association that takes in all the contractors in the United States, not merely the general contractors' associations, does the gentleman think that if those gentleman are agreeable to fixing a time limit of 30 days, that we should leave it out entirely? They are the interested men. They are the men who have to bid. If they are agreeable to 30 days, certainly nobody else ought to kick. He is the man who must present the figure. He says the bill is agreeable. We have doubled it and made it 60 days. I think the amendment should be voted down, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No claim for the remission or refund of any penalty shall be granted under this act unless application therefor is filed within 1 year after the liability of the contractor accrues. If any such application for refund of any sum paid as a penalty is denied, or if no application for such refund is filed within the period provided for filing application under this section, such sum shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may hereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANKIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 146, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was, on motion of Mr. GRISWOLD, laid on the table.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has no further business today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. WOODRUFF, Mr. GREEVER, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, and Mr. FITZGERALD asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

CALL OF COMMITTEES

The Clerk called the roll of the committees.

Mr. RANKIN (when the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, I call up the bill (H. R. 5331) to restore certain benefits to World War veterans suffering with paralysis, paresis, or blindness, or who are helpless or bedridden, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was reported unanimously out of our committee, everyone agreeing to it and approving of it?

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the date of enactment of this act any World War veteran suffering from paralysis, paresis, or blindness, or who is helpless or bedridden, as the result of any disability, may be awarded compensation under the laws and interpretations governing this class of cases prior to the enactment of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, subject, however, to the limitations, except as to misconduct or willful misconduct, contained in sections 27 and 28 of Public Law No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934: Provided, That the language herein contained shall not be construed to reduce or discontinue compensation authorized under the provisions of section 26 of Public Law No. 141, Seventy-third Congress: Provided further, That where a World War veteran dies or has died from disease or injury, and service connection for such disease or injury is established under the provisions of this act, the surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent parents shall be entitled to receive compensation at the rates prescribed in Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), part I, paragraph IV, and amendments thereto: Provided further, That for the purposes of awarding compensation under this act, service connection of disability may be determined or redetermined in any cases where claim has been or is filed by the veteran, widow, child, or children, and/or dependent parent or parents.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRISWOLD: Page 1, line 6, after the comma, insert "or who is otherwise totally disabled."

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment is simply to take in some other cases that I do not think the language of the bill as it now reads will cover, for as reported the bill provides only for paralysis, paresis, or blindness, thereby fixing these three disabilities.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Those are the three disabilities that were taken care of before the Economy Act went into effect.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I understand that, but I think the gentlewoman from Massachusetts will agree with me after she hears my statement. The bill further provides for care of those helpless or bedridden. We have very many cases, as the gentlewoman knows, which are not helpless or bedridden yet are totally disabled. They walk around. We have these heart cases that come from the same causes as the others; they walk around, but they cannot work; they cannot do anything. To all intents and purposes they are unable to earn a livelihood. They require medical aid, but they are not bedridden, yet they are not helpless because they can walk around. I do not think it would harm the bill to include these cases and I think it might serve to protect them. I understand there are quite a few such cases.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know how many such cases there would be?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I do not. In reading the bill I noticed this particular feature. I discussed this amendment with the chairman of the committee. He thought it would do no harm, but he said he could not accept it because the committee had acted on the bill without the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD]. I think it is a good amendment, and I trust it will be agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What is the idea of using the term "misconduct" as well as "willful misconduct"? What is the differentiation between those two terms?

Mr. RANKIN. To what line does the gentleman refer?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Page 1, line 10. It looks to me like the term "misconduct" would embrace all of it.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that we were merely following the verbiage of the old law, in which most of those expressions were used, in order that there would be no doubt about the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman I would like to see the first one stricken out, and I would like to see both of them stricken out, because I have long since come to the conclusion, when we consider how these millions of young men, many of them mere boys, were taken out of their home surroundings and subjected to the dangers and conditions that they were at that time, and incurred these diseases, that they were service-connected, and they are just as much entitled to compensation as any other veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Colorado and to the Members of this House that this bill corrects to some extent what I have considered one of the most inhuman provisions of the law, whereby they undertook, back 12 or 15 years ago, to exclude from the benefits of veterans' legislation men whose disabilities were alleged to be attributable to their own misconduct. In that way they have penalized many of the best soldiers we had in the service and have encouraged the medical staff of the Veterans' Administration to attribute to that misconduct various and sundry disabilities that were not caused by that misconduct.

In addition to that, they have permitted many of these men to go on from year to year with this humiliation upon them, and have denied them compensation at the hands of the Government they served. As I stated, this class included many of the best soldiers we had. When they passed away, this stigma was visited upon their children so long as they lived. I have tried for years to get this provision removed entirely from the law, and I will go just as far as any Member of the House to that end.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] improves the bill in this respect, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. How many veterans are affected by this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Under the bill as originally written there would probably be about 1,000 veterans affected. With the adoption of this amendment there will probably be more, but over 2,000, I should say. May I say to the gentleman from Mississippi there is more in this bill than merely the number of men affected. Some of these blind men have been put back on the roll; but under the law as now written if those men should pass away their widows and orphans would not be taken care of. So if the bill is passed with this amendment, then when the ones falling within the provisions of this bill die, their widows and orphans will be cared for.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Has the gentleman any idea of the total number of these so-called willful-misconduct cases?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not have the figures before me. A great many of those men are blind and have been put back on the roll under another provision of the law. Many of them are insane and many of them, of course, have already passed away. As I said to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] a moment ago, some of those men have been placed back on the roll. The blind veterans, for instance, are taken care of so long as they live, but when they die, unless this bill is passed or a similar measure, their widows and orphans will not be cared for.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, unless this bill is passed the widows and orphans of these men will not be taken care of.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. As I understand the bill, it includes for compensation veterans suffering from paralysis, paresis, or blindness, except where it may be attributable to misconduct or willful misconduct. In other words, it is subject to these limitations?

Mr. RANKIN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is agreed to, those suffering from paralysis, paresis, or blindness, and are helpless or bedridden, or otherwise totally disabled, will be taken care of under this bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] if this bill is adopted and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is agreed to whether it will remove entirely this prohibition that we put into the law some time ago denying relief to those who were suffering as the result of their own misconduct?

Mr. RANKIN. It may not take care of every single case, but it will take care of the ones who are totally disabled, and also those who are suffering from paralysis, paresis, or blindness. It will also take care of the widows and orphans of those men when they pass away.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman states it will not take care of all of them. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what class of veterans this will not take care of?

Mr. RANKIN. Without going into medical terms, suppose a man had heart trouble. Of course, invariably those cases are not attributable to misconduct. Suppose he is affected with heart trouble that does not result in paresis, paralysis, or blindness, and he is not totally disabled; then he would not fall within the provisions of this bill, if it was held that his disability was caused by his own misconduct. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin cases of that kind are rather rare; but this bill will take care of practically the entire number.

Mr. BOILEAU. I admire the gentleman's attitude toward veterans, and I appreciate his bringing this bill before the House at the present time to correct a gross error committed some years ago.

However, I do want to say to the gentleman, I am hopeful he will prepare an amendment—I am not capable of doing it, as I do not know the legislation well enough—to remove all of the unfair restrictions from our legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have been working on this proposition for years. We took this up before the full committee and called in witnesses. Under the circumstances, I am afraid this is about as good as we can do at the present time.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have had an opportunity the last couple of years to discuss this subject with many Members of the House of Representatives, particularly the men who were in the service. I have yet to find a single Member of the House who is not willing to go all the way with the gentleman in correcting this error. There may be some Members here who would not support legislation to remove this injustice entirely, but I have not come across any Members who were not willing to do so. I submit to the gentleman that if he does prepare such legislation and brings it before the House, I am satisfied the House will overwhelmingly support him in this proposition. We should not go about this legislation piecemeal; we should not pass legislation which does not entirely do justice to these men.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I think this bill will cover practically every person he has in mind.

Mr. BOILEAU. The "practically" part is what bothers me. I am very happy to be able to go along with the gentleman as far as this bill goes, but the word "practically" is the thing which bothers me.

Mr. RANKIN. We cannot tell, of course, how it will be construed. Suppose we go ahead and pass this bill and try it out. Then, if it does not take care of all the cases involved, I shall be glad to try to amend it at the next session of Congress, or later in this session, to take care of the cases he has in mind.

Mr. BOILEAU. Feeling as I do in this matter, I could not stand here and in any way assist in blocking the enactment of this legislation, for if it does justice to a group of men—it helps some, at least.

I am very happy to have the gentleman assure us he will go into this matter and let the Veterans' Administration know the Members of Congress really want such legislation adopted. I feel satisfied that if the gentleman brings up a bill he will get the almost unanimous support of the Members of the House and will be able to remove entirely this blot upon our legislative record.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say again to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if I had my way the word "misconduct" would have been stricken from the veterans' legislation long ago.

Mr. BOILEAU. It should be stricken, and I am sure many Members of the House will support the gentleman's arm in that respect.

Mr. RANKIN. In 1930 we passed what was called the Rankin bill, which entirely eliminated the misconduct provision, but it was vetoed by the then President of the United States and the veto was sustained. Since that time we have been unable to get this far with legislation to correct what I think was a gross error in the beginning.

Mr. BOILEAU. The justice of the cause is such the Congress should again attempt to pass it, even over a Presidential veto, if necessary.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I want to propound a question to the Chairman of the Committee.

Mr. RANKIN. All right.

Mr. MAY. What I want to know is whether this bill relates only to service-connected disabilities or whether it has to be a total or partial disability.

Mr. RANKIN. This relates to service-connected cases.

Mr. MAY. In other words, unless a man is service connected he is not covered by this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. It applies to service-connected cases generally, but I think it will also apply to non-service-connected cases that are totally and permanently disabled and that come under the disability allowance statute.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Will the chairman of the committee explain the meaning of section 2 of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. It simply means that where a man was supposed to have contracted this disability prior to the war, went into the service and came out of the service in a worse condition than when he went in, it is to be supposed the war increased or exaggerated his disability.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. I ask this question in order to enlarge my information about this misconduct provision.

Is it the attitude of the chairman of the committee that if two men went into the service and went through the same sort of experience, and one behaved himself and came back unmarred while the other misbehaved and came back diseased because of his misbehavior, we should give the latter more than we gave the man who went through the same service and did not come back so diseased?

Mr. RANKIN. No; that is not the attitude of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. I am asking just for information.

Mr. RANKIN. I notice all the medical profession and the enlightened American people are now turning their attention to these diseases. I noticed in the Washington Post the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service said the other day 50 percent, I believe it was, of these diseases are innocently contracted.

These men, let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky, were among the best soldiers we had. There has never been any question about these men who were sent to the front going over the top and doing their duty. However, if a man had had some venereal disease prior to his war service, and after he came back, because of the strenuous life through which he had passed, broke down, and his record or a Wassermann test showed a trace of this disease in his blood, then he was denied compensation on the ground that his disability resulted from his own misconduct.

May I say also to the gentleman from Kentucky that this misconduct provision is not in any other veterans' law. The veterans of the Civil War never had such a provision in their pension laws. The veterans of the Spanish-American War do not have it. But for some reason it was inserted in World War veterans' legislation shortly after the war closed. It not only penalized many of the best soldiers we had, men who did not "gold brick", men who asked for no quarter, men who went over the top and did their duty at all times, but it has visited this disgrace upon their wives and children and their widows and orphans when they have passed away. I am for wiping it out. It does not take a dollar from another man suffering from a disability which is service-connected.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. What about the man who was willfully guilty of misconduct and did contract a disease through his own willful misconduct?

Mr. RANKIN. I will let the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], a major who fought in the front line, answer that question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

The Members must realize that in 1924, when we passed the World War Veterans' Act, this question came up. It was a question about which none of us liked to talk, but conditions in the Army, as the gentleman from Kentucky recalls from his service, were that these men were sent to camp and were told by the doctors to go along just so long as they came back to a prophylactic station. In many instances the prophylactic station would not be there when they got back.

Now, is such a man to be dragged down and degraded for the rest of his life by saying this was willful misconduct? These were mere boys, some of them children, who were so advised. Of course, it was wrong, but the hospitals and the insane asylums of the United States are filled with men suffering from this cause, and 50 percent of them probably never indulged in any misconduct morally, immorally, or in any other way, and yet they contracted the disease. It is not fair or just to these men to leave them helpless upon the communities in which they live with no one to care for them. Oh, they can go to a veterans' hospital, perhaps, but the straight and the kind thing to do for these men who served their country in time of war is to prevent them from being cut off as they were under the Economy Act.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. It is true that the veteran himself can go to a veterans' hospital, but when he dies the punishment is visited upon his widow and orphans, and this disgrace is upon his children.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not also true that even if the veteran is taken care of in a hospital, if he has children or a family, they are not cared for?

Mr. BULWINKLE. They are not cared for at all, and therefore I ask the Members of the House, for the sake of these men, to support the bill and the pending amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will this bill take care of the family of one of these men in case he is in the hospital?

Mr. BULWINKLE. When he passes away; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. As was the case prior to the enactment of the Economy Act?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will it also take care of his family while he is still living if he is bedridden?

Mr. RANKIN. It puts him on a par with other service-connected cases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. In the administration of the laws granting benefits for service-connected disabilities or deaths, any increase of disability during World War service shall be deemed aggravation in the application of the rules, regulations, and interpretations of the Veterans' Administration.

SEC. 3. Payments under the provisions of this act shall be effective the date of enactment of this act or the date of filing claim therefor, whichever is the later.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIVE-YEAR LEVEL-PREMIUM TERM POLICIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, I call up the bill (H. R. 5478) to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of the first paragraph of section 301, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (47 Stat. 334; U. S. C., title 38, sec. 512) is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That at the expiration of any 5-year period a 5-year level-premium term policy may be renewed for a second or third 5-year period at the premium rate for the attained age without medical examination; and in case the 5-year period of any such policy has expired prior to and within 5 months of the date of the enactment of this amendatory proviso and the policy has not been continued in another form of Government insurance, such policy may be renewed as of the date of its expiration on the same conditions upon payment of the back premiums within 5 months after such date of enactment; and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall cause notice to be mailed to the holder of any such policy of the provisions of this amendatory proviso."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word and yield to the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the subcommittee that reported the bill, and will ask him to make a brief statement.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply continues the original act providing for level-premium war-risk insurance, which was passed on June 2, 1936, and expired in the Seventy-second Congress and was then renewed for a 5-year term. It has again expired and unless this legislation is enacted before the first of June, there will be some 48,000 veterans who will be without this insurance. Some of these policies have already expired, and for that reason the bill is worded in an endeavor to take care of such situations by reinstating insurance that has expired since last January.

Of course, the intention of the Veterans' Administration, as well as most veterans, is that this insurance should be converted, and we have passed laws with that in view, but many men are not in position, especially in view of the present economic situation, to convert their insurance, for the reason that a man of the age of 45, if he were forced to convert his $10,000 policy which he holds as term insurance, could only acquire in converted insurance, ordinary life insurance amounting to between $4,000 and $4,500, which means practically a $6,000 reduction in the amount of insurance he could carry for the same premium he is now paying.

This bill does not increase the cost of the Government one cent. It merely continues the insurance now in effect at the premium prices established by the Department.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The premium under term insurance is half or one-third of what it is on straight life.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. So that if you continue extending the term insurance indefinitely, it means that these men who have not converted will protect themselves for one-half or one-third of what it costs soldiers who have converted.

Mr. GRISWOLD. No; the gentleman has made one error there. The rates of the term insurance keep increasing each year. In other words, this is the one trouble with the term insurance of these veterans who now carry it—that they will reach a place eventually where it will cost them more to carry the term insurance than if they had converted into other insurance.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Take the situation today. We are renewing the 5-year term-policy premium. On that will be paid half or less what the premium would be on a straight-life policy, would it not?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I do not know the actual figures. All we know is what the Veterans' Administration officer in charge of insurance reports to us, and that is all I am giving the gentleman, namely, that eventually, if they keep on carrying this term insurance, it will, in the long run, cost them much more than converted insurance.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it not true that the rate for term insurance is less than if they converted to a regular policy, but that the rate for the term insurance corresponds with the rate given for that same kind of insurance by the old-line companies, and as each renewal period comes along following the others, the rate for the 5 years is increased?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question asked by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], the fact is, is it not, that those who carry term insurance do not have the advantage of the cash-surrender value which those who carry the other types of insurance have?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is true that they do not have the advantage of a cash-surrender value and they do not have any loan value to their insurance. They cannot borrow on it, and there is no reserve. When the 5-year limit expires they are done.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In other words, the premium is lower in the case of term insurance, but the holder of the term insurance does not get as much for his money as the other man who carries a different type of insurance.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; and the Veterans' Administration has conducted a campaign, and the war veterans' organizations have conducted a campaign in an endeavor to get the veterans to convert their insurance, but you can readily see how some are in a condition where they cannot.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. About how many veterans are involved in this?

Mr. GRISWOLD. There will be 48,000, as I recall it, whose insurance will expire prior to the last of June.

Mr. PATMAN. And this will give them 5 years more in which to convert their policy?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Suppose they are permanently and totally disabled now, will they be allowed to go ahead for 5 more years and then take advantage of converting?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, they can collect their insurance now if they are totally disabled.

Mr. PATMAN. I had overlooked that. Suppose they have a 90-percent disability?

Mr. GRISWOLD. They cannot get anything with any disability less than total disability.

Mr. PATMAN. Suppose they have 90-percent disability, they could continue their insurance under this?

Mr. GRISWOLD. If this act passes. They cannot renew this term insurance without a physical examination.

Mr. PATMAN. Is not the gentleman mistaken about that?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No; I am not. You cannot take out term insurance now without a physical examination. If you are up to date, you can renew this insurance without a physical examination; but if you have allowed it to lapse, allowed it to go back, then you must take a physical examination.

Mr. PATMAN. The 48,000 we refer to will not have to take that examination?

Mr. GRISWOLD. If this bill passes.

Mr. PATMAN. If they are 90 percent disabled, they can continue insurance and convert it before the end of the 5-year period?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. If there is any liability in connection with that, it would not be on the Government, but it would be on the 500,000 veterans who have carried this insurance all of the time?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The burden will be on the 500,000 who have carried this insurance and not upon the Government or anyone else.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the committee for reporting this bill to the House for consideration. It is a matter in which I have been very much interested because of the fact that I have come in contact with some of the cases affected by this measure. I think the enactment of this bill is a matter of simple justice. Many of these veterans are very seriously disabled. They cannot get employment either with the Government or with private commercial concerns, and this is their one hope of relief.

I have here a letter from a veteran very seriously disabled. He is a man of high character. I should like to read into the RECORD a statement that he has made with reference to such legislation.

He says:

> One who is so disabled in the service of his country that he is unable to get insurance from private companies, because he is not an insurable risk, and who is unable to convert his present low-term policy to one of higher rate because he is so handicapped by disabilities that he is unable to earn a livelihood, much less pay the rate required for the now attained age which most of the veterans find they have reached.
> I predict that if this act does not become a law, many of the ill veterans will take their own lives rather than have their families deprived of the last ray of hope.
> They are now nearing total and permanent disability, and that policy that they took out nearly 20 years ago is the last shred of hope that they have to provide sustenance for their families, through the disability clause therein.
> I know this first hand because I happen to be one of the many. Many are too ill to take much interest in what is going on about them. Many do not know how or to whom they may appeal.
> I am very conscious of the many needs of these men who gave their all (many died in 1917 and 1918, and many more have been dying a thousand deaths daily for 10 these many years), but I am unable to take as active part in their affairs as I did in former years, for my own physical condition will not permit of more than a very small time devoted to the efforts of sustaining the actual need of my wife and three small sons.

That is typical of many cases that will be affected by this measure. It is for them the last ray of hope. They cannot get employment. They cannot get insurance with private companies. They have kept up this insurance in the hope of being able to protect their families. Being unable to work they are unable to pay higher rates than those that are now imposed, and I trust this bill will be passed without opposition.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Gladly.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas, and to the Members of the House, that we are working now on legislation to take care of the gold-star mothers and dependent parents whose insurance payments begin to expire in the spring. The gentleman referred to those. I think the House ought to know that before these insurance payments begin to expire we expect to have legislation before the House to take care of those aged parents.

Mr. LANHAM. I am glad to have that gratifying information from the chairman of the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. It is not our intention to shut off any Members who desire to speak on this proposition.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe everyone will vote for this measure. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] were members of the subcommittee. The bill was reported unanimously by the subcommittee and also by the full committee.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] said it is a matter of simple justice. I believe it is a business proposition. The Government is not giving anything to the veterans. It seems to me it is clearly their right. Because of economic conditions many of the veterans will be unable to carry their insurance if their extension is not granted, as they will be unable to pay the higher premium rates. That will be a distinct hardship upon their families.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this war-risk insurance caused about 3,000,000 veterans during the World War to accept policies from the Government. When the war was over they were paying the term rate, the wartime rate. It averaged about $6.60 a month for $10,000 insurance. All except about 500,000 veterans dropped that insurance. Only 500,000 have carried it on. Practically all of them converted their policies, according to the law, from term insurance to 20-payment life, endowment policies, or one of the other different forms of policies that were permitted under the law. So that 500,000 have been carrying on this insurance provision for the Veterans' Administration for all these years. I have no objection to this bill. It is all right with me, but we might just as well understand who is going to bear the burden. It is not going to be the Government. It is going to be the 500,000 who have contributed to the carrying on of this insurance since the World War.

You have received many letters, I am sure, from veterans in which they state that they have borrowed on their insurance policies and they had to pay 6-percent interest and they desired a reduction in the interest rate.

The Veterans' Administration at one time considered the effect of reducing the interest rate. If the interest rate were reduced it would only encourage more loans; so, the Government should not encourage anyone to borrow on his insurance. The Government should discourage such loans. The rate, therefore, has remained 6 percent. The 6-percent interest that is paid goes into the insurance fund and is divided among all the policyholders, all the 500,000. While they are, therefore, paying 6 percent, yet at the end of the year they get the benefit of the interest paid in the form of dividends. I do not know what effect there will be on the dividends if these 48,000 happen to be bad insurance risks, risks that life-insurance companies would not accept; but notwithstanding the objections that I have raised I am perfectly willing for the 48,000 to be given an opportunity to convert their insurance within 5 years and expect to support this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the paragraph in order to say to the gentleman from Texas that the passage of this bill will not impair in any way the insurance policies of those men who have converted. I also call attention to the fact that those 4,000,000 men who took out insurance in the beginning, who paid their premiums to the Government and finally dropped their insurance, that that money is also in this fund and these men who have not felt able to convert are just as much entitled to it as are the others. Another thing—this is an obligation on the part of the Government, and if and when these men pass away it is found necessary for the Government to supplement this fund in order to meet these demands, that will be done.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that $400,000,000 was paid into this fund during the war? But that $400,000,000 was absorbed by payments made by the Government from this fund to those men, many of whom did not have insurance, but only on the presumption that they were entitled to at least $5,000 insurance if they had not applied within 120 days. Was not that money absolutely taken up in that way and there was none left to turn over to the fund at the end of the war?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure as to the figures, but let me say that, in the first place, a great many of those men who were automatically insured did not die until after this insurance law was passed and they were required to pay for their insurance.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The fact is that now this money goes into the insurance fund.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And the insurance fund on the other policies is paying dividends; so, from the standpoint of actual dollars and cents the only way it is costing them is in a slight reduction in the profits that they would have by way of dividends on their policies. That is true, is it not?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I ask the chairman of the committee, suppose these are bad risks, they can be offset by the new risks that are coming in every day. Men in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, those who enlist today, those young men, are taking insurance subject, of course, to any change in the law that Congress may make. They are entitled to insurance just like soldiers of the World War; and while we have some risks that might be considered bad risks, they are offset by good risks coming in every day.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, passage of this bill, H. R. 5478, is only a matter of simple justice to one of the hardest pressed groups of veterans of the World War.

One need only recall that these policies expire in 5 years to get a very accurate idea of the motives which have from the beginning prompted American veterans to take out this insurance at all. Clearly, the men who have these policies today and who are today appealing to this House to enable them to renew their policies are men whose expectation of life is short. They are men in many cases who, as a result of the sacrifice they made, are disabled in some manner or another and who can at best look forward to only a few years more here on earth with those whom they hold near and dear. They are, of course, all men with dependents. Their children today are on the average about 20 years of age. Five years from now their need for insurance will be very much less than it is now. Their children will be adults, making their own way.

It may be argued that most of the men who still retain these 5-year level-premium term policies are poor risks and therefore will contitute a drain on the insurance fund, upon which others, more fortunate, also depend. I frankly admit that they are what our insurance agents would term a poor risk. But I believe that is the very strongest argument for the passage of this bill.

For consider the alternative. Suppose we do not pass this bill. One of two things will happen in the case of every one of the 48,000 men who are waiting to see what we do here today. Either they will convert their present policies into some other type of insurance, in which case they will be to just the same extent a potential drain on insurance funds, or else they will be without any insurance at all. Now, if they do convert into another type of insurance, they must pay, on the average, premiums a good deal more than twice as high for the same amount of insurance. On a $10,000 five-year-term policy the premium is $116.90. On a $10,000 ordinary life policy it is $287.10. And if they cannot afford any larger premiums than they now are paying, they would be able to carry only about $4,000 of coverage for every $10,000 they now have of the 5-year-term insurance.

The obvious disadvantages of term insurance would naturally lead any man who could do so to take out another type of insurance. As the veteran grows older the premiums on term insurance would increase to such a point that eventually he would be getting hardly any insurance at all. So I believe we can fairly assume that the veterans who will want to renew their 5-year-term insurance for another 5 years are mostly veterans who just cannot afford to convert their insurance. They are paying every cent they can for their families' future protection, and they would therefore only be able to provide a fraction of the protection for their families which they are now giving them if we did not pass this bill and, by our failure to do so, forced them to convert into another type of insurance. Moreover, almost any veteran who can look forward to long life will convert his insurance. Those who do not do so, as I said at first, are bound to be largely the ones who do not expect very many more years here and who want to do everything they can for their families to that end. I think we ought to make this possible.

Finally, I think we should remember that all we will be doing is extending a privilege of renewal to these men. They can still convert to a better type of insurance if they want to do so, or if they are able to do so. What we will be saying if we pass the bill is that if they desire this protection for another 5 years, the Government is glad to extend to them that privilege.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes in order to answer questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. I was interested in the reference the gentleman made to the fact that his committee is considering legislation affecting the gold-star mothers. In the last few days I have received several communications from gold-star mothers in my district in regard to legislation for their relief; and I should like to ask the gentleman to tell us a little more fully just what the status of it is before his committee.

Mr. RANKIN. I am glad indeed to answer the gentleman's question. We realize that beginning in April these insurance payments to World War mothers are going to begin to expire, and we are now working on legislation to take care of them. No matter what else happens, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], so far as the chairman and members of this committee are concerned, these gold-star mothers are going to be cared for. We are not going to let these mothers who sent their sons to the war—sons who never came back—we are not going to turn them out in their old age and let them suffer for want of reasonable compensation if we can help it.

Mr. MAPES. Then we can answer our correspondents assuring them that some legislation will be enacted in their behalf?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last paragraph.

Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the subcommittee which had this bill under consideration. It seems to me that we should first bear in mind this insurance is carried under the war-risk insurance and any losses are paid out of that fund.

It was developed in the course of the hearings that term insurance has been carried at a loss as far as the Bureau is concerned. It follows that this loss in a measure is detrimental to the interests of the veterans who have converted their insurance into a life policy, endowment policy, 20-payment life, or whatever they choose to convert it to. But in considering that fact we also had to bear in mind that the economic situation of a lot of these men is such that they are unable to convert their insurance at this time to one of the regular forms of insurance and carry the protection they feel they have a right to carry. It seemed to us, after careful consideration, that the balance of justice was in favor of a further extension of the term insurance.

However, Mr. Speaker, it might be well though to suggest now that we are rapidly coming to the time when further extension of the term insurance will not be feasible and that fact should be suggested to the veterans whenever possible, and whenever the opportunity is presented. They should with all haste convert their term policies, if they see fit to do so, to one of the regular policies provided by the Bureau, to the end that every one having an interest in the insurance fund will be given the same consideration and the same protection.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has no further bills to offer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the purchase of Florida grapefruit by the Surplus Commodities Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. CANNON of Missouri (when the Committee on Appropriations was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I call up House Joint Resolution 278, to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Automatically the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 278, with Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in keeping with our policy of removing troublesome surpluses of food by purchase and distribution through the Federal Commodities Surplus Corporation, we present this bill providing for the fishing industry the same relief we have been providing under the Agricultural Act for the farm industry. Under the A. A. A. we have purchased and distributed through relief agencies vast quantities of all classes of agricultural products. We have distributed $3,000,000 worth of eggs, $3,000,000 worth of vegetables, $4,000,000 worth of citrus fruits, and in the same way the Corporation has purchased and removed from the market troublesome surpluses in practically all food products produced by the American farmer.

Mr. Chairman, the fishing industry is at this time in great distress. We have on hand in storage the greatest surplus of fish ever accumulated in the history of the industry. The amount of frozen fish alone, not taking into consideration salt fish, dried fish, canned fish products, and the unprecedented amount of fresh fish on the market, on the 15th day of January last was 30 percent in excess of the previous January and 50 percent in excess of the 5-year average. And it is a progressive and growing surplus. On the 15th of February, the month following, and the last month for which statistics are available, we had on hand 50 percent more than the previous year and 60 percent more than the 5-year average. We have in storage between two and two and one-half million pounds of surplus frozen fish alone, which exceeds any surplus ever previously accumulated.

The effect upon the fishing industry is demoralizing. The market is glutted. There is no further room for the fish which the fishermen are daily bringing in. Unless this top-heavy surplus can be moved, an industry involving half a million people will be paralyzed. This surplus is brought about by a number of factors. We have had an unusually open winter. The fishermen have been able to reach the Great Banks, the most prolific fishing ground on the Atlantic, which ground under ordinary circumstances is closed during the winter months. We have had open water on the Great Lakes, which ordinarily are ice-bound during the winter season. As a result the surplus is constantly accumulating and this is the only feasible remedy available.

In this resolution, we are providing for this stricken industry the same relief we have provided for the farmer under similar circumstances when his market was demoralized by excessive surpluses clogging his markets and reducing prices below the cost of production.

Like the amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, this resolution is merely an emergency measure. It is not proposed to enact permanent legislation or adopt a long-time program. Under the provisions of the act the period during which the surplus may be taken up is limited to 90 days.

In this 90-day period we are authorizing the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, the same agency which has handled all agricultural surpluses, to buy the excess on the market and distribute it through State relief agencies wherever it is most needed.

May I say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation carried in the resolution is the last step in the program?

The proposition has been presented to the standing committees of both the House and the Senate. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported out the act of March 5 under which we are authorized to make the appropriation. Both the House and the Senate passed it, and it was approved by the President. The authorization then went to the Budget Bureau, where it was approved and an estimate transmitted to the House. As a matter of fact, the Budget Bureau recommended twice the amount the committee has recommended in its report on the resolution. The Budget Bureau recommended $2,000,000, which was the amount of the original bill, but the committee amended it, reducing the amount to $1,000,000. It is expected with this $1,000,000 sufficient fish will be bought to relieve the situation and rehabilitate the industry.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. This $1,000,000 is not a new authorization. It is an authorization of a sum of money which has already been appropriated, which is already in the possession of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad the gentleman calls attention to that. I was just coming to it. This is, in fact, not an appropriation. It does not take a dollar out of the Treasury. The money is to be provided from funds already in the hands of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, money which has been placed to its credit by the States for such purposes in connection with the retirement of surplus agricultural products, and which we now propose to use for an identical purpose in relief of the excess surpluses in the fishing industry.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. With pleasure.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us why the amount was reduced?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The committee, after considering the evidence submitted by the representative from the Bureau of Fisheries and the industry, reached the conclusion that, in view of the amount of surplus on hand and the surprisingly low price at which the fish can be bought because of the demoralization of the price of all fish products just at this time, we could with a million dollars buy enough fish to bring the market back to normal.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do you think this will adequately take care of the situation?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The committee thought it would.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say to the gentleman from Missouri that, in view of the fact the Cape Codders here have animadverted so often on the evils of crop control and plowing under and have had so much fun about birth control—the slaughter of little pigs—and things like that, it might properly be stated to them that the way for them to handle this situation is just to leave the fish in the ocean. They did not even have to go to the trouble of planting them.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You cannot plow them under.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman appreciates the situation. It is not a question of a long-time program, such as soil conservation or adjustment of hours and wages of labor. It is an emergency. If this relief is not forthcoming, half a million people will be left without adequate support. We cannot jest with human suffering.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman enlighten us on the question of whether or not the language of the authorization in the approfriation is sufficient to cover canned fish?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I may say, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi, this corporation is authorized to go into the markets and buy fish of any classification, including shellfish where the buying of fish will relieve the congestion of the market. The corporation will be authorized to buy dried, salted, canned, fresh, or shell fish.

Mr. COLMER. Would the corporation be authorized to pay the prevailing market rate?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It would have to pay the prevailing rate. It could not secure the fish unless it did. The corporation is authorized to buy such fish as may be deemed necessary at such price as it finds the fish can be secured for.

Mr. COLMER. Who will finally determine what grades of fish and what products in the fishing industry should be purchased, and where?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation in connection with the Federal Bureau of Fisheries is authorized, as the gentleman will see by reading the report, to determine what class of fish shall be bought and what price shall be paid, and from what market the fish shall be removed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are doing this today with farm products. We are taking the surplus from the farms. We simply want to relieve the fishing industry the same as we relieve other industries throughout the country.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Precisely. This proposal is in pursuance of a well-established policy which we have been following for years; namely, to remove surplus food products where they are demoralizing the market, and distribute them to relief agencies or where they will provide wholesome fare for the needy and suffering.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not really more important to furnish these food supplies to those on relief than it is to relieve the fishermen themselves?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is one feature which particularly recommended the measure to the committee. We, in effect, kill two birds with one stone. We not only relieve a congested industry, but we provide relief where sadly needed, especially in the flooded areas where the communities have not yet been brought back to normal, and where it is necessary to provide food for a large population, temporarily decreased by the flood.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I am interested in the fishing industry as we find it along the Great Lakes. Will the gentleman please explain to me just how that portion of the industry would be affected by this bill? It is included, is it not, the same as any other area?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There are large quantities of frozen fish in the freezers both in Chicago and along the Atlantic seaboard which supplies Chicago by truck. Large quantities of fish are daily sent from the New England fisheries to Chicago by truck. In addition, these communities have in their own freezers a surplus supply of frozen fish, now a drug on the market. They are so low in price the fishermen can no longer go out and bring in their usual catch because there is no market. The Corporation's buying these surplus supplies will bring prices back where it will again pay the fishermen to go out and resume operations.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That procedure would be a benefit to the lake fishermen by stabilizing their market?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Exactly; it would restore normal conditions.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not fair to state that all this proposal amounts to is to add one food item to the list of items in respect of which the Federal Sulplus Commodities Corporation is already authorized to deal?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman expresses it very accurately. As a matter of fact, the industry, in the first place, appealed to the A. A. A. and requested them to give the relief given with respect to other surpluses. The only thing which prevented was the decision by the A. A. A.—very well taken, of course—that fish is not an agricultural product. The enabling act, the act of March 5, merely places products of the fishing industry on the same footing with those of the farm. It provides the same relief we have been giving agricultural products.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill, and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of my colleague who is taking time in opposition in permitting me to advocate this measure as I propose to do.

Coming from a region of this country where the fisheries are one of our chief industries, I deeply appreciate the consideration which has been given this matter by the Committee on Appropriations and, particularly, by our colleague from Missouri, who has just spoken, where fish products may not be one of their major matters of concern. I want them to know we are profoundly appreciative up in the State of Maine, which is still a part of the United States. [Laughter.] The gentleman cited the quantities of fish, but I presume as a result of his experience inland, he was too much impressed with his poundage, as I understood him to say there were two or three million pounds of surplus. As a matter of fact, there are 85,000,000 pounds of frozen fish at the present time in storage, of which 30 to 50 percent is surplus; that is, the best estimates are there are 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 pounds of surplus frozen fish at the present time.

This bill does not confine the Surplus Commodity Corporation to the purchase of any character or quality of fish or to any particular location. We simply feel in conformity with what now seems to be a well-established policy that surplus products of this character may be properly removed from the market and distributed to people who otherwise would be undernourished and underfed. We are not merely doing a Christian charity to these people who are in need in giving them a good quality of food product but we are removing a surplus which threatens with disaster a great industry of our land. I happen to be one of those who has collaborated also in agricultural relief, so I am not subject to the suggestion which our friend from Colorado has made.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I did not mean at all to indicate I was not in hearty sympathy with the bill. I intend to support the measure, but when I glanced across to the other side and saw my Cape Cod friend sitting there, I could not resist the temptation to try to say something smart. I am sorry.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure our Cape Cod friend will be able to look out for himself and will appreciate none the less the gentleman's collaboration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who is now conferring with the gentleman from Cape Cod, that Cape Cod produces some very fine scallops.

Mr. BREWSTER. This is by no means a sectional matter. While it is true we have some 30,000,000 pounds of fish up in New England, it is also true there are 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 pounds in other sections, and it is also true that the removal of this surplus of fish will redound to the advantage, as we believe, not only of fishery products in every part of the country, including Alaska, which was also represented in asking the relief here afforded, but will also ameliorate the economic situation for everyone alike. We have between 500,000 and 600,000 pounds of frozen fish in Maine, and we believe this is a sound and constructive measure and well warranted.

We would have wished that the $2,000,000 recommended by the Budget and by the President might have been accorded by the committee, but we recognize their conclusion that the $1,000,000 may be adequate to relieve the temporary crisis which we now face. We shall hope that if this does not prove correct that in the course of time we may come again and ask for the additional assistance which has been recognized as warranted by the committee which passed the original authorization and by the by no means easily influenced Bureau of the Budget.

I want, in closing, to say a word about what this means. As we wander about here in the more or less congenial air of Washington, we little realize what it is up in these northern waters, where men go fishing in the winter. Today it was 10 degrees above zero up there, and those men are going out into snowstorms that resulted last Sunday in a foot of snow. When you go out into the North Atlantic in midwinter and strike a northeast blizzard with a temperature of 10 or 12 degrees above zero, one realizes why the communities affected are peopled with memories of the lives that have been lost. We ask no special consideration. We have gone down to the sea in ships for generations. It is the life we love. It is the life to which we have dedicated our energies and our talents. We ask simply to be put on a parity with the great agricultural enterprises of the country in getting this recognition that is so sorely needed by the fishing industry of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables, prepared by myself, with regard to the importation of fish.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration reads, in part, as follows:

> That not to exceed $1,000,000 of the funds available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation may be used by such Corporation for the purpose of diverting surplus fish (including shellfish)—

And so forth. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] told us of the tremendous amount of surplus fish—not only frozen but other fish—now on the American market. We have here a beautiful illustration as to how the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada, which reduced the tariff on fish, is working out. In 1935 the total importations of all fish and fish products into the United States amounted to 324,731,532 pounds. During that year the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement was passed and the agreement was effective as of January 1, 1936. During the year 1936, January 1 to December 31, there were imported 371,205,567 pounds of fish products, or an increase of 46,474,034 pounds over 1935, or nearly twice the amount of surplus frozen fish. During the year 1935 there were imported in fresh and frozen fish, including lake trout, white fish, pike, yellow pike, 127,623,862 pounds. During the year 1936, the first year the reciprocal trade agreement with Canada was in force and effect, we increased that amount to 155,229,330 pounds, or an increase of over 28,000,000 pounds during the first year. This increase is approximately 4,000,000 pounds more than the total surplus of frozen fish.

During the month of January 1935 and prior to the effective date of the reciprocal-trade agreement we shipped into the United States 10,045,000 pounds. In January 1937 there was shipped in 12,918,013 pounds, or an increase of almost 3,000,000 pounds. We are permitting the importation of millions of pounds of fish, creating a surplus, and now we are asked to buy that surplus which we created under the reciprocal-trade agreement and under a reduced tariff. Ninety-eight percent of these fish come from Canada. In the old days when we called a State hospital an insane asylum and before we used modern methods of treating insanity we used certain tests. An insane person would be placed in a room in which there was a water faucet. He was then given a mop and the faucet was turned on. If that insane person shut the faucet off before he began to mop up the floor, it was an indication that he had some sense; but if he let the faucet run and mopped up the floor at the same time, they knew he was crazy. That is exactly what we are doing in this case. We are trying to mop up the floor with a million-dollar mop and letting the Canadian fish faucet run. The reciprocal-trade policy of this administration has ruined the fish market, and now we are told that we have no alternative but to purchase the surplus we created if we would save some 500,000 fishermen from complete economic ruin. I want to help these folks. I want to save them from the ruin that this policy is bringing on them. It is for this reason that I am not opposing this bill. However, I do sincerely hope that some time, some day, the present administration will see the light and shut off the faucet before we are asked to buy any more million-dollar mops.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, the real effect of this bill is that we are buying foreign fish to feed our people who are on relief. In other words, we are buying our own surplus and shipping in under this agreement foreign fish, the result of which is that we are buying fish to feed our people on relief.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the bill on which this appropriation is based came before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The situation which has been depicted here by the gentleman from Missouri was even more graphically portrayed before that committee. One objection now interposed is the importation of some foreign fish. So far as I am concerned, I would stop all fish coming into our country if I could. I went with a Member of the opposite party before the Committee on Ways and Means when the tariff bill was being considered and tried to get larger tariffs on fish coming into this country, but we were unable to get them. I remember that one of the gentlemen of that party and I appeared before that committee in an effort to secure a larger tariff on fish and fish products. Many fish products are admitted into the country free under the Republican tariff that now is upon the statute books of the country. It may be that some of them come into the country under the reciprocal agreement, but if a mistake has been made—and I think if they are coming in it is a mistake—for Heaven's sake do not punish the fishermen who are now at the end of their rope. We found it was necessary, in order to protect the fishing industry of the country, that this surplus should be taken off the market. The purchase will take in, in large part, frozen fish and canned fish. My people deal principally with fresh fish, but the presence of this surplus on the market has a depressing effect upon the price of fresh fish to such an extent that in some cases they are not able to receive a reasonable price.

This condition has been brought about, as has been testified to before my committee, not by reason of importations but by reason of conditions that have been explained, such as the mild winter. As a result the lakes and inland waters have been open and fresh fish have been caught. As the public have been able to buy fresh fish they have not bought canned or frozen products. The result is that there is an accumulation of the canned or frozen products. This surplus is having a depressing effect on the fresh fish that are being caught and also upon canned products. The committee was so thoroughly impressed with the evidence before it that it seriously doubted that an appropriation of $2,000,000 would be sufficient. Amendments were offered to authorize an even greater amount. We concluded that under the circumstances it would be better to keep within reasonable limits, and so reported $2,000,000.

Another cause of this surplus may be found in the floods throughout the country. The evidence showed that under normal conditions 20 or 30 cars would have gone each week to the city of Cincinnati alone; 20 or 30 cars to the city of Louisville; a large number to other points in the flood area. The mild winter, plus the floods in the Mississippi Valley, have been largely responsible for this surplus.

A surplus exists, and as a matter of simple justice and as a matter of everyday right and fair dealing between man and man, I ask why the fish industry should not be given the same benefit that is given to agriculture? I am perfectly willing to go along with all relief that can be afforded to agriculture. We find that the Federal agencies are willing to buy the fish, to buy this food of large protein value for distribution in the flood areas of the country, and yet they cannot buy this food, for the officials of the A. A. A. have ruled that purchases are limited to agricultural products. This is not an agricultural product. The decision of the officials of the A. A. A. in that respect was right. It is not an agricultural product and could not be included in the purchase; but this Congress can do the right thing. This Congress can do the just thing. This Congress can say to these people who are needing relief, "We are going to extend to you the same benefits that are extended to the farmers of this country."

I want to call your attention to the fact that the evidence before that committee some years ago demonstrated the fact that the average income of a fisherman some years past was $1,000, and it had been reduced a few years later to $600, and is now practically down to nothing or a very small income. I do not believe that the sense of fairness and justice on the part of the House would permit this House to reject this reasonable appropriation, which is limited to 90 days. The purchases can only be made in that time. What I want is to see a measure ultimately that will put these fish products on a parity with agriculture, and I do not believe there is any man representing the farming interests who would oppose any such proposal.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with the 90-day limitation within which to purchase the fish, nearly 3 weeks of it is already gone.

Mr. BLAND. Nearly 3 weeks has already gone. I see no use taking any further time. We have not prescribed canned fish, frozen fish, fresh fish, or any particular kind of fish. We have left it to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to determine where that surplus is and to handle this fund to the best interests of the fishing industry.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Could the gentleman inform us how much of the surplus the $1,000,000 would purchase? How much would it take care of?

Mr. BLAND. Well, I do not know. The gentleman can figure it out. If we get it as low as 4 cents a pound, we have one thing. If it is 8 cents a pound, it is another thing. The evidence before the Appropriations Committee and before our committee was that it would be bought at a reasonable price, and certainly not above the cost of the commodity. When the matter was before my committee it was estimated there was a surplus of something like 30,000,000 pounds. There was a very considerable interest in carrying the appropriation up to at least $2,400,000, based on the price of 8 cents a pound. It can be bought for less than that. If it is half of that. I should say half of that amount. But the statement was made before my committee as coming from Mr. Hopkins, that with the expenditure of $1,500,000 the price could probably be kept up.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Colorado indicated, I come from a section of the country that produces a very large amount of this product, but I want the gentleman from Colorado to know that I have probably voted for every item in every agricultural bill brought here from the Appropriations Committee in the last 15 years. The only time I am recorded as voting against farm legislation is the matter of the processing tax, and then not because I did not wish to help the farmer. I have recently said that Secretary Wallace, in doing what he had done in killing off the pigs, fostering other such ideas, and then advocating an "ever normal" granary, was going in both directions, and we were in constant trouble trying to follow him.

We have an hour today to discuss this matter, and as I understand it we are to have this time to bring to your attention not only the present plight of the fishermen but to discuss the fishing industry at some length.

It is very seldom that we have an opportunity to speak for the fishermen. As compared to the fishermen the farmer is in a fortunate position. We are glad that he is, and we glory with him that he is in that more favorable situation. But I want to take you for a moment to a fishing village on the tip end of Cape Cod. I might take you to the islands of Martha's Vineyard and to Nantucket where there are possibly even more fishermen. You rise at about 3:30 in the morning. There is much activity in the town at 3:30, even in the early spring. Many restaurants are open and business is quite well started for the day. Why? Because those fishermen are getting ready to go out in their dories and other boats on what may sometimes be a very precarious mission. It is not only that they may not make any catch, but they are riding the waves. Often they are in very real danger; that is, I think so whenever I take a trip with them. So their occupation is, I feel, much more precarious than that of the farmer, alike as to the harvest and the type of work.

I would like to introduce you to a fisherman, if I may. He is usually of a very ruddy complexion. He has to fight the wind and wave and, in the summer season, the hot sun. I call your attention to his hands. Did you ever see a fisherman's hands? If you have not, you should see them sometime. He goes out daily and pulls his trawls and his nets. See those breaks and creases in his hands, often bleeding. It shows you what kind of a job he has to do. He is indeed a very courageous man or he would not be in that business. To stay in that locality he is forced to carry on that type of work. The gentleman from Maine says we are willing to carry on, and do so proudly. Our forefathers did it and, by following the sea, materially helped to build this great Nation of ours.

Yet often you are taking away from us who live there even the privilege of killing the migratory fowl for our own sustenance. In former days we procured some of our food there by shooting the wild fowl; but now the outsiders, through the adoption of their conservation ideas, say to us: "You may shoot for a month or two, but do not shoot more until we come back next year." That is what is happening with relation to some of our natural resources.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The ancestors of those fishermen manned the Continental Navy.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, how proudly we could boast about that ancestry if we desired; but I am going to assume that there is not a man in this House but who knows about that ancestry and is as proud of it as we are. [Applause.] We are here today, however, pleading for an industry; not for this $1,000,000 alone, but for the support of this industry for many years to come. We hope to secure acknowledgement of its rightful place in the economy of the country and the consideration which should be given it by the Congress. It has not received such proper consideration heretofore.

The question was raised: "Are some of these wealthy men who own freezers to unload on the Government?" Do not worry on that score. The Commodities Credit Corporation will decide how much they will take and what price they will pay. We need not be concerned about their making any overpayments. I represent a section where there are many large freezers, at the present moment filled with what we call "whiting", a very cheap kind of fish often carried by large trucks to St. Louis particularly, but also to other western points where poor people have the chance to purchase good wholesome fish at very low prices. But let that whiting remain in those freezers more than a month or two longer and it will be sold for fertilizer only.

And I am pleading for the fishermen themselves. With the freezers full of fish, why should they catch more, and to whom would they sell? By taking this fish from the freezers we are really helping the fishermen themselves and not primarily those who now own the fish. I am pleading that the fish be not sold simply for fertilizer, but that it be sold and consumed as excellent food.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman mentions whiting. As a matter of fact, the testimony before our committee showed that one of the largest surpluses existing today was in whiting. The testimony showed further—and I call particular attention to this fact—that no whiting is imported from Canada or any source outside the country. It is all caught by American fishermen.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Had the lady to whom the gentleman from Massachusetts referred a few weeks ago bought whiting instead of beefsteak the delivery boy would not have been able to push it through the keyhole.

Mr. GIFFORD. No. And the gentleman has touched upon a very important point. If that little illustration had not been given, few would have paid particular attention to that whole speech, would they? [Laughter.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. COLDEN. What reminded me of the lady was the gentleman's attitude today. The other day he was railing against the Democrats because of high prices. Today he is talking cheap prices.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am at this moment trying not to say a word against the Democrats. [Laughter and applause.]

I am glad to see that a happy spirit prevails among the Democrats and to note that you feel so pleased with your recent success. I want to tell you how sometimes the Republicans do sympathize with the Democrats. The other day a Democrat was having trouble getting into his shoes, and a Republican very sympathetically looked at him and said, "Feet swelled, too?" [Laughter.]

I have been very much disturbed about reciprocity agreements affecting our fishing industry. The gentleman from Michigan, of course, laid it to you on this side of the House for having so much of this fish brought in from Canada. We pleaded with you then, but we could get little consideration. The fishermen were seriously injured by reciprocity with Canada. I do not desire to enlarge upon that, as I could, because today I know you are all perfectly willing that this little appropriation be granted. May I say to the gentleman from California that ninety times out of one hundred when I speak the way I so often do I am speaking for the Democrats who dare not speak but wish they might. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts I am in hearty accord with him and approve the remarks he made, because my district produces fish and I really appreciate his assistance.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the gentleman is one of the very best friends I have in the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, on this bill we find the geographical extremes of the country in harmony. Maine and Alaska, as well as California and Massachusetts and Mississippi and Virginia, have joined hands because they are all in the same distressful condition. Alaska produces a great deal of fish. Probably five-eighths of the salmon pack of the world is secured in Alaska. A great deal of halibut comes from Alaskan waters, but neither the salmon industry nor halibut industry are in any such unhappy position as that in which the herring industry finds itself today. Practically all of the mild-cured domestic herring consumed in the United States comes from the waters of Alaska.

The report from the Tariff Commission shows that there is at present on hand in Scotch-cured herring, which is a mild-cured herring, something in excess of 18,000,000 pounds, and of that 18,000,000 pounds my estimate is that at least 9,000,000 pounds is surplus. The surplus almost equals the total Alaska production of Scotch-cured herring during the past year.

This herring is an admirable food product. In nutritive value, it can hardly be surpassed among the fish foods or other food products. Herring, as anyone familiar with it knows, is a fat fish and contains plenty of the different kinds of vitamins, the names of which I never could remember. It is said by some physicians that the use of herring, as is the case with some other food products, is almost a certain preventative of goiter.

The herring come in immense quantities into the waters of Alaska, sometimes in numbers reaching not only in the millions, but probably in the billions. Not all that could be taken are taken. Some are converted into oil and meal; a little, but not much, into fertilizer. But the most valuable product of all is the Scotch-cured, or mild-cured, herring. It is salted just enough so that it will keep well when it is retained in cold storage.

This Scotch-cured herring, of which we have about 18,000,000 pounds on hand in the United States at the present time, is in some respects entitled to the same consideration that the frozen fish is, because it is necessary to keep the herring in cold storage. Otherwise it spoils. Of course, the longer we keep it in cold storage the more the cold-storage costs pile up, and eventually if it is kept too long the fish must be sold for storage charges, and the packer gets nothing.

Mr. Chairman, the condition surrounding the surplus of herring is so serious that unless some disposition, through the passage of a bill of this kind, is made of the surplus product, in my judgment, we will not be able to pack any herring at all next year. The herring fishermen will all be out of jobs, because nobody is going to put up herring with this enormous surplus on hand, and we will have hundreds and hundreds of people normally employed in the herring-packing industry out of work during the coming year unless something is done to dispose of the present surplus. Let no one labor under the misapprehension that any herring packer or fisherman is going to make any money if this appropriation bill passes. The only thing wrong with the bill is that it does not carry half enough money to do the job that ought to be done. It may be that we cannot do anything about that, because we are probably confined to the million dollars now carried in the bill in the form of a committee amendment. We ought to be, and are, grateful for that; but the amount should be at least $2,000,000.

I stated a moment ago that nobody is going to make a cent out of this appropriation. All concerned are going to lose money. Everybody interested is bound to take a loss upon the herring that has already been packed, because the Surplus Commodities Corporation is not likely to pay the cost of packing.

In the case of the herring packers, as in the case of the frozen-fish merchants on the Atlantic coast in Maine and Massachusetts and Virginia and everywhere else, it is only a question of how much they are going to lose. If this bill is passed, they will not lose quite as much as they will lose if it does not pass. If the bill fails of passage, there is nothing but disaster confronting them. I know that the herring packers under all the indicia of the market at the present time cannot sell their packs, and as a consequence the only market that they can get is the Commodities Surplus Corporation. Of course, they are willing to make a sacrifice now and take a chance that next year there will not be such a surplus and that they may be able to make some money.

Let no man say that the enactment of this measure will not benefit the fisherman. The fisherman is bound to benefit. The logic of the situation is simple. While the present surpluses overhang the market, no one will pack any of the kinds of fish in which the surpluses exist. And if no one will pack these types of fish, either in freezing them, as is done with the whitefish and other fish on the Atlantic coast, or by Scotch curing them, as is done with the herring in Alaska, then the fisherman is entirely out of a job. If the product cannot be sold, the fisherman is unemployed, and he is the principal actual sufferer on account of his relatively low economic condition—his lack of this world's goods. The packer and the fish merchant will survive without physical suffering, but if the fisherman is unable to sell the fish that he catches, or to sell his labor if he is ordinarily employed for wages in fishing, he is likely to go hungry or to go on relief. It may well be that the money which we seek to secure through the passage of the bill now under consideration will not be paid directly to any fisherman, but will be paid instead to the packers of herring as in Alaska, or to the merchants who own the frozen fish held on the Atlantic or Gulf coasts or in the Great Lakes region, but the fisherman will be the principal beneficiary just the same, for, as I said a moment ago, until the present surplus stocks are sold no more fish will be bought, and unless fish may be bought, the fisherman is without income.

It would be a desirable thing, of course, if the money so appropriated could be paid directly to the fisherman for his fish, but under our complex economic system, which cannot be changed overnight, that is impossible. Legislation must fit actual conditions, otherwise it is inept, frivolous, and foolish in the sight of men. We are confronted with a condition, not a theory. The condition is that in many parts of the country large surpluses of fish exist for which no market can now be found. It is obvious that even under favorable conditions, and with the aid of special legislation, these surpluses must be sold below the cost of production, entailing losses on the present owners. But if the surpluses are disposed of, new stocks will be laid in, and thus the fisherman will be able to find a market for his catch. But until the surpluses are disposed of fishing of the kinds of fish in which there are surpluses stops dead. The only possible relief lies in the enactment of this bill. It is either that or nothing. No one has yet been ingenious enough to think up any other plan that will work.

We know that this fish product is nutritious and altogether excellent. In carrying on its relief work the Government can advantageously use such nutritious food. This particular food can be obtained below the cost of production, and even that primary cost is certainly not higher than that of other food products of equal nutritive value. There is thus afforded an opportunity to provide relief to those who need it for less money than would otherwise be required. And there is afforded the further opportunity to give relief more adequately and amply than would otherwise be possible. Every possible consideration of logic and economy and humanity calls for the enactment of this bill, and I have not yet heard any sound or even plausible reason why it should not be passed.

As has been pointed out, this is not a sectional bill. It covers the whole Nation. If the bill passes, I confidently anticipate that the amount appropriated will be used fairly and justly in harmony with the requirements and the real needs of all of the citizens of the United States who may be eligible for assistance under the law, no matter where they may reside. I confidently anticipate that relief will be given where there is greatest need of it. It is plain from the debate here and from the testimony given before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations yesterday that, if the committee amendment is adopted and thus the appropriation limited to $1,000,000, some who ought to be helped will not secure any aid by reason of lack of funds. But we may, I think, be assured that careful consideration will be given to all parts of the country and to all of the branches of the industry which come within the scope of the bill.

We all know the fishing industry is highly hazardous from a financial standpoint as well as from a physical standpoint. God knows how many Alaska fishermen in the last 30 years have been lost at sea. It is just the same in Alaska as it is in Maine or off the coast of Massachusetts or of Newfoundland. It is a highly dangerous occupation physically and it is a highly hazardous business financially. I do not know a single person who has been in the herring packing business for as long as 20 years who has not gone broke at least once and sometimes oftener, and most of them are just on the verge of bankruptcy now. Unless they get some relief through the sale of their surplus commodity, I prophecy not a single herring packer in Alaska will be able to avoid insolvency.

Mr. Chairman, I was brought up on a farm and I have just as much sympathy with the hard condition of the farmers and just as much desire to aid them as anyone could possibly have. But for many years past I have come into daily intimate contact with fishermen and have become acquainted with all of the branches of the fishing industry carried on in the Territory which I have the honor to represent here. While the Congress has been solicitous for the welfare of the farmer and has enacted many laws for his aid, and properly so, my memory fails to recall a single enactment for the benefit of the fisherman, or for the fishing industry. All that we have asked now amounts to no more figuratively than two crumbs, and it seems highly probable that we shall obtain only one of those. I sincerely hope that one will not be denied us.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, may I not, for myself and for the people whom I have the honor to represent, pay deserved tribute of respect to the able and courteous chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. CANNON, who so lucidly developed the testimony before the committee yesterday and who has charge of the bill on the floor here today, to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCORMACK, the author of the bill, who has so vigorously urged its passage, and to the great chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. BLAND, whose powerful argument in support of the measure has just been concluded. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am for this appropriation for two very good reasons: First, I believe the unfortunate situation in which the fishing industry finds itself is due in a great measure to the failure of the administration to give adequate tariff protection. There is no question but what if the Canadian competition had been properly regulated the industry would not be in the plight in which it is today. The administration having failed to give protection, has made it possible for large quantities of Canadian fish to come into the United States and deprive American fishermen of their markets. The result has been the creation of a large surplus which, of course, is a threat to the industry.

Second, I believe the Government, having adopted a policy of giving meat, cabbages, and even grapefruit to the poor, has every reason to add fish to the commodities which are available. I recall very well several months ago observing the Government give to the unfortunate poor the splendid grapefruit of Florida. Of course, I am happy to see the poor people get grapefruit, but I cannot but believe that if they had had 2 or 3 pounds of good, wholesome fish it would have been a greater contribution to their contentment, nourishment, and well-being.

May I also bring out this fact: This is not an extra appropriation. It is not additional money. It is simply permitting the fishing industry to have its products made available for the poor, a privilege granted to agricultural products. I am pleased to support the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill really should be entitled "A bill for the relief of the fishing industry" rather than the title which is given here; is not that true?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not know what title is given there.

Mr. MICHENER. "To make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman that through the failure to provide adequate tariff protection the fishermen have been relieved of their markets. Now we must give them some relief.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I am happy there is such unanimity of opinion on both sides of the aisle, apparently, upon the passage of this bill. I had understood when I first asked for time there was to be some opposition to the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it is generally customary to let the Members in favor of the bill make out their case first. I expect to oppose the bill when the time comes.

Mr. COLMER. It is indeed gratifying to know there will be some opposition, and the debate will be livened up a bit. However, I am sure that in the end the bill will pass.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman said, "apparent unanimity", and I think the gentleman stated the fact correctly.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman for his assistance; at any rate, I am satisfied after the opposition has been expressed the bill will be passed and this industry will receive this much-needed benefit.

I am aware that the gentleman has some on his side of the aisle who do not agree with him on his position in the matter.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard from the frozen coast of Alaska——

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I was just about to make a great oratorical effort, but I yield to the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly do not want to interrupt any flights.

Mr. COLMER. I shall be pleased to postpone it.

Mr. BREWSTER. But I wanted the gentleman, for the purpose of the RECORD, to make it clear that unless we have one Member over on this side who would oppose the bill we could not get the extra hour of debate. I say that in justice to my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLMER. I am glad to have the explanation and thank the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Now, that oration——

Mr. COLDEN rose.

Mr. COLMER. Does the gentleman want me to yield? I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that the gentleman who promises opposition to the bill is the champion of the "red herring", so famous in politics and in Congress?

Mr. COLMER. I am pleased to have that contribution of the gentleman's views. And now, Mr. Chairman, I was just about to talk on a very beautiful subject when I was "thus rudely" interrupted, and I am afraid I am going to have to forego that; but I have the honor of representing in this body that beautiful, as I started to say, Gulf-kissed coast section of Mississippi, the place where Iberville landed, and there the fishing industry is quite an industry in itself.

I was impressed by the contribution the able gentleman from Massachusetts made to this debate with his discussion of that early morning scene in a fishing village up in Massachusetts. I should like for him to go with me down to this aforesaid beautiful, Gulf-kissed coast of Mississippi and see these fishermen as they rise early in the morning, mighty in their preparations as they go forth before daybreak and sail upon the high seas to catch the fish in order that they may in this way contribute to their means of livelihood. The fishing industry down there is quite an industry. These men toil long hours, they toil hard, because this is no easy business; and I think it is only just and fair that the lowly fisherman, if you please, should be recognized in this program of the New Deal that is being assisted so ably by the other side of the aisle today. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I wish to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], who, I believe, is sponsoring this bill. I also want to compliment the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], by whose committee this bill was considered. I wish to compliment also the House—if I am not speaking too far in advance—upon the early passage of this bill, thereby placing the lowly fisherman on a parity with the laborer and the farmer and the others who earn their living by the sweat of their brow. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, the only fault that I find with this bill is the fault that was put in by my Committee on Appropriations when they reduced the amount from $2,000,000 to $1,000,000. The Bureau of the Budget approved an amount of $2,000,000. I shall be very glad to support an amendment to increase this amount by at least $500,000. I do not think that $1,000,000 is enough. I hope that such an amendment will be offered either here or in the Senate. This is not a new appropriation. There is a surplus today out of money already appropriated of $6,557,000 in the Surplus Commodities Corporation which is absolutely unobligated. I do not think that any damage will be done or harm caused if we increase this amount by half a million dollars and take a million and a half dollars instead of $1,000,000 out of that unobligated balance. We are approaching spring when the fishermen are about to go out for their spring season catch with every warehouse and processor glutted with fish. It must be obvious that when they return with their catch after their hazardous trips, they will not be able to find a good market for their fish. It is a real emergency, a real necessity, that this bill be passed, and I hope I shall be able to have the pleasure of supporting someone's amendment to increase the amount to be made available. I cannot offer the amendment myself, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but I would be glad to support and vote for an amendment to increase the amount.

After all, the House has already approved of the proposal to spend $2,000,000 for this purpose when it passed the bill authorizing this project. The Bureau of the Budget has approved this amount. The President, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Commodity Credit Corporation have approved the amount of $2,000,000. Therefore, I think that the Appropriations Committee was ill-advised when it cut the amount to $1,000,000, especially when it involved merely the reallocation of money already appropriated. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, being privileged to represent, as part of my district, a city that is noted for its fishing industry, namely, the city of Gloucester, Mass., I am impelled because of the serious threat that today hangs over at least a year's operation of that industry, to say a few words today in the hope that some relief may be found for the existing conditions.

This situation was brought about by the open winter that permitted fishing in the lakes and rivers of this country and which made available an unusual amount of fresh-water fish for distribution in the Midwest areas, which were formerly the winter market for much of our frozen fish held in the freezers of the New England fisheries. Aggravating that situation still more was the flood condition of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, which practically closed the markets of Cincinnati and St. Louis and other large Midwestern communities that formerly utilized from 20 to 25 carloads of frozen fillets each week, because during the flood period, and for some periods thereafter, these areas have not utilized this product. The result has been that large inventories, that were specifically in the freezers for winter sale, lost their market and have, in fact, brought about a glutted condition.

I am informed by the representatives of the fishing industry that at the present time they are face to face with one of the most serious conditions with which they have ever had to contend in the history of the industry. If the winter had been normal, and no flood conditions existed in the Midwest, the present surplus held in the freezers in all probability would not exist. It has been a good year for the fisheries of our lakes and rivers, but at the expense of the fisheries on the eastern coast which anticipated the market that the fresh-water fish industry occupied during the winter months.

According to the Bureau of Fisheries, there were approximately 69,000,000 pounds of all types of fish in cold storage on February 15, 1937, which is an increase of 30 percent over that of a year ago, and 50 percent more than the average of the last 5 years. Unless some way is found to move these cold-storage supplies, the fishermen eventually will be the sufferers, for when they arrive in the spring with their catches for cold storage, there will be no room to store them.

In my own particular district, in the city of Gloucester, practically one-half of the industrial wages paid out came from the fishing industry and practically half of the people engaged in industrial activities find employment in the fisheries. You can appreciate that a serious situation is existing in that community, and will continue for some time to come, unless relief is found for the present unusual situation.

The fishing industry in the country as a whole has been denominated as a billion-dollar industry and one which employs over one-half million people. It therefore should have proper recognition by the Federal Government when surplus commodities are being purchased for relief purposes. Under the existing law the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation may purchase agricultural products of every description, thereby assisting food; and fish, though being a substantial food, has had apparently no consideration under the present regulation. This, to me, seems illogical and unfair, and it appears that the fishing industry, being a great source of supply, is being discriminated against in that respect. These so-called agricultural surplus commodities are purchased with funds which are derived from tariffs, and though the fishing industry contributes more than $4,000,000 annually in tariff duties to this fund, there are no benefits accruing to the fish industry, as in the case of the agricultural industry. The Surplus Commodities Corporation has no authority to buy fish as a food for distribution, and the purpose of this bill is to give the Corporation that authority. In view of the fact that thousands of fishermen, as well as those employed in the fisheries, will suffer throughout the entire season as a result of the present conditions unless this remedy is available, I fervently hope that this proposed legislation will be favorably acted upon.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, as the author of the authorization bill, I will make only a few remarks. Several weeks ago a friend of mine who lives next door to me and whom I have known for a number of years came into my office shortly after the recent floods to find out whether or not there was any governmental agency that purchased fish for the purpose of distribution in the flood area. I made inquiry and I found there was no Government agency that was purchasing fish. The W. P. A. had stopped the purchase of food of any kind a little less than 2 years ago, and there was some doubt as to whether they had authority under the law to do so. In any event, whether or not they did have the authority, it was not their policy to do so. I contacted the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation and, of course, I found that they had no authority under the law to do so. The Red Cross was the only agency making purchases, so I obtained the names of those in charge of the different districts, and I told him he would have to contact them.

In my talk with him I inquired as to the condition of the fish business. I was naturally interested. Probably one of the largest piers in the world is located in my district. It was built by and is owned by the State. It is leased to probably 60 or 70 men who are in the fish business. The fish come in from the North Atlantic and other fishing areas to this pier.

Of course, there are other cities, Gloucester, Newburyport, and other fishing villages and cities in Massachusetts. I doubt if there is a fisherman who lives in my district. The pier is located there. He told me about twenty-three or twenty-four million pounds of surplus fish in Massachusetts alone and the fact that it was much larger than in past years and that the price was down and the market was glutted. As a result of the information obtained, I introduced a bill making a permanent amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act authorizing the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to make purchases of fish. Then, because of difficulties in committee, I introduced an emergency bill, a temporary bill, calling for the appropriation of $250,000, based upon evidence given to me with reference to Massachusetts. After that I received evidence about the condition throughout the country; that the condition in New England and Massachusetts was the same in Virginia, Florida, along the Gulf, so ably and eloquently expressed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER]; also the Great Lakes and out in California and up in Alaska they had a similar condition. Of course, $250,000 was inadequate. I introduced another resolution providing for $2,000,000, which was heard by the committee over which the able gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] so admirably presides. The committee held a hearing and reported out the bill. The bill was passed by unanimous consent. Then came a message from the President, that in view of the fact that it was a 90-day proposition, there were only 90 days within which to make the purchases, recommending an appropriation of $2,000,000 of money already in possession of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. That is the history back of the bill. That is the history in support of the bill.

You have heard the arguments of the Members on both sides of the aisle as to the condition of the fishing industry, men more thoroughly conversant with them than I am, because I do not represent a fishing district as far as fishermen are concerned. The fish pier is in my district, and naturally I am very much interested in its success there and throughout the Nation. My interest is not only from the angle of Massachusetts and New England but from a national angle, because I always try to look at all questions from a distinctly national angle.

Some arguments have been made about the Canadian importations. It is true there has been an increase, but the increase is not in the type of fish that will be purchased. The increase is a normal increase. The country is coming back. I do not say this for controversial purposes, but the simple fact is that last year the importations were no larger than the importations of past normal years. The increase has not been due so much to the reciprocal-trade agreements, because there are very few changes made in the reciprocal-trade agreements on fish coming into the country from Canada. It is due to the open winter, as several of the gentlemen who have preceded me have so ably stated. If it were not for the open winter, we would not have had a glutted condition of the market. The open winter has been the main cause of the condition that exists at present. The surplus that in all probability will be purchased is fish that American fishermen obtained and brought into the United States. Not only in New England but the Virginias, the South, the Great Lakes, California, and Alaska.

So far as the administration of the bill is concerned, I want to see it equitably administered. It will be when the bill passes and becomes a law. It is then in the hands of the executive branch of Government, and I know they will administer it equitably and without discrimination.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. Last year the Surplus Commodities Corporation came to the rescue of the fruit growers in my district, and it was a godsend to my people. I am very, very much in favor of this bill and I do hope there will be no objection to it, but I should like to ask the gentleman's opinion as to whether he does not believe we ought to increase the amount authorized under this proposal? It seems to me from the debate, from the amount of fish and the need throughout the country, that it would not be out of place for us to give them more money than is asked for here, so we can do a better job.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but if the amount is not enough we have remaining a little over 60 days in which to come and ask for more. Furthermore, I feel confident that the present bill providing for $1,000,000 will go through without a roll-call vote, but any effort to increase the amount might change the situation.

This debate has been illuminating. It has been shown that there is a fishing industry in America, one of the basic industries. While I should like to see $2,000,000 reported, nevertheless we have to enter into legislation in the spirit of compromise. While I stand for $2,000,000, nevertheless I stand behind the committee in its present recommendation, feeling confident that if it is not enough we can come in again. We have made a fine case.

If it is before this 90 days has transpired, the Appropriations Committee will give consideration to further allocation or appropriations; and in any event if it is after the 90 days we have laid before the Committee of the Whole a case which will be the foundation for the passage of future legislation. Does my friend understand my position? I do not want anything to happen that might interfere with the passage of this bill.

Mr. HAINES. I think the gentleman has been very generous in his statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is aware that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported unanimously the bill for $2,000,000. I believe as a matter of fact the majority of the members of the committee voted for $2,400,000 and some for as much as $3,000,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

Mr. COLDEN. But in order to get a unanimous report we finally decided to support the gentleman's bill of $2,000,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from California is absolutely correct, and I think an answer to his inquiry and the very fine and constructive contribution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, as I tried to show, that I am personally for the $2,000,000, but we are faced with a practical situation. We have got to look at these problems from a practical angle. In other words, there are Members who would vote for $1,000,000 who probably would not vote for $2,000,000 or for $1,500,000; and so far as today is concerned, I do not want to see this bill get caught between those who are supporting it at $1,000,000 and who are opposed to increasing it, but who, if this $1,000,000 is not enough they will gladly support an increased appropriation if before the 90 days have expired more money becomes necessary and who will support an extension of time if it is necessary after the 90 days have expired. I do not want those who will support this bill, but oppose an increase, placed in a position where they might feel constrained to oppose the bill in its entirety if an amendment were adopted.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, it was to be expected that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who has just concluded his remarks would try to offer some excuse or defense for the reciprocal-trade agreements. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means and, of course, as a member of the majority side of the House, he very naturally feels that whenever any indictment is laid against this policy of reciprocal-trade agreements that he must come to the defense of this monstrosity. In spite of his declarations, however, I think if he would examine the records, he would find that a considerable increase has taken place over last year in the importations of fish since the adoption of the agreement with Canada. In spite of all that he says about the abnormally warm winter and the other factors to which he ascribes the present condition, a very considerable part of the difficulty the fishermen face today is due to this policy sponsored by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and his committee and championed by the Under Secretary of State, that we should make agreements by which we barter away the rights of our own people, pursue a good-neighbor policy, give them all the benefits, and we take the detriments and the losses.

The gentleman from Michigan said that this measure should be called a relief measure for fishermen. I agree with him. No one who has sponsored this measure has spoken in favor of it, with the exception of those who come from fishing districts, my friend from Massachusetts being probably the only exception. I cannot indulge in that beautiful flight of fancy that my friend from Mississippi indulged in, nor the gentleman from Massachusetts, about the hardship of the fishermen. My fishing is confined to going off one of the Atlantic summer resorts or down the Delaware and enjoying rather than enduring a day's fishing. But I am concerned about somebody else than just the fishermen as we are thinking about this bill. I am thinking about the people who are the consumers here in America.

This bill is for the purpose of keeping up the price of fish. It is a stabilization measure. This report definitely says that they are afraid of the demoralization of the price scale. That means one thing; that means that the bill is intended to provide an artificial stimulus by the appropriation of the fund requested here to keep the fish cost, so far as the consumer is concerned, up to a level greater than it otherwise would command; and I am wondering whether we have not a greater obligation to the people who can use fish as a part of their food than we have an obligation to either the fishermen down in Mississippi or the fishermen over in Massachusetts.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I may ask him a question?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will yield me 1 minute of his time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am certain the gentleman's constituents would not want to take the product of a people's labor without paying for them; that they would not be willing to enjoy the fruit of an honest people's toil without giving an honest price in exchange. They would not permit anyone else to live at their expense and would not themselves be willing to take advantage of other men's necessity by living at their expense. If they did, it would be a fleeting prosperity. Appropriating the products of other men's toil without just compensation destroys the buying power which provides a market for their own wares, and eventually completes a vicious circle which leaves them as destitute as their victims. Prosperity is reciprocal, and only through mutual exchange of services at a mutually honest wage can men survive—much less practice the Golden Rule. The purpose of this bill is to pay a man an honest day's wage for an honest day's work. I am certain that is one of many fundamental principles on which my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I are in complete accord.

Mr. DITTER. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri yield me a minute of his time that I may answer his inquiry?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I much regret that my time has been consumed with the exception of 9 minutes, which I have promised to three gentlemen who have not yet had opportunity to speak. I would be glad to give the gentleman additional time if I had it. Doubtless the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will yield another minute.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman from Missouri, I believe that the entire policy that has been pursued by the present administration with reference to artificial stimulation lies at the base of the difficulty that we presently face.

We had it with pigs; we had it with cotton; we had it with corn; and we had it with wheat. Now, we have come to fish. The gentleman knows as well as I do we had it with peanuts, and we would have had it with potatoes if complaints had not arisen. This program is simply a part of the present administration's policy which can well be styled a "shot in the arm"; in other words, an artificial stimulant to produce an exhilaration which is unnatural and which has no substantiality about it other than the supply of money from the public coffers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] has remarked that the debate on this bill has been engaged in for the most part by those coming from States interested in the fishing industry and he seemed to think that was peculiar. I do not think so. I think that is quite natural and also quite proper.

The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation is already authorized by law to buy surplus commodities of nearly every kind and furnish the products to those in need. The Corporation is not permitted under existing law to buy fish for that purpose. This bill simply provides that that Corporation may use $1,000,000 to buy surplus fish and to distribute that product also to those on relief. It is quite natural that those who come from fish-producing territories should take particular interest in this bill. Entirely aside from the humanitarian features of the proposal, I, for one, am interested in a measure of this kind because the fishing industry happens to be the third largest industry in my own State of Oregon. The fishing industry in that State employs 10,000 people and it is worth to the people of Oregon about $10,000,000 a year. The maintenance and prosperity of the fishing industry is vital to the interests of the people I represent.

Under this particular bill our fishermen in Oregon may not benefit this year to any great extent, because our 1937 surplus of canned salmon, which is our most valuable fishery product, is, fortunately, not very great. But there have been years in which we have had a tremendous surplus in canned salmon. The surplus is likely to occur again, and that surplus sometimes means the difference between prosperity and adversity in this great industry.

And so I am interested in this bill also because of the fact I think it will set a precedent. It should set a precedent. It is good, sound legislation, and I think it should be made the permanent policy of the Congress to continue to do the things that are proposed to be done by this bill.

The debate on this measure, I think, has opened up a valuable field for research and investigation. It has been interesting in that it has shown to the Members of the House that here is a subject that ought to be investigated from several important angles. The question of the importation of fish into this country, for example, is one that ought to be thoroughly looked into by the Congress of the United States and acted upon immediately. When the people of our country are producing a surplus of fish, I cannot see any sound reason why our Government should allow the importation from foreign countries of the precise kind of fish that we catch and process in this country, and which we cannot sell because the supply is greater than the demand. I believe it ought to be the permanent policy of our country to keep foreign fish out of the United States which compete directly with fish caught here.

The Japanese importation of fish into our country is harmful in the extreme. It is making great inroads upon the salmon industry in Oregon. If we had the domestic salmon market to ourselves we could supply the demand at a reasonable price and make a reasonable profit. But when we have to compete as we do with the Japanese fishermen, who work for a mere fraction of the compensation paid our fishermen, and who catch their fish off our own coast, just beyond the territorial limit, we are put in a very difficult position, indeed in an impossible position. Our remedy, in my opinion, is an absolute ban against such importations.

Mr. Chairman, I want to add my testimony to that which has already been given by gentlemen from other parts of the country. Although probably this bill will not very directly affect the industry in Oregon this year, similar legislation will benefit us in the future when we have a surplus. It is good legislation and legislation which ought to be adopted as a permanent policy. I am happy to have the opportunity to support it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the very enlightening remarks of my good colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who made the statement that we had finally gone through all commodities and gotten down to fish. May I take issue with him, because I think he should have said we have finally gotten up to fish and not down to fish?

As a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which unanimously reported this bill, I wish to compliment the distinguished chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], upon the very able presentation this afternoon. I feel I would be very remiss, however, coming from a district which is intensely interested in the fishing industry, if I did not stand up here and clarify one point that I think has been more or less confused. I do not believe there will be one single dime of this money used to buy Canadian fish products, because in the State of Maine and in the Portland district, where the port of Portland exists, we have fish dealers who are buying large quantities of fish every day during the season, and it is my opinion there are no Canadian fishermen bringing fish into the city of Portland to those fish dealers; therefore, I wish to state quite unequivocally this money, in my opinion, will be used to buy American fish from American fish dealers caught by American fishermen.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, when a measure of this character is before the House we naturally localize it, and our interest perhaps centers around our own home activities. I live in a fishing community. For years and years the fishermen have gone out of my city in tugs and have caught fish by the ton.

Those fishermen are brave men and serve two purposes. They not only catch fish to supply food, but in times of great storm and stress, when Lake Erie is boiling and ships are in distress, time and again they have gone out into the raging sea to save human life. Many of the fishermen are characterized as heroes.

I have several other fishing communities in my district and I am interested in them. I refer to Dunkirk, Irving, and Barcelona. Just how much this bill is going to help the fishermen in the localities I do not know, but I am perfectly willing to go along with the bill for what good it may do.

May I say if we should adopt a custom that was followed by the ancient Lochrians, it might be very helpful in the matter of legislation. In that ancient country they had a legislative rule that whenever any member came on the floor of the house to sponsor a bill, it was required that he should wear a long rope, with one end tied around his neck with a slip noose, and his colleagues held the other end. He presented his case and if his colleagues were satisfied that his proposal was for the general welfare of the public, the bill was passed. But if his colleagues disagreed with him, they strangled him on the spot. This ancient rule, if it had been in operation, the reciprocal trade agreement legislation might have been prevented.

Now, this trade-agreement proposition is inconsistent with what you are trying to do today. It is well enough to make light of the importation of fish, if you are far removed from the real danger; but we are located on the Canadian border. We are on the south shore of Lake Erie and Canada is on the northern side, and the fishermen on the Canadian side compete with the fishermen on our side.

The cost of operating and manning the tugs on the other side is much cheaper than it is on our own side. Buffalo is a great fish market. The result is the fish caught by Canadians are poured into our markets, breaking the market price of fish, which injures our fishermen.

I am no stranger to this problem. I have appeared before the Tariff Commission time and again to see if we could get relief under the flexible tariff provision. Many of our fishermen have not only been driven from the Lakes as fishermen, but have been forced on relief. We should consider the amount of importations of fish into this country and prevent this destruction of our market to the injury of our own industry. The increase in importations of fresh fish in 1936 over 1935 amounts to 1,172,000 pounds, and much of that has gone into the markets in direct competition with my fishermen up home.

This bill will help some. I would vote to increase the amount, because I would be happy to help the fishermen in my locality, who are in desperate straits and need such help. I shall support the bill, and I stand for an increase in the amount. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to myself.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the large number of people who have spoken this afternoon in behalf of this bill, perhaps it ill becomes one to oppose it. I would not do so except the facts and the merits of the situation seem to require it.

Let me state just the kind of situation this bill is intended to relieve. The so-called surplus of fish consists of about 9,000,000 pounds of whiting, a fish which is caught only in the summer months, and which is held to the tune of about 13,000,000 pounds by a group of speculators along the coast, who piled themselves up with the fish before the season closed on the 1st of October.

Another portion of it is 4,000,000 pounds of pollack and 2,500,000 pounds of redfish. The redfish is in the same class as the whiting. The whiting, which constitutes nearly half of this alleged surplus, costs the speculators from 3 to 4 cents per pound, which is borne out by the testimony before the committee yesterday. This price includes storage and everything else. If all of this surplus were taken off the market at 3 or 4 cents a pound it would not take anywhere near the $1,000,000 which is sought to be appropriated here.

However, worse than that, as to the fish which are being caught today, cod sold last March for 2.7 cents average, and yesterday the price was 2.5 cents, which is a drop of two-tenths of a cent. Haddock, which sold last March for 3.2 cents, sold yesterday for 2.6 cents, and the April average a year ago was 2.3 cents. Therefore, day for day, the price is about the same as it was a year ago. I cannot say anything whatever with reference to the prices of the other fish which are being brought in.

Simply stated, there is a group of speculators who have on hand a large volume of pollack, whiting, and redfish, which they will have an opportunity to unload upon the Government. This surplus commodity proposition has been operated in such a way that much of the supply has been given away, and wasted, to people who were not subjects for relief.

The fact of the matter is we are getting into a spread-out on a proposition which the facts do not justify. I cannot conscientiously go along with it.

On top of this there is another picture. There has been an increase in importations in 1936 over 1935 of 46,000,000 pounds. The gross amount of alleged surplus is 24,000,000 pounds. The domestic consumption has absorbed a large increase in the domestic catch and 22,000,000 pounds of additional importations.

This is another emergency, an emergency which we are attempting to solve by a bit of legislation which will create further demoralization. The administration has failed to do what it could to stop importations, and now it brings forward this bill in an attempt to solve a situation brought about by the holdings of speculators. I frankly cannot go along with that, and I cannot vote for this bill. I hope the House will take these things into consideration when it votes upon the measure.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute in which to reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that these fish were in the hands of speculators. The evidence before our committee showed that fish were acquired by the present holders at between 5.95 cents and 7.58 cents, and that they would be glad to take 3 cents for them. Therefore, it is evident no one is going to make money. The holders who sell under the resolution will lose money instead of making it. Only the fishermen and their families will profit.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say it is easy to make charges, but it is another thing to have evidence to support them. The evidence clearly shows the frozen fish in the various refrigerators are owned by the individuals who buy them. They are not owned by the refrigerators. The refrigerators are owned by individuals, and they sell service. There are hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of persons in the fishing industry who are going to benefit by this and who will be entitled to consideration, so there is nothing to this talk about a few speculators.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, we have a large number of people in our State, and three or four towns in my district in particular, that are deeply interested in the provisions in this bill in the degree to which they affect fishermen. Before the Federal purchase of surplus commodities began some of our fishermen were not receiving more than $3 or $4 a week for their labor.

Some of the Members spoke about the consumers having a great burden on them. May I say in reply to that statement, How can we expect our people to maintain families on $3 or $4 a week? Prices have advanced somewhat, largely because of the small amount of surplus fish which has been taken off the market, through the purchases by the Government for W. P. A. clients.

We must accord to the fishermen every possible benefit. They deserve it. No one employed in America is entitled to consideration above them. I regret to see any Member raise objection to this small benefit the fishermen are receiving.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to briefly discuss another product of my State which has shared in the surplus commodity program.

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT MARKETING PROGRAM

During the present marketing season the grapefruit growers of the Nation were confronted with a most critical situation. It was estimated that the grapefruit production in this country would be about 28,000,000 boxes. The largest previous crop in the 1934–35 season was twenty-one and one-half million boxes, while the average production between the years 1928–32 was about fourteen and one-half million boxes.

This increase was not confined to Florida alone, but also spread to Texas and California-Arizona producing areas.

The citrus growers in Florida quickly realized that with this vastly greater supply and with the potential increase of production because new trees would be coming into bearing the grapefruit problem was not just a problem for the 1936–37 season. Realizing the dangers of this situation, the industry, in conjunction with the Florida Citrus Commission, requested the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to work out a marketing program to save the Florida citrus industry from the disastrous effects of large surplus and low prices.

As a first step, a marketing agreement was entered into which represented the type of a program requested by a substantial majority of the citrus industry. It is set up in such a manner as to attain a maximum coordination between the efforts of the State and Federal Governments, and at the same time it enables the growers and shippers to cooperate among themselves and with their State and Federal agencies to market their citrus crop in such a manner as to improve the returns to the growers.

Supplementing the marketing agreement, as it was necessary to do in view of the unusually heavy surplus of grapefruit, by utilizing the provision of section 32 of the bill amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which appropriates 30 percent of the customs revenues for the removal of agricultural commodities from the normal channels of trade and commerce, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration offered to purchase surplus grapefruit, not only in Florida but in all grapefruit-producing areas, for relief distribution to the needy and unemployed throughout the country.

Surplus grapefruit thus bought by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is turned over to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for distribution to the various States and is carried on in such a manner that it will not interfere with the commercial trade.

Purchases of the surplus grapefruit are being made on the basis of 46 cents per standard box, with a guaranty that 31 cents must go to the growers. Starting in February, purchases were also made to include canned grapefruit.

It is understood that the total Florida purchases so far this season have been 925,000 boxes of fresh fruit, for a value of approximately $425,000, and 36,000 cases of grapefruit juice, purchased at a cost of $43,000.

Opinion generally in the State of Florida has been very favorable to the purchasing program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and, of course, everyone realizes the direct benefits of the marketing program as a whole.

A recent issue of the Lakeland Ledger carried a statement by Chairman L. P. Kirkland, of the Florida Citrus Commission, who declared before a conference of growers, shippers, and canners that the Government's decision to purchase grapefruit would stabilize market prices and greatly benefit the industry. He further said that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's purchases supplement the orderly movement of fruit under the Federal marketing agreement and the purchases by the canners, and Kirkland also said that now growers can hold their crops without fear that they will be unable to sell them later.

Likewise, in a statement appearing in the Agricultural News Service, Mr. D. E. Timmons, of Gainesville, Fla., said that the purchase of canned grapefruit juice by the Federal Government for distribution to relief clients has a salutary effect on the grapefruit market of this season.

The citrus growers in the State of Florida are behind the present program of the administration. Without the purchases the growers would have been at the mercy of certain distributing elements with no compensating benefit to consumers.

Grape-fruit is probably the most beneficial, from a health standpoint, of all surplus commodities purchased by the Government and distributed to W. P. A. clients. "A grapefruit a day will keep the doctor away." It would be unwise to refuse to appropriate money for this purpose. [Applause.]

Under permission to extend my remarks I include the following:

[Agricultural News Service, College of Agriculture, University of Florida, Gainesville, Fla., Jan. 28, 1937]

GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF GRAPEFRUIT JUICE TO AID SMALL GROWER

The purchase of canned grapefruit juice by the Federal Government for distribution to relief clients, a program to begin probably February 1, should have a salutary effect on the grapefruit market this season, says D. E. Timmons, economist with the State agricultural extension service.

Recent announcements by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration indicate an intention to purchase around 1,100,000 cases of canned grapefruit juice for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation by the middle of March. Juice bought for this purpose will be that canned from fruit bought from growers subsequent to January 18. No juice from fruit purchased prior to that time will be accepted.

It is intended that the minimum price which canners will pay for this fruit will be 31 cents per standard Florida field box on the tree. Similar purchases of grapefruit juice are to be made in Texas.

The grapefruit surplus problem constitutes the largest agricultural surplus problem in the United States today, in the opinion of Jesse W. Tapp, executive vice president of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation and also an official of the A. A. A. He has stated that if, before the end of the grapefruit marketing season, additional measures are necessary to protect the interests of the growers, the Federal Government will be ready to work them out with representatives of the industry.

Grapefruit juice canning at first relieved the market of some low-grade surplus grapefruit, but it has attained sufficient volume to become itself a competitor with fresh fruit on the market.

Timmons calls attention to the fact that the present program has been designed to help the grower, especially the one with small acreage. The outlook is for continued increase in production of grapefruit during the next several years, and stabilization of the market is imperative.

[From the Lakeland (Fla.) Ledger]

GOVERNMENT BUYING ACTION HAILED IN CITRUS CIRCLES HERE

With the country's grapefruit production placed at 27,603,000 boxes—16,500,000 of it in Florida—the announcement that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration would pay 46 cents a box for surplus grapefruit was received cheerfully in official and grower circles. The 46 cents will include the 3-cent tax, cost of picking and packing, and will net the grower 31 cents, it was explained.

Florida's production of citrus was estimated by the Division of Crop and Livestock Estimates, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, at 37,500,000 boxes. Of these, 21,000,000 are oranges and tangerines, and the remainder grapefruit.

The estimate gave California 14,976,000 boxes of navels and miscellaneous. Last year the State produced 18,882,000 boxes of Valencias. California will produce 2,275,000 boxes of grapefruit.

Texas will have 6,730,000 boxes of grapefruit and 1,435,000 boxes of oranges, according to the estimate.

Arizona will produce 2,030,000 boxes of grapefruit and 260,000 boxes of oranges.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, may I say in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that the fish supply is stored up by speculators, I represent the east and west coasts along the central part of the State of Florida, and I have a good many fishermen there, and I know they are not speculators. They certainly have some fish stored away, but they are not speculating on the fish. I am for this bill 100 percent.

May I also reply to the gentleman who suggested we ought to substitute fish for grapefruit? Grapefruit has about as much food value as fish, and is a food which people on relief need today. I hope the Surplus Commodities Corporation will continue to buy grapefruit in the State of Florida.

Last winter the Florida citrus industry was farsighted enough to take steps in preparation for meeting the marketing problems which confronted grapefruit growers and shippers. An industry-wide program was developed in which the Federal Government is cooperating with the State of Florida and with its growers and shippers. This program was put into operation through a marketing agreement to enable the industry to ship fruit to out-of-State markets on a more orderly basis. Under the marketing agreement the industry is in position to control the interstate movement of fruit more nearly in keeping with market requirements.

As a means of supplementing the efforts which the Florida grapefruit industry is making under the marketing agreement to adjust shipments of fruit more nearly in line with market requirements, the Federal Government has provided an additional measure. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration is buying surplus grapefruit for distribution to the needy and unemployed who do not have the money with which to buy this health-giving fruit.

The main purpose the Government has in buying surplus grapefruit is to supplement what the industry itself is doing under the Federal marketing agreement. It seeks to prevent prices to grapefruit growers from hitting unprecedented low levels in view of the big crop. It acts as a stabilizing influence on the grapefruit market.

The Government is paying for the fruit on the basis of 46 cents per standard field box loaded bulk in cars, of which growers must get 31 cents. Growers have said that this price has put a plank under the grapefruit market and is enabling them to get more for their crop than they otherwise would. It also prevents a lot of fruit from going to waste, which probably would be the case if very low prices prevailed.

Grapefruit is also being bought in Texas and, I believe, some from the California-Arizona area.

These surplus-removal activities are made possible through funds made available to the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of section 32 of the 1935 amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

All of the surplus grapefruit being bought by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is turned over to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for distribution to the States for relief use.

State welfare agencies are cooperating in seeing that the fruit goes into the hands of those actually on relief and without funds to buy grapefruit. The Government has been very careful in seeing that relief distribution does not compete with the commercial trade. The regulations governing relief distribution are very strict and they are enforced.

With the marketing agreement and a surplus-removal program in effect, Florida citrus growers and shippers are in a good position to perfect their marketing machinery for the future. Government forecasts indicate that bigger problems will confront the industry in years to come. Continuance of positive action will be necessary if the industry is to work out long-time programs which can be effective in the marketing of bigger crops. The Federal Government should continue to assist in improving marketing conditions and increasing returns to growers. With the continued cooperation of the Florida citrus industry, this will be accomplished.

I would like to further point out to the House that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has purchased during this season over 950,000 boxes of this fruit for relief distribution at 46 cents per box. I do not believe any commodity with the same food value could be purchased at a correspondingly low cost, and I sincerely hope that the Administrator will be permitted to continue to purchase this surplus fruit.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I realize the fact the House is probably in the mood to pass this legislation today, and I appreciate the apparent universal interest of all people in the welfare of what my distinguished and genial friend from Mississippi has so ably entitled "the lowly fisherman." I myself am very vitally interested in the fishing industry, and I feel that if there is anything that needs to be done for the fishermen of the United States the Congress should take action in their behalf, and not necessarily in behalf of fish wholesalers.

I am inclined to agree with the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to the extent that I think the proponents of the legislation pending did not make a very good case for the necessity of the action from the standpoint of comparative prices of fish of the same variety during similar months in 1936 and 1937.

I would remind you that we had some experience once upon a time in attempting to lift the agricultural industry out of the dregs with the aid of a Farm Board that went on the market and bought products of the American farm and attempted to bolster the market in this way with disastrous results. Now, if this bill is passed, there is no assurance whatever that the fish bought from the wholesaler will result in better prices to the so-called lowly fishermen who bring these fish to the piers that they do not own themselves and sell them to the packers who in turn expect to market the fish to the Government corporation now under consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I only have 5 minutes, but I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. McCORMACK. How did the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation buy the eggs and other farm products which they handled; from the farmers?

Mr. WEARIN. I may say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to amending the law with reference to the authority of the Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase food commodities in general, but I say this legislation certainly does not have any earmarks of assisting the lowly fisherman, and we have no assurance that he will receive any more for his fish next year than he received this year; neither do we have any information that there is going to be a limitation upon the take in order to initiate a constructive program for the benefit of the fishing industry as a whole. That is the point I am making with reference to this particular proposition.

I may say to the Members of the House that so far as I am concerned I want the gentlemen who are interested in this legislation to know that as one who represents an interior district, I wish to be of any service possible to the lowly fisherman about whom we have heard so much today, and if he is in the condition which he has been portrayed as being in, then I think we ought to have constructive legislation introduced in the House along the lines of the Soil Conservation Act of the Seventy-fourth Congress, which I supported, for the benefit of agriculture and which I will support, if it is introduced in the House, for the benefit of the fishing industry, on condition, of course, that a meritorious case can be made in behalf of the fishermen, and I accept the opinion of many of my distinguished colleagues, such as the distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts, Virginia, and Mississippi, who believe this should be done, but let us go about it in an orderly and constructive manner.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I want to be genial and I yield briefly to the gentleman.

Mr. COLMER. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time unnecessarily, but I would like to know whether the gentleman, representing an interior district, would be opposed to the fisherman who lives on the coast line sharing in the benefits and plans of the Government by being placed upon a parity with the farmer——

Mr. WEARIN. Certainly not.

Mr. COLMER. Let me finish, please—by giving him an opportunity to sell his products?

Mr. WEARIN. Certainly; I have no objection to that, but I have no assurance that the benefit of this bill of my distinguished and genial friend from Massachusetts is going to reach that fisherman. I understand this is for the purpose of buying frozen fish that have already been bought from the fishermen and is now in the hands of the wholesaler.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That not to exceed $2,000,000 of the funds available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation may be used by such Corporation for the purpose of diverting surplus fish (including shellfish) and the products thereof from the normal channels of trade and commerce by the acquisition and distribution thereof in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry", approved March 5, 1937.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

In reference to what the last two speakers have said regarding this question of who is going to get relief, we quite agree that in the complicated situation which every industry presents, you cannot always be sure as to the effect of our actions. Speaking now solely from the standpoint of fishermen who have sold their fish at from 2 to 4 or 5 cents a pound or more to these dealers, who have frozen them in this last year, and who now have their freezers full of fish—we are not able to sell them again. Whether we consider them suckers or speculators, we have loaded them to the brim.

Unless the fish get out of those freezers, as we enter this new fishing season when the fishermen are going out and bringing in fish in quantities that will glut the market, we cannot expect any more fish will be put in cold storage. The testimony before the committee was that the present holders would sell these fish for probably one-half of what they cost. The Surplus Commodities Corporation, which I am sure is operated to the satisfaction of my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN], in purchasing agricultural commodities, and in which we have confidence, testified that they would follow the same process in purchasing fish. They would try not to gouge these fellows, but would buy the necessary surplus at a good, fair, business bargain, and it would probably approximate one-half of what they cost.

Mr. WEARIN. Does not the gentleman agree with me that it is highly problematical that any of this million dollars is ever going to reach the fishermen; and if we want to help the men running the boats we should really have a little constructive legislation to pay the benefit to the fishermen?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is altogether probable, from my knowledge of the fish-freezing business, if these surpluses are removed, they will go on and stock up for another year. That is the only way that we can get relief.

Mr. WEARIN rose.

Mr. BREWSTER. Just a moment. A year or two ago I brought in a potato bill, and I found my friends from Iowa were leading the opposition to that legislation for the relief of the potato farmer. I find now the same situation with fish. Some of my Iowa friends are again down here in the Well fighting this proposal. Iowa received $50,000,000 from the Triple A for the relief of corn and hogs. We ask a measly million here today for the relief of fish. When I see the attitude displayed by some of my Iowa colleagues, I no longer wonder that they raise the biggest hogs in the world in Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEARIN. Does not the gentleman think that the matter of raising potatoes and catching fish are two entirely different things? Gentlemen on this side of the aisle have already said that the fishing industry is the third most important in the United States, and the gentleman surely would not rank potatoes with the fishing industry from the standpoint of importance?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that all industries are entitled to equitable consideration underneath our equal laws.

Mr. McCORMACK. Potatoes are an agricultural product just the same.

Mr. BREWSTER. We have always thought they were.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 278, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the House joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the House joint resolution and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The House joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon and to include therein a few words taken from the writing of Professor Timmons, a constituent of mine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. REED of New York, Mr. MOTT, and Mr. BATES were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] about 1:30 this afternoon that the strike in Michigan had been settled. Has the gentleman any further information on that? Thousands of workers in Michigan, hundreds of thousands elsewhere, are calling upon the President and the Secretary of Labor to repudiate with firmness and in unequivocal language the illegal, communistic instrument of the sit-down strike.

The so-called settlement of the strike at Flint, a truce at Detroit, may bring temporary relief to the people of the State and aid in rolling up a Democratic victory at the election on April 5, but will not settle the issue, which is: Shall Lewis, Martin, Mortimer, and Frankensteen be permitted to rule Detroit, to supersede, you might say, the law?

This epidemic of lawlessness has spread for 4 months from State to State, always with the obvious moral support of the President and his public advisers and official administrators. This support often has been by way of failure to act; sometimes by instructions to subordinate officials, as exemplified by the long-distance telephone communications between Governor Murphy and Washington, which resulted in the Governor withholding the aid of the troops when it was sought to remove the strikers from the Flint plants. At other times the administration's support has been open and direct, as in the two recent statements of Miss Frances Perkins, the Secretary of Labor, that the sit-down strike is exactly like any other cessation of work.

The people of the United States have not forgotten that Mr. John L. Lewis declared, here in the city of Washington less than 2 months ago, during the General Motors sit-down at Flint, that he and his organization had bent every effort in behalf of the President during the Democratic national campaign last year, and that they now expect to gather their reward.

Does this mean that the President has undertaken to deliver the entire United States into the direction of the C. I. O.? American public opinion emphatically repudiates and rejects this crippling lawlessness by a minority of the workers. Public opinion is aroused and demands that the President and his responsible administrators cease temporizing and compromising with lawlessness.

The issue at stake today is the integrity of the law. Does the President of the United States intend to uphold the laws? If he does, when will he instruct his subordinates in the Labor Department to give some public evidence of that policy?

The President and his advisers have lighted these fires of disorder. Upon the President and his advisers now rests the full responsibility for restoring the supremacy and upholding the integrity of the law.

There is no longer any contention in Detroit that the issue is a question of wages, hours, or working conditions. Throughout the entire State of Michigan the issue is clearly recognized—shall lawless dictatorship prevail?

The extent to which the officials of my State and the city of Detroit have surrendered is indicated by a statement in the newspapers of March 23 to the effect that John L. Lewis' men have agreed "that the police force will be permitted to direct traffic" during the union demonstrations in downtown Detroit.

Martin and others of Lewis' henchman have presumed to suspend the operation of the law in Michigan and to substitute in lieu thereof their own edicts.

It becomes important to inquire as to the standing of some of these men. I will not impose upon you with a long statement as to who they are or as to the records which they have made. Suffice it to say that of three of these—Brophy, Hapgood, and Germer—John L. Lewis himself, in 1930, said:

> They are "fakers, repudiated leaders, traitors to the unions, opportunists, and purveyors of every falsehood, slander, and deception."

When a man so far forgets his obligations to society and to his country as to employ men whom he has thus described to carry out his orders, he loses whatever claim he may have had to sincerity.

When the officials of a city and a State take orders from a man who is without lawful authority, they acknowledge a temporary break-down of law and order.

Yesterday afternoon I received a telegram from Detroit, which stated that the police commissioner of the city was—

> Requesting business interests to vacate downtown Detroit, middle of the afternoon, to permit strikers holding undisputed possession thereof.

This is proof sufficient, if proof were needed, that there is rebellion against legal authority in the city of Detroit.

Do not forget that, prior to the November election, strikes were postponed. Remember that when President Roosevelt needed support for his proposal to change the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States we had a series of sit-down strikes at Flint and Detroit, which since have spread to some 15 States from coast to coast.

Note that at the mass meeting at Detroit, speaking to more than 50,000 people, Martin said:

> The Supreme Court of the United States is the greatest threat to democracy in the United States, outside of fascism.

No more untrue statement could possibly be made. The fact is that labor has failed to even request that the provisions of the Wagner Act be invoked in any of their disputes. It is a matter of record that in the Flint strike the strikers refused to join in a request for a vote. Everyone knows, or should know, the employers cannot invoke the provisions of that act.

If we accept Martin's statements, these strikes are called, in part at least, to further the President's attack on the Supreme Court.

After the settlement with General Motors, five separate and distinct strikes were called in its plants. Then they called the one on Chrysler, although they had no complaint against that company. In yesterday's mass meeting in Detroit they named the next intended victim. It was Henry Ford.

General Motors yielded to their demand; steel yielded. Other companies—many of them—surrendered to the demands, and still the strikes continue; and they will continue, unless the President or some other lawful authority intervenes, until the supremacy of Lewis is acknowledged.

But from the day this lawlessness started, the President of the United States, whose duty it is to enforce the laws and protect all citizens equally, has remained silent. By his silence he has given encouragement and moral support to all who would destroy the law.

The President announces today that he will call a conference to deal with the situation. He has had much to say about the failure of the Supreme Court to meet the needs of the hour. Well might that Court ask, Has the executive department functioned since January 1? Why has the President neglected to enforce the law, as it is his duty to do?

Governor Murphy, while stating that the law should be obeyed, has taken no active steps to enforce compliance with his verbal demands. As the President so well said, a man should be judged by his acts, his deeds; not by what he says.

Perhaps the President and Murphy as well have in mind that there is an election in Michigan on the 5th day of April next. If Murphy, the President's man, can be hailed as the man who settled the strike, who brought industrial peace, it may be forgotten that it was other Presidential supporters who started these strikes and have kept them going.

It may be, too, that if these strikers can remain in Detroit while negotiations are proceeding, they may be enabled to take possession of the polling places, as they have of the factories, and that they may, by illegally exercising the right to vote, add several hundred thousand to the Democratic total in the county of Wayne.

Illegal voting would be nothing new to the citizens of Michigan, for they recall what happened in an election held there not so long ago.

Perhaps this coming election on April 5 will be similar to those held in Germany, where the votes cast are all in the end counted for one party.

AMENDING SECTION 704 OF THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4951) to amend section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 (49 Stat. L. 2008–2009), with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

> Page 2, lines 2 and 3, after "advantageous", insert "but the Commission shall arrange as soon as practicable to offer all such lines of vessels for charter as hereinafter provided."
>
> Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out "as soon as practicable after December 31, 1937" and insert "within 1 year after the passage of this act."
>
> Page 2, line 6, after "Provided", insert: "That nothing herein contained shall prevent private operators, under such operating agreements, commencing voyages prior to said expiration date and completing them thereafter: Provided further."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment that has been made in the Senate?

Mr. BLAND. The bill as it left the House provided that lines of vessels that are now being operated by the Government should continue until December 31, 1937, and that thereafter, as soon as practicable, the lines should be chartered. The Senate bill goes back, in part, to the original subsidy bill that was passed and requires discontinuance by June 25 or June 27, whatever the date may be—1 year after the passage of the subsidy bill—so that it shortens that period. But the Comptroller General has ruled that no money could be paid after June 25, 1937, on voyages commenced before that time. The Senate, in order to give these ships the right to operate up to June 25, provided that they might continue their operations until the expiration date. That is contained in the last amendment—

That nothing herein contained shall prevent private operators, under such operating agreements, commencing voyages prior to said expiration date and completing them thereafter.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I was interested to note the fact that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] called up a bill today having to do with the extension of time for the negotiation charters for the operators of certain Government-owned shipping lines that I opposed in its original form when it appeared here in this body, and that he recommended the acceptance of a Senate amendment, which bears out my contention at the time that the proposal should be so revised that the original language of the act would be preserved and also the right of the new maritime authority to establish the merchant-marine policy of this country. I feel it is entirely fitting and proper to call this matter to the attention of the House, because I want the body to know that I am vitally interested in merchant-marine matters and that my acts in connection therewith are intended to be in the interest of that important part of our Nation's business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a table of my own compilation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUTHERFORD, for Thursday and Friday, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana (at the request of Mr. DEROUEN), for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HILL of Washington (at the request of Mr. WALLGREN), for 1 week, on account of important business.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill just passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, there are two special orders for tomorrow, one of 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and one of 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, is there not another order to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RAYBURN. There are two other special orders, but they were for permission to address the House after the conclusion of consideration of the appropriation bill which we were considering yesterday.

I may say for the benefit of the Members that after the disposition of the two special orders I first mentioned it is the intention to take up for further consideration the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor appropriation bill.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1937

Rev. W. L. Darby, D. D., executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose sovereign sway encompasses the people of every tribe and tongue, we, who dwell in this favored land, are thankful to be the objects of Thy constant care. Make us, in life and deed, more worthy of the multitude of Thy mercies.

Amid the suffering and need of these trying times may we who have abundance be willing to share with the undernourished and underprivileged. In our human relations, industrial and international, may the spirit of justice and good will prevail. As the dread of strife and the fear of war grip the hearts of men at home and abroad, help us to seek peace and pursue it in righteousness and the spirit of fraternity.

Grant Thy blessing today upon this company of devoted men, chosen by the suffrage of their fellows to their positions of honor and great responsibility. In these sacred days, which remind us of the love and sacrifice of our Lord, purify our motives and guide our thoughts, so that we all, high and low, may work harmoniously together for the welfare of America and the betterment of all mankind. In Christ's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, March 24, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY—NOTICE OF SPEECH BY SENATOR M'KELLAR

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to give notice to the Senate that on Monday next, as soon as I can obtain the floor, I shall make some further remarks on the President's Court proposal.

COURT ORDERS RESTRAINING ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS—(S. DOC. NO. 42)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting in response to Senate Resolution 82 (agreed to Feb. 17, 1937), calling for certain information concerning injunctions or judgments issued or rendered by Federal courts since March 4, 1933, in cases involving acts of Congress, a report of the Department of Justice thereon, together with a report of the Treasury Department; and stating that the National Bituminous Coal Commission has not submitted a report but the Attorney General is advised that all cases in which injunctions were sought against the enforcement of any provisions of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 are covered in the report of the Department of Justice, and that consequently the Commission will not submit a separate report, and also stating that the report of the Securities and Exchange Commission will be forwarded within a few days; which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

LANDS WITHIN GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the exchange of certain lands within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park for lands within the Cherokee Indian Reservation, N. C., and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Joint resolution urging the national administration to take immediate action providing relief for the drought-stricken rural areas of Wisconsin

Whereas about 40 counties of Wisconsin, covering more than one-half of the area of this State, have been seriously affected by the drought in 1936 and previous years; and

Whereas thousands of dairy farmers in this drought-stricken area of Wisconsin have fed what little grain and roughage they were able to produce last year; and

Whereas the savings and resources of these farmers have become completely exhausted because of 5 years of drought and unfavorable conditions resulting from the depression; and

Whereas the silos, haymows, and granaries in the drought-stricken area of this State are empty and the farmers have no funds nor credit with which to buy feed for their dairy herds until pastures are ready in the spring; and

Whereas the farmers of this area respectfully urge the Federal Government to make available jobs under the Works Progress Administration or other Federal agencies in these rural areas in order that the drought-stricken farmers may have an opportunity to earn money to buy the necessary feed to maintain their valuable dairy herds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature urges the national administration and the State and Federal officials charged with the duty of administering the Works Progress Administration to take immediate action to make available an allotment of funds for the drought-stricken rural areas of Wisconsin and to put into effect forthwith a work program under the Works Progress Administration or other Federal agency to meet this serious emergency; be it further

Resolved, That a special joint committee be created consisting of three senators and four assemblymen, to be appointed as are standing committees in the respective houses, said committee to keep in close contact with the proper State and Federal officials with a view to securing prompt action to carry out the intent of this resolution; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Administrator of W. P. A., M. W. Torkelson, State administrator of W. P. A., to both Houses of the Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Missouri State Legislative Board, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, and also the adoption of a proposed amendment to the Constitution known as the "human rights amendment" sponsored by Representative AMLIE, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Democratic City Convention, St. Ignace, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court in certain instances, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., urging Congress to include Milwaukee's Federal housing projects in House bill no. 40, providing for the placing of Federal housing institutions on a taxpaying basis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of several citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2257) to provide old-age compensation for the citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GIBSON presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the organized electrical workers of Brattleboro, Bellows Falls, and Bennington, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of 158 members of the Dallas, Tex., bar, praying for the adoption of the President's judiciary proposal, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 240 citizens of Galveston County, Tex., praying for the adoption of the President's court and judiciary proposal, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by a meeting of the town of Dover, Mass., protesting against the enactment of legislation to increase the membership of the Supreme Court, or any measure which might tend to impair the independence of that Court or subject it to political influence, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by annual meetings of the towns of Andover and Methuen, Mass., protesting against the enactment of legislation to increase the membership of the Supreme Court, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Parsons, Kans., praying that Congress exercise the power granted it by the Constitution "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures", which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Phillips County, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called Neely-Pettengill bill to abolish compulsory block booking and blind selling of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska relating to air navigation in that Territory. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The memorial, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, is as follows:

To the honorable the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, the Delegate to Congress from Alaska, and the Alaska Road Commission:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the vast Territory of Alaska, comprising some 590,000 square miles of land, has less than 2,500 miles of road; and

Whereas the waterways are frozen over and inoperative for several months each year; and

Whereas the airplane is our only mode of transportation to many points in the summer, and to practically all points in the winter, excepting along the southeastern coast and the railroad belt; and

Whereas the commercial and economic development of Alaska under modern transportation conditions involves an extended airport program, costing at least $2,900,000 in primary construction and equipment; and

Whereas the Bureau of Air Commerce has made a complete survey of the situation in Alaska, outlining a program of work which is deemed essential, and an interdepartmental committee composed of representatives of the various branches of the Government interested in Alaska, has agreed not only to the details of the program but also to its essential character in the national program; and

Whereas the Territory of Alaska is represented in Congress by the Honorable ANTHONY J. DIMOND, who has a voice but no vote in that body, and must rely upon Congress for support of any Alaskan cause in voting action:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent that this body go on record strongly supporting the development program involving the selection and improvement of at least 100 airports at an estimated cost of $2,900,000, pursuant to the survey made under order of the Bureau of Air Commerce and approved by the interdepartmental committee; and

We respectfully request that at least one Congressman from each of the States call upon the President urging presentation of the Alaska airport program, and strongly recommend that the finances required to carry the same through be provided from emergency funds or regular appropriations, and if it is found that the task is too great to be accomplished in 1 year, that a start be made the coming fiscal year and be completed as soon as practicable thereafter.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Approved by the Governor February 20, 1937.

JOHN W. TROY,
Governor of Alaska.

THE PRESIDENT'S COURT PROPOSAL—PAPERS IN THE NATURE OF PETITIONS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I present a statement of the position of the executive committee of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation, supported by officers and members of the Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association and the Mississippi Federated Cooperatives, and also a resolution adopted by the Mississippi State Bar, in special meeting assembled, relative to the President's proposal for court reform, which I ask may be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the statement and resolution were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF POSITION OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE MISSISSIPPI FARM BUREAU FEDERATION REGARDING THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL OF THE SUPREME COURT REFORM

JACKSON, MISS., March 12, 1937.

Since the farm population of America constitutes, normally, the greatest purchasing class of our economic and industrial system and there cannot be, therefore, a sustained prosperity unless farmers receive prices for their products which will enable them to make expenditures out of earnings rather than from impairment of capital or further indebtedness; and

Since constitutional objections in the light of the interpretation by the Supreme Court as it is now constituted prevent the administration of adequate farm legislation guaranteeing agricultural security; and

Since experience with actualities makes it clear that Federal laws supplementing State laws are needed to help solve the problems which result from modern inventions applied in an industrialized nation which conducts its business with scant regard to State lines; and

Believing that there is little fault to be found with the Constitution of the United States as it stands today to promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity; and

Believing that, rightly considered and interpreted, the Constitution can be used as an instrument of progress and not as a device for prevention of action, and that the process of our democracy must not be imperiled by the denial of essential powers of free government; and

Being supported by the majority of 68 organized county farm bureaus with telegrams and resolutions, endorsed by a large majority of the 14,000 members of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation; and

Being further supported by the officers and members of the Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association and the Mississippi Federated Cooperatives,

The executive officers of the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation, the Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association, and the Mississippi Federated Cooperatives, representing the members of farmers' organizations in Mississippi, do hereby go on record as supporting President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in his proposal to reorganize the Federal judiciary system and do earnestly solicit the cooperation of all classes of people in the State and our representatives in Congress to join with us in this endorsement of the President's proposal to the end that our governmental machinery may be so reorganized as to speedily function in such manner as to insure the economic and social security of the people of our Nation.

Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation, by executive committee: D. E. Wilson, president; J. M. Robertshaw, vice president; C. E. Beauchamp, vice president; C. B. Smith, vice president; J. W. Haynes, vice president; H. S. Johnson, secretary-treasurer; J. G. Prichard, executive committeeman; A. D. Stewart, executive committeeman; C. L. McNeil, executive committeeman.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE MISSISSIPPI STATE BAR IN SPECIAL MEETING ASSEMBLED BY A VOTE OF 165 TO 101

Be it resolved by the Mississippi State Bar in special meeting assembled, That the proposed plan of the illustrious President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary, as submitted by him to the Congress, has the hearty approval and support of this body;

Resolved further, That copies hereof be transmitted forthwith to the President of the United States, each member of the Mississippi delegation in Congress, and to the press.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 246) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1081) for the relief of H. G. Carriere, Charles E. Livingston, and John Latham, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 247) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 673) for the relief of S. T. Dickinson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 248) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 893) for the relief of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 249) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 451) for the relief of Farley J. Holloman, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 250) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 812) for the relief of E. P. Conroy and Graham Conroy, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 251) thereon.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 252) thereon.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN SENATE RECORDS TO CUSTODY OF ARCHIVIST

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 99) authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to transfer certain records to the custody of the Archivist of the United States, submitted by me yesterday.

In connection with the matter I ask that copy of a letter addressed to the President of the Senate by the Archivist, together with the accompanying rules and regulations of The National Archives for the use of records, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and the accompanying rules and regulations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 15, 1937.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On May 18, 1936, Procurement Division, Treasury Department, let a contract for the manufacture and installation of steel filing equipment for The National Archives Building, which, when completed, will be available for the permanent storage of 233,525 cubic feet of records. This contract will be completed in three separate stages. The first, to be completed about the middle of March, will take care of 73,465 cubic feet of records; the second, to be completed some time during the summer of 1937, will take care of 68,930 cubic feet of records; and the third, to be completed some time next fall, will take care of 91,130 cubic feet of records.

From time to time reports have been made that the accumulation of noncurrent records that are of permanent value or historical interest has raised serious space problems in Government buildings. To meet these problems and to provide for the preservation and administration of these records were the primary purposes of Congress in authorizing the erection of The National Archives Building and the creation of The National Archives establishment.

The building will soon be completed and the first installment of stack equipment is going forward satisfactorily. It is now possible, therefore, to make plans for a steady and orderly transfer of records to The National Archives Building. In order for this to be done it is necessary for me to have, as soon as possible, an estimate of the approximate volume of records that may be transferred in accordance with the resolutions of The National Archives Council of February 10, 1936, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. The information requested will enable me to make the identification inventories required by the resolutions of the council, to apportion the space in the stack areas according to the requirements of the several departments, to arrange for the handling of these records at The National Archives Building, and to work out a satisfactory schedule for their transfer from their present depositories.

Enclosed is a copy of a report made by one of the deputy examiners of The National Archives on the accumulation of old, noncurrent records of the Senate, which, it seems to me, come within the classes of materials which, under the terms of The National Archives Act, should be transferred to The National Archives. These records, I am told, while not necessary to the conduct of the business of the Senate, are of great historical value.

Enclosed is a copy of the Rules and Regulations for the Use of Records in custody of The National Archives, designed to facilitate the use of this material by students.

In order to facilitate the official use by Government agencies of records that have been transferred to The National Archives Building I have made a special regulation governing the temporary withdrawal of records for that purpose, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.[1]

In this connection may I call to your attention an act approved June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1821), amending section 8 of The National Archives Act, authorizing the Archivist to furnish authenticated copies of records in his custody and providing that an authenticated copy of any such record "shall be admitted in evidence equally with the original from which it was made"?

Very truly yours,

R. D. W. CONNOR,
Archivist of the United States.

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR THE USE OF RECORDS

These rules and regulations are designed for the purpose of protecting, preserving, and furthering the efficient use of the public records in the custody of the Archivist of the United States.

---

[1] The report or statement made by a deputy examiner regarding Senate records and the regulations governing the temporary withdrawal by agencies of the U. S. Government of material deposited in The National Archives Building are printed at p. 2670 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Mar. 24, 1937.

Members of the staff will gladly assist searchers in every possible way. Searchers are requested to cooperate in all measures deemed necessary to preserve and safeguard the records, and to promote their orderly use.

R. D. W. CONNOR,
Archivist of the United States.

DECEMBER 18, 1936.

RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR THE USE OF RECORDS

The following rules and regulations have been made, promulgated, and published as Document 3876 in the Federal Register, vol. I, no. 199, December 19, 1936, pursuant to the authority vested in the Archivist of the United States by The National Archives Act, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122–1124):

1. Persons desiring to use records in the custody of the Archivist of the United States must apply to the Archivist for admission to the search rooms, using the form provided for that purpose, and may be required to submit an acceptable letter of introduction. If the applicant is a minor, his application must be approved by his parent or guardian. An applicant who is not a citizen of the United States may be required to present a letter of introduction from the embassy or legation of his country. A group of persons desiring to view motion pictures or hear sound recordings must be represented by an authorized spokesman, who in making application for admission must give the identity of the group he represents.

2. If the application is approved, a card of admission will be issued. An admission card is not transferable and must be produced when required. It is valid for 6 months from date of issue and may be renewed upon application.

3. The search rooms and the auditorium are open from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., except on Saturdays, when they are open from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. They are not open on Sundays and legal holidays.

4. Requisitions for records must be made on the forms provided for that purpose, signed by the searcher, and presented to the attendant in charge of the control desk in the central search room.

5. Persons desiring to view motion pictures must fill out the form provided for that purpose at least 1 day in advance of the time service is desired. On receipt and approval of this application, a time will be fixed for the screening and the applicant will be notified thereof.

6. When the searcher has completed his use of records, he must notify an attendant. The searcher is responsible for all records turned over to him until an attendant returns the canceled requisition.

7. The greatest care must be exercised in the use of all records and books. They must not be leaned upon, written upon, or in any way damaged. No tracing is permitted, and ink must not be used in the search rooms.

8. The use of records of exceptional value or in fragile condition shall be subject to such special regulations as the Archivist may deem necessary for their protection.

9. No records, books, or other property of The National Archives may be taken from the search rooms except by members of the staff.

10. Requests for reproduction of records must be presented to the Chief of the Division of Reference on forms provided for the purpose.

11. No overcoats, umbrellas, canes, cameras, or traveling bags may be taken into the search rooms or the auditorium.

12. The use of tobacco, the lighting of matches, and eating in the search rooms, the auditorium, or any other areas in which archival materials are in use or in temporary or permanent storage are strictly prohibited.

13. The privilege of admission to the search rooms may be withdrawn for any violation of these rules and regulations, for disregarding the authority of the attendants in charge, or for offensive conduct.

14. Any case of incivility on the part of an attendant or of unsatisfactory service should be reported in writing to the chief of the division concerned.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Dr. John N. Bowden to be assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath; and

Dr. Robert D. Mansfield to be assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

MARITIME COMMISSION—REPORT OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, to report favorably from the Committee on Commerce for the Executive Calendar the nominations of the five gentleman who have been appointed to membership on the United States Maritime Commission. In view of the fact that the joint resolution now pending in the House will need to pass before we consider these nominations, I assume no action will be taken until sometime next week.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent, as in executive session, to submit reports on certain nominations from the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. I object at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The reports may be submitted in executive session.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1983) for the relief of Max C. Shigley; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 1984) for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LEE:

A bill (S. 1985) for the relief of J. G. Cansler; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 1986) to amend section 42 of title 7 of the Canal Zone Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

A bill (S. 1987) for the relief of George J. Leatherwood; and

A bill (S. 1988) for the relief of Mrs. Charles R. Yopp; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 1989) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Painter Menoher; to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma introduced Senate bill 1990, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 1991) for the relief of the owners of the steam barge Genessee and the barge J. Mooney;

A bill (S. 1992) for the relief of the estate of Alexis Romm; and

A bill (S. 1993) for the relief of the estate of Cornelius P. Young; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 1994) for the relief of the county of Shelby in the State of Tennessee (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) for the relief of certain persons who suffered damages occasioned by the establishment and operation of the Aberdeen Proving Ground; to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 146. An act to require contractors on public building projects to name their subcontractors, material men, and supply men, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 5331. An act to restore certain benefits to World War veterans suffering with paralysis, paresis, or blindness, or who are helpless or bedridden, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5478. An act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level premium term policies for another 5-year period; to the Committee on Finance.

H. J. Res. 278. Joint resolution to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry; to the Committee on Appropriations.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. NEELY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1397) to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS RECLAMATION "A" CANAL, KLAMATH FALLS, OREG.—AMENDMENT

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1815) to provide for the construction of four bridges across the United States Reclamation "A" Canal in Klamath Falls, Oreg., which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

EMBARGOES AGAINST NATIONS AIDING OTHER NATIONS IN CIVIL STRIFE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution calling for information from the Department of State. I shall ask for its present consideration, but first should like to have it read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 100), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise the Senate through its Committee on Foreign Relations whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists, which state of civil war has caused our Government to declare embargoes against exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to that nation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard, and the resolution will go over under the rule.

CHICAGO GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I will take just a moment to explain it.

The resolution proposes an investigation of the action of the Chicago Great Western Railroad in its refusal to abide by the award made by the National Labor Board under the Railway Labor Act. The award has been assessed by the Board in an amount of about $50,000. The railway, thus far, has refused to abide by the award. A vote has been taken upon the part of the employees of the railway company, which looks to a strike. The situation may become serious. I am offering the resolution to request the Interstate Commerce Committee to make an inquiry as to the facts concerning the refusal of the railway to abide by the award. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 101) was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the National Railway Labor Act and amendments thereto were enacted by Congress and approved by the President for the express purpose of supplying machinery for the peaceful adjustment of controversies concerning wages, working conditions, or other matters, which might arise between the railroads and their employees; and

Whereas an essential part of this machinery is the National Railroad Adjustment Board with headquarters in Chicago, and made up of an equal number of representatives of the carriers and of the recognized unions of the employees; such Board constituting what might be described as a supreme court for the settlement of all disputes between the railroads and their employees; and

Whereas said Board, after extended hearings and full consideration of the facts, recently decided that the Chicago Great Western Railroad had violated its wage agreement with certain organizations of its employees, and thereupon made awards to individual employees totaling approximately $50,000; and

Whereas the trustees of the Chicago Great Western have refused to pay said awards, thus setting a precedent which, if it is followed by other railroads, may destroy the machinery set up by Congress for the peaceful adjustment of railroad labor disputes; and

Whereas an emergency commission selected by the President of the United States, by authority of the Railroad Labor Act, has failed in its effort to persuade the trustees to recognize the validity of awards made by the National Railroad Adjustment Board; and

Whereas because of the trustee's refusal to pay such awards the railroad labor organizations involved have polled their members and have been authorized by a substantially unanimous vote to withdraw all their members from service on the Chicago Great Western, thus threatening a serious interruption of interstate commerce: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make and to report to the Senate the results of a thorough and complete investigation of all facts relating to the failure of the Chicago Great Western Railroad to adjust and settle the awards of the National Railroad Adjustment Board, and to make any recommendations necessary to carry into effect the awards of said Board; and any other facts or circumstances surrounding the failure of the said railroad to abide by the decision of the Board.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $2,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word to the distinguished Senator from Idaho. The subject matter which he has just advanced came up incidentally last week in a conference at which I happened to be; it was not the subject for which the conference was held. When the matter was referred to, the general counsel, Mr. Ralph Shaw, stated that the company had offered to abide, was desirous of abiding—I do not know sufficient about the details to apply the appropriate words—by the arrangement, and that the matter had come to peace between the company and the representatives of the employees, except as to one element of them that could not concur with either. I know none of the facts. I am only desirous of having the able Senator know that the general counsel has stated that the main purposes had been agreed upon by both the company and the men, but that there was a division of sentiment on the part of a branch of the men against the other set of men. These facts reveal, I fancy, the truth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the facts will come out in the investigation, but my information as late as this morning is to the effect that the matter is still unadjusted.

Mr. LEWIS. I must assume that the investigation sought by the Senator will probably reveal all the facts and eliminate any possible confusion; and so we will leave it as it stands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

INVESTIGATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF PROBLEMS

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 102), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas there is need of a thoroughgoing study of all phases of the unemployment and relief problems; and

Whereas it is essential that the Congress obtain information necessary for the formation of a legislative policy with respect to such problems: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the problems of unemployment and relief with a view to determining (1) the extent and nature of unemployment and relief needs, (2) the relative merits of work relief and direct relief, (3) the proper apportionment of financial and administrative responsibilities among the Federal, State, and local governments, (4) the best method of coordinating the unemployment and relief programs of all governmental agencies, (5) the number of persons unemployed by reason of the use of labor-saving devices or machinery, and (6) methods by which private reemployment may be encouraged. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations for legislation.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to take, or have taken, a census of unemployed persons in the United States, classifying them by locality, race, sex, age, customary occupation, and cause and duration of unemployment, together with any other information the committee may deem pertinent, and to make use of the facilities and aid of any agencies, governmental or private, which may be available. Each department and agency of the Government is hereby requested to assist the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, upon its request, in any manner which may be authorized by law.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per one hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE TAYLOR GRAZING ACT

Mr. CHAVEZ presented copy of a letter from the Director of Grazing, Department of the Interior, addressed to Senator HATCH, relative to the administration of the so-called Taylor Grazing Act, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, DIVISION OF GRAZING,
Washington, March 23, 1937.

Hon. CARL A. HATCH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HATCH: I have received your letter of March 19 attaching a condensed summary of some of the complaints against the administration of the Taylor Grazing Act, and I am very appreciative of your attitude relative to this matter.

I am not acquainted with all of the facts except in a few of the cases which you mentioned, but I am taking a copy of your memorandum with me to New Mexico, where I expect to be within the next week or so to make a personal investigation on the ground. I will try to hold a meeting at Deming convenient to these people so as to meet with and listen to them.

More dissatisfaction has come to the surface in New Mexico than in any other State, and nearly 90 percent of that has come from one particular spot around Roswell, so there is every reason to believe that something is wrong at least in that locality. Under any system of administering public range there are bound to be many dissatisfied people. However, it is our concern to see that they are as few as possible and that those few are necessary under the rules which have been made to regulate the situation.

Most of the complaints may be classified under three groups:

(1) Those who are dissatisfied with the Taylor Grazing Act itself. There are many who would prefer to have an act similar to the Stock Raising Homestead Act by making a grant of four or five sections to each citizen—to retain title in the United States, but to give the use of the land to the applicant. This would take care of many people at the present time who are unable to get the use of that much public land under the act as it exists, but, of course, it is a matter of legislation and for Congress and one which is not for the consideration of an administrative agency.

(2) Those who believe the rules for administering the act are wrong. The rules, in brief, require a person to have property, land, or water, which will take care of livestock for the time when the public range is inadequate, and such property shall have been used for that purpose prior to January 1, 1934. In selecting that date to freeze the picture the rules are merely extending the date which Congress itself provided in section 3 of the act, "except that until July 1, 1935, no preference shall be given in the issuance of such permits to any owner, occupant, or settler whose rights were acquired between January 1, 1934, and December 31, 1934, both dates inclusive." Many people who want, and undoubtedly would be helped by having public grazing privileges are unable to comply with these requirements and feel that the rules should be changed.

(3) Those who are satisfied with the law and the rules, but who think the method of administration is wrong. In the year 1936, 2,555 grazing licenses were issued in the State of New Mexico in the five established grazing districts for 936,855 head of livestock. A classification of these licenses and the numbers of stock for which they were licensed are as follows:

Class	Number of licenses	Number of stock
Cattle:
1 to 50	408	9,886
50 to 150	292	28,453
150 to 300	199	46,960
300 to 500	104	43,684
500 to 1,000	108	69,756
Over 1,000	50	140,375
Total	1,161	339,114
Horses:
1 to 50	964	12,678
50 to 150	53	3,460
150 to 300	4	985
300 to 500	2	760
500 to 1,000	2	1,450
Total	1,025	19,333
Sheep:
1 to 200	46	2,390
200 to 500	32	10,732
500 to 1,000	38	25,626
1,000 to 2,000	51	73,039
2,000 to 3,000	15	38,101
3,000 to 5,000	31	128,735
Over 5,000	23	199,581
Total	236	478,204
Goats:
1 to 200	60	3,913
200 to 500	17	6,586
500 to 1,000	23	20,400
1,000 to 2,000	25	39,840
2,000 to 3,000	5	14,275
3,000 to 5,000	1	4,000
Over 5,000	2	11,190
Total	133	100,204

The first consideration of all applicants is by the local advisory board. You may recall that at the time such boards were established and when it was determined that they should be elected by all who might be entitled to a license, on the basis of one man one vote regardless of the size of his operations, a delegation from New Mexico came to Washington to protest that method of selection and requested that the positions on the board be filled by appointment by a committee of various interests then established at Albuquerque, N. Mex. The Secretary, however, did not make any exception to the general rule of one man one vote for New Mexico, so that the board members there were elected in the same manner as in other States.

By assembling such representatives of the local industry at one point and having available their intimate knowledge of practically all of the applicants and their respective set-ups, the division was enabled to issue licenses in a comparatively short time to that which would have elapsed had a larger number of Federal full-time employees been used to gather the information which the board members already possessed.

An appeal from the board's action to the regional grazier and from him to the Director and then to the Secretary was provided for. In practice, the appeal procedure has proved rather slow and changes to rectify this are now under consideration.

The policy of the Department is now, and always has been, to protect adequately the small operator as well as the larger one and to use particular care to see that encroachments are not made by the latter upon the rights of the former.

Two outstanding cases in New Mexico have received notoriety and consideration—the Gresham & Brown case and the Arthur V. Pue case.

They have both been satisfactorily disposed of under our existing rules and hearings procedure according to the latest information I have received, although there is an appeal pending on a minor point in the Pue case.

I appreciate very keenly the fact that any local board is subject to dominance by one or more of its members or by local outside influence. The regional grazier's complete veto of any of its recommendations is the best check we have on such a state of affairs. The duties of regional graziers are new, and we have been training personnel at the same time we have been administering the Taylor Act.

I was pleased to learn from Mr. James Cullender, an attorney from Roswell, N. Mex., that in spite of differences of opinion he and others may have had with the staff of the Division of Grazing he thinks they are endeavoring to do the fair thing without fear or favor. I was in Roswell myself last September and held an open meeting in the courthouse. At that time the dissatisfaction crystallized into a desire for a new law, and the comparatively few cases which came up were disposed of by making some adjustments and in some cases correcting some obviously clerical errors.

At the very beginning of this matter I realized that it would take several years to get enough accurate information and knowledge of the subject to issue term permits with fairness, and for that reason the division has functioned on a temporary yearly basis and has issued licenses only. This has enabled us to correct our rules as we go along. We are now approaching the point where term permits can be given, and all the criticism and suggestions that we can get are of great help.

I shall be very pleased to give you a more detailed report relative to the people listed in your memorandum as soon as I have been on the ground and made an investigation; or if I am unable to do so myself, I will have someone else make an investigation.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Cordially yours,

F. R. CARPENTER, Director.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BLACK

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator BLACK in New York City on Wednesday, Mar. 24, 1937, concerning the proposal to reorganize the judiciary, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE VOTELESS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—ADDRESS BY SENATOR COPELAND

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of The Voteless District of Columbia, delivered by Senator COPELAND before the Columbia Historical Society, Washington, D. C., Apr. 17, 1935, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will call the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

DOROTHY WHITE, MRS. CAROL M. WHITE, AND CHARLES A. WHITE

The bill (S. 548) for the relief of Dorothy White, Mrs. Carol M. White, and Charles A. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is my impression that the author of this bill himself, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], has asked that it go over each time it has been called. The Senator from Arizona is not present, and I suggest that the bill go over for the time being.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GOVERNMENT OF AMERICAN SAMOA

The bill (S. 1095) to provide a government for American Samoa was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TYDINGS subsequently said: Mr. President, referring for a moment to Calendar No. 140, Senate bill 1095, to provide a government for American Samoa, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, in order that the committee may give the Treasury Department a hearing upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I also ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION UNDER FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

The bill (S. 48) to authorize an appropriation for investigation under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I request the Senator from Michigan to state the basis of his objection to the consideration of this measure at this time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not think the bill should be considered under the present rule of procedure. I shall be glad to have it disposed of very promptly when there is an opportunity to debate it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is proceeding under unanimous consent. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 23) authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was announced as next in order. The joint resolution had been reported adversely.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I see that there are four joint resolutions on the Calendar relative to the General Pulaski Memorial Day and that each is reported adversely. I have no objection to the consideration of the reports on Calendar Nos. 182, 183, 184, and 185, being respectively Senate Joint Resolutions 23, 24, 33, and 74, relating to the same subject matter, and I suggest that they be taken up one at a time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask if the original joint resolution having to do with the same subject and which was favorably reported by the committee has been passed on?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the joint resolution which authorizes the recognition of the 11th of October as a holiday for the present year only has been passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, I ask unanimous consent that all the other joint resolutions on the subject may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and Senate Joint Resolutions 23, 24, 33, and 74 are recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SAFETY OF RAIL TRANSPORTATION

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at the request of several Senators who are absent, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to order of business 226, the bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who on a previous occasion had asked that the bill go over, does not intend to interpose any objection at this time. Am I correct about that?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have not interposed any objection, but I shall want to offer an amendment when the bill is considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was heard, and the bill went over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, highway grade-crossing protective devices, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill is in the same status as Calendar 225, Senate bill 532. A number of Senators who are absent have asked that the bill go over. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM I. CAUSEY AND EARL LEROY BAILEY

The bill (S. 1631) for the relief of Commander William I. Causey, United States Navy, and Lt. Comdr. Earl LeRoy Bailey, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Commander William I. Causey, United States Navy, the sum of $56.78, representing excess cost of travel checked against the accounts of this officer for travel performed in June 1935 and January 1936, under orders which authorized the use of a compartment for the purpose of transporting in his personal custody certain secret documents of the Navy.

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Lt. Comdr. Earl LeRoy Bailey, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the sum of $80.95, representing the cost of extra half-fare railway ticket plus difference between cost of lower standard berth and compartment furnished Commander Cary W. Magruder, United States Navy, in April 1935, under orders which authorized the use of a compartment for the purpose of transporting in his personal custody certain secret documents of the Navy, which sum has been disallowed by the General Accounting Office in the accounts of Lieutenant Commander Bailey, Supply Corps.

BENJAMIN DUTTON, JR., AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 1632) for the relief of Capt. Benjamin Dutton, Jr., Capt. C. H. J. Keppler, Commander Leo H. Thebaud, and Lt. Comdr. Gordon S. Bower, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Capt. Benjamin Dutton, Jr., United States Navy, in the amount of $401.43; Capt. C. H. J. Keppler, United States Navy, in the amount of $1,078.76; Commander Leo H. Thebaud, United States Navy, in the amount of $540.08; and Lt. Comdr. Gordon S. Bower, Supply Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $150.74, which sums represent payments of exchange relief made by these four officers to Capt. Joseph J. A. McMullin, Medical Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $1,119.61; to Lt. Comdr. Lloyd E. Clifford, United States Navy, in the amount of $540.08; and to Lt. (Jr. Gr.) F. P. Kreuz, Medical Corps, United States Navy, in the amount of $511.32, and disallowed in their accounts by the Comptroller General of the United States.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 64) defining the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the act approved April 25, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 137), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution go over for the present. I wish to have an opportunity to study it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PROPERTY DAMAGE BY HIGH WATERS IN BLACKFOOT RESERVOIR

The bill (S. 436) for the relief of the owners of property damaged by high waters in the Blackfoot Reservoir was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause an investigation to be made promptly of all pending damage claims on the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, covering damages to crops, real estate, or any other legal or beneficial interest in real or personal property, with a view to determining the validity and proper amounts thereof: Provided, That upon completion of such investigation a report shall be submitted to Congress, together with recommendations.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to effect the purpose of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RAILROAD LANDS IN ARIZONA, NEW MEXICO, AND CALIFORNIA

The bill (S. 323) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California", approved March 4, 1913, as extended by the act of April 11, 1916, June 30, 1919, and March 10, 1928, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or California", approved March 4, 1913, as extended by the acts of April 11, 1916, June 30, 1919, and March 10, 1928, are extended for a period of 3 years from the date of the enactment of this act.

SAC AND FOX INDIANS, OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 1721) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to reimburse the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma for the amount of tribal funds expended for general administrative purposes of the Indian Service. The amount finally to be appropriated, as certified to the Secretary of the Interior by the Comptroller General of the United States, shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Sac and Fox Indians of Oklahoma as a trust fund to draw interest in accordance with existing law and shall be available for expenditure in such manner as Congress may direct.

PAYMENT OF ATTORNEYS' FEES FROM OSAGE TRIBAL FUNDS

The bill (S. 1831) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That pursuant to the terms of a contract approved by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior July 3, 1933, between Fred Lookout, principal chief of the Osage Tribe of Indians, and certain attorneys therein named, and modified pursuant to Osage Council Resolution No. 21, dated June 24, 1935, there is hereby authorized to be expended from any funds collected as a result of any suit or suits brought under said contract such sum as may be necessary to pay the fee provided for the attorneys so employed, not to exceed 12½ percent of such amount as may be recovered and collected for the Osage Tribe, as provided in the terms of the contract.

PRODUCTION TAX ON LEAD AND ZINC

The bill (S. 1901) to amend the last two provisos, section 26, act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last two provisos in section 26 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows: "That the State of Oklahoma is authorized, from and after the passage of this amendment, to levy and collect a gross production tax upon all lead and zinc produced on said lands in an amount not to exceed the present rate of three-fourths of 1 percent on the gross value thereof. In accordance with the uniform policy of the United States Government to hold the lands of the Quapaw Indians while restricted and the income therefrom free from State taxation of whatsoever nature, except as said immunity is expressly waived, and, in pursuance of said fixed policy, it is herein expressly provided that the waiver of tax immunity herein provided shall be in lieu of all other State taxes of whatsoever nature on said restricted lands or the income therefrom, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid out of the individual Indian funds held under his supervision, belonging to the Indian owner of the land, the gross production tax so assessed against the royalty interest of the respective Indian owner in an amount not to exceed the rate hereinabove set forth: Provided, however, That such tax shall not become a lien or charge of any kind or character against the land or other property of said Indian owner."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1621) to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the bill is of sufficient importance to require explanation and discussion. I ask that it go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BAKER-WHITELEY COAL CO.

The bill (H. R. 1088) for the relief of the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to extend to the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co., of Baltimore, Md., the provisions and benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide relief to Government contractors whose costs of performance were increased as a result of compliance with the act approved June 16, 1933, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1934, with respect to its contract no. Tpr-40, entered into on August 10, 1933, for the furnishing of coal to the Government fuel yards at Washington, D. C., to the same extent and in the same manner as if said contract had been entered into prior to August 10, 1933.

E. C. WILLIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3630) for the relief of E. C. Willis, father of the late Charles R. Willis, a minor, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to E. C. Willis, father of the late Charles R. Willis, a minor, the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for fatal injuries suffered by the said Charles R. Willis as a result of a Government-owned truck operated by an employee of the Civilian Conservation Corps striking an automobile operated by the said Charles R. Willis near Sikes, La., November 18, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CLARK F. POTTS AND CHARLES H. BARKER

The bill (H. R. 1094) for the relief of Clark F. Potts and Charles H. Barker was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clark F. Potts, chief boatswain's mate (L), United States Coast Guard, the sum of $150.26, and to Charles H. Barker, surfman, United States Coast Guard, the sum of $125.73, in all $275.99, in full settlement of their claims against the United States for loss or destruction of, or damage to, personal property and effects as a result of the fire which occurred at the Big Sandy Coast Guard Station, Woodville, N. Y., on November 3, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

COINS IN COMMEMORATION OF BATTLE OF ANTIETAM

The bill (S. 102) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from personal contact with the Treasury Department I am not certain that the plan proposed by the bill is altogether in conformity to their regulations. Such measures sometimes present elements of discrimination. I should like to have an explanation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress a similar bill, treating with this general subject matter, passed both the House and the Senate. Unfortunately the House bill contained an appropriation of $25,000, while the Senate bill contained a provision for $45,000. Although an effort was made by amendment to reconcile the difference in the two bills, in the last days of the session the matter became involved in a legislative jam and it was found afterward that two different bills had passed rather than the same bill. Accordingly the President had no option except to veto the bills. The bill now pending corrects that situation and reaffirms the action taken by both branches at the last session of Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not understand what the Senator said because of the confusion in the Chamber. Recently by chance I read a letter from the Treasury Department to the effect that the Department is discouraging bills of this character and suggesting that in the future commemorative articles should take the form of tokens. If we are going to have tokens, let us have tokens. I do not favor both tokens and coins. I want everyone treated alike in the way of legislation of this character, and I shall endeavor to see to it that we have either one or the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator the particular basis of this bill. Similar bills passed both Houses at the last session of Congress. Unfortunately the Committee on Banking and Currency amended the bill in the Senate increasing the amount, and although it was supposed the amendment was concurred in in the House of Representatives it was later learned that the same bill had not passed both Houses, and the President therefore had to veto the bills because of that clerical imperfection. This bill, therefore, is not properly in the status of a "this session" bill, because both Houses passed a similar bill at the last session. I am advised the administration and the Secretary of the Treasury, by virtue of the fact that only because of a clerical error it failed in the last session, are not interposing any objection to the enactment of the pending bill at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Maryland, and also to the Senator from Oregon, that this matter was thoroughly discussed by the Banking and Currency Committee. Various kinds of bills are now pending before that committee to strike off 50-cent coins in commemoration of the celebration of every sort of conceivable event that has transpired almost since the beginning of the human race—to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of various men, of the founding of various towns, and so forth, and so forth. The committee has undertaken to formulate a definite policy with respect to all such measures. It made an exception to this bill because of the circumstances to which the Senator from Maryland has referred.

A similar bill passed both Houses at the last session and would have been the law now except for a technical jam into which it unfortunately fell, as explained by the Senator from Maryland. The Committee on Banking and Currency is devoting itself to a study of this matter through one of its subcommittees, to see if some uniform method can be worked out by which recognition may be accorded to certain classes of events by the coinage of coins or tokens.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Has it been the practice to mint coins to commemorate battles of the Civil War?

Mr. TYDINGS. It has been. I have not the information at hand, but the policy contained in this bill was the policy of the last Congress when a similar bill passed both branches. Had it not been for a clerical imperfection in the bill then passed, it would now be the law. That is the reason why the Committee on Banking and Currency permitted it to be reported at the present session, notwithstanding it may be without the committee rule. It is simply to provide something which we thought had been provided at the last session.

Mr. BORAH. What I desire to ask is, What is the idea in commemorating battles of the Civil War?

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the first policy of that kind was adopted in connection with the Battle of Gettysburg. It so happens that at the Battle of Antietam there were more men killed, for the length of time they were engaged in battle, than in any other battle of the Civil War.

Mr. BORAH. It is true it was one of the great battles; but my question is, Why commemorate at this time the struggle between the North and the South? What good to the country comes from such a policy?

Mr. TYDINGS. By the issuance of coins it is possible to provide the money without an appropriation from the Federal Government to commemorate the anniversary of this battle. A large committee has been appointed by the President on behalf of the United States, and another committee has been appointed from the State of Maryland as well as one from Vermont and one from a State in the South. This year it is planned to have a very large celebration at the site of the Battle of Antietam.

This being a sort of national event, we did not want to come to Congress or to the Legislature and ask for an appropriation; so the policy adopted in the case of the Battle of Gettysburg was applied to this battle, because that was the precedent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further there?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the money made from the sale of the coins is derived by reason of the fact that they sell at a premium.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. The profit from the sale of the coins will be used to bring about a celebration worthy of the name of the great battle that occurred at Antietam. The transaction involves no cost to the Government. The committee furnish the silver, pay 50 cents for the coins, and sell them for whatever they can get. That is true of all coins minted under similar circumstances.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, have any similar coins been used to commemorate the Battle of Bull Run? [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know as to that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to be an obstructionist in this matter. I simply ask for fair treatment.

Last year, as I recall, a very large celebration was held at Walla Walla, Wash., to commemorate the final settlement of the so-called Inland Empire, having much to do with an early pioneer, Reverend Mr. Whitman. In the case of that celebration the Committee on the Library reported adversely on a similar bill. It was not my own bill, but was introduced by my colleague from Washington. That must have occurred about the time the bill now under discussion was favorably reported. I think a bill is now pending seeking the issuance of a coin commemorative of a very great event in the Northwest after the full development of what is called the Bonneville project on the Columbia River. I understand that, according to the report which has been made, only tokens are to be coined in that case. So we are to have tokens in the Bonneville case and coins in the case of Antietam.

I am for the Antietam coins, but I am for the others also. I think I may get quicker action and more thorough consideration if I take advantage of my rights and ask that the bill go over today.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I appreciate the position of the Senator from Oregon, and I think he has been very fair in asking that the bill go over until a general policy can be formulated. I should like to point out to him, however, that the committees having charge of the celebration are already in being; the celebration is expected to take place in the not far-distant future; and it would be kinder to kill the bill and notify the persons concerned of that fact than to have them go ahead in the hope that the bill may be passed eventually and then not have it pass.

Mr. McNARY. No; I shall not kill the bill. I do not practice ugly things. I promise to make my decision within a few days.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is all right.

Mr. McNARY. I think I shall have no objection; but, inasmuch as the Senator from Kentucky said the committee are formulating a policy, I wish to ascertain whether it is going to be a policy in favor of the issuance of coins or the issuance of tokens.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, I recall that there is before the committee a bill to provide for the issuance of a coin in connection with the celebration of the completion of the Bonneville Dam. The dam has not as yet been finished. That is merely one of probably a dozen bills that are before the committee. There has been no report, either favorable or adverse, upon it; and I do not see just what connection Bonneville has with Antietam.

Mr. McNARY. It has not any connection, except in principle and in policy. I repeat, I wish to know what the policy of the committee is to be before this or any other bill of the kind goes through.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will be impossible for the committee to report to the Senator within the next few days what its policy is to be.

Mr. McNARY. Then it will be impossible during that time to pass any legislation on the subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to help the Senator secure the passage of the bill to which he refers; but I should like to point out to him that I think the bill now under discussion is entitled to a little more consideration than a bill originally introduced at the present session of Congress. I remind the Senator that a bill similar to this one passed both branches of Congress at the last session. If it were a new matter coming in at this session, I should think one policy ought to cover all; but, in view of the fact that the bill failed in the last Congress only because of a clerical imperfection, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill at this time, but will look at it as a measure to clear up imperfections of the last session rather than a new matter at this session. Therefore I hope his good nature will cause him to let the bill go through at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recognize the equities involved in the statement of the able Senator from Maryland, but for the present I must ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

CHARLES M. PERKINS

The bill (H. R. 1089) for the relief of Charles M. Perkins was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Charles M. Perkins, former postmaster at Seattle, Wash., with the sum of $14,987.66, representing the amount of postal funds lost in the robbery of said post office on December 23, 1931, and now charged to the account of the former postmaster.

SEC. 2. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed further to credit the account of Charles M. Perkins, former postmaster at Seattle, Wash., with the sum of $1,100, representing the amount of postal funds embezzled by Edgar A. Chitwood, former assistant postal cashier of said post office, between June 6, and June 10, 1932, and now charged to the account of the former postmaster.

CAPT. J. H. MERRIAM, U. S. N.

The bill (H. R. 1091) for the relief of Capt. J. H. Merriam, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Capt. J. H. Merriam, Supply Corps, United States Navy, with the sum of $734.42, representing payments made by him to Thomas Cook & Son, Ltd., of Shanghai, China, for the cost of transportation furnished Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Malcolm A. Hufty, United States Navy, and Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Lewis R. Miller, United States Navy, in accordance with orders issued to these two officers by the commander in chief, United States Asiatic Fleet, which payments were disallowed by the Comptroller General.

GRACE M. MOORE, DECEASED

The bill (S. 590) for the relief of the estate of Grace M. Moore, deceased, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States, in the settlement and adjustment of accounts and claims for services rendered at third- and fourth-class post offices, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Grace M. Moore, deceased, former postmaster at Fostoria, Mich., with $750.92, being the amount paid from postal receipts to Andy A. Moore for his voluntary services as acting postmaster at that office from January 5, 1933, to October 12, 1933, inclusive.

WARREN J. FOX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1590) for the relief of Warren J. Fox, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $107.75 to Warren J. Fox, of Amity, Ark., in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for reimbursement for time, money, and effort expended by him in improving the tract of land (the north one-half of the southwest quarter of section 5, township 6 south, range 24 west, fifth principal meridian of Arkansas) which he was erroneously allowed by the General Land Office to enter as a homestead when it was in fact already privately owned: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. D. HAMPTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 420) for the relief of A. D. Hampton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated, to A. D. Hampton, father of Adam D. Hampton, Jr., the sum of $5,000 for personal injuries resulting in death sustained by the said" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to A. D. Hampton, of Russellville, Ark., the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of his minor son", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to A. D. Hampton, of Russellville, Ark., the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of his minor son, Adam D. Hampton, Jr., when the car in which he was a passenger was struck by a Government vehicle operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, while said vehicle was on official business, on October 7, 1934, on United States Highway No. 64, near London, Ark.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE TO ALBERT GALLATIN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose to erect a statue of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury from May 14, 1801, to February 9, 1814, opposite the west entrance of the Treasury Building in the city of Washington within the grounds occupied by such building, or at such other place within such grounds as may be designated by the Fine Arts Commission, subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, the model of the statue so to be erected and the pedestal thereof to be first approved by the said Commission and by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be presented by such association to the people of the United States.

SEC. 2. That for the preparation of the site and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue, under the direction of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

CROP INSURANCE

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1397, the crop-insurance bill, in order to make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am wholeheartedly in favor of the philosophy of a crop-insurance program, and hope it may be in some wise plan. Some years ago, as chairman of a special committee, I made an investigation which I think was the original investigation on the subject, and which I shall discuss next week at some favorable opportunity. I have no objection to the bill's being made the unfinished business, provided the Senate does not enter upon its consideration before Monday. I say that for the reason that a few moments ago I ascertained that the hearings of the subcommittee have not as yet been printed. This matter was discussed and hearings were held by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Day before yesterday the subcommittee reported to the general committee, which did not hold hearings. I have no objection to that. Day before yesterday the bill was favorably reported to the Senate and printed. The hearings have not been printed.

The subject is a new one and an important one, and the Members of the Senate ought to have the record available during the consideration of the measure. Therefore, I shall object to proceeding with any matters involved in the measure today, though I have no objection to its being made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the parliamentary situation is that a motion has been made to proceed to the consideration of the bill, which is not subject to debate.

Mr. McNARY. I shall indicate my attitude in a few moments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator that no effort should be made to dispose of the bill until next week, for many reasons. When the bill is made the unfinished business, however, I wonder if the Senator from Oregon would have any objection to an explanation by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] of the provisions of the bill, with the understanding that no further proceedings shall be had on the bill until Monday.

Mr. McNARY. That would entirely conform to my wishes and views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1397) to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. POPE obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator. I realize that he gave notice a few days ago that he would speak today. I desire to proceed with my explanation of the bill at some time today.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the notice which was given by the Senator from Oklahoma, I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he withhold his discussion in order that the Senator from Oklahoma may now have an opportunity to present his views.

Mr. POPE. That is entirely agreeable to me.

NATIONAL RULE FOR NATIONAL COMMERCE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there has just come from the Government Printing Office the first part of the hearings on Senate bill 10, which was introduced on January 6 last and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill to establish a national rule for the government of corporations engaged in national commerce. I am asking that a copy of these hearings be placed upon the desk of every Senator, because the subject matter of the measure is of such paramount importance that I venture to express the hope that all Members of the Senate may find the opportunity of at least glancing through the hearings.

Subsequent volumes will be ready for attention in the very near future. The bill deals with the most important economic subject now before the people of the United States. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said a few days ago, there is not a monopoly in the United States that is not operating by virtue either of a grant by some State government or by virtue of the failure of the National Government to assert its power.

The strikes which threaten to paralyze the commerce of the Nation and to destroy the economic recovery we have been enjoying have been declared chiefly in the plants of huge interstate corporations which derive their existence from State charters.

A sit-down strike here or a sit-down strike there may be terminated by conference and agreement, but there can be no assurance of permanent economic peace unless we adopt a sound national policy.

Our trouble arises from the fact that, although it has full power, the Congress of the United States has not seen fit to exercise it to protect the public interest. State authority is inadequate to the task, because the business with which we are concerned overflows State lines.

We shall not even begin to solve this question until we recognize the very simple fact that a corporation is a creature of law. If the people, acting through Congress, will only write the charters of these great corporations which carry on the business of the country, thereby limiting and defining the powers which the corporations may exercise, we shall lay the foundation for permanent settlement. Until the Congress does enact such a law we shall not escape the evils of the present situation.

The measure which I have introduced to provide a Federal system of charters and licenses for corporations engaged in commerce among the States, and a similar measure which has been introduced by the Senator from Idaho, furnish, I believe, the formula upon which public authority may be satisfactorily asserted in the present economic crisis.

The volume to which I am now calling attention contains information which I am confident is of importance to the Members of this body.

REGULATION AND STABILIZATION OF DOLLAR VALUE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, yesterday I announced that immediately upon the conclusion of the morning hour today I would ask permission to introduce a bill and then to make some explanation of the reasons for introducing the bill. At this time I ask permission to introduce a bill having for its title "A bill for the regulation and stabilization of agricultural and commodity prices through the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, pursuant to the power conferred on the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask permission that a copy of the bill just introduced be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1990) for the regulation and stabilization of agricultural and commodity prices through the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, pursuant to the power conferred on the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. Monetary policy: Pursuant to the authority conferred in paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, wherein the Congress is authorized to coin money and to regulate the value thereof, the Congress does hereby declare that the monetary policy of the United States shall embrace, among others, the following principles:

(a) To coin and keep constantly available an adequate supply of sound money;

(b) To regulate the value of the dollar so as to best serve the domestic economy of the people; and

(c) To place and keep in circulation a sufficient amount of properly valued currency to adequately supply the demands and needs of the people of the United States: Provided, That the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar shall be a fixed policy of the Government of the United States, and, in order to promote and give stability to agriculture, industry, commerce, manufacturing, mining, forestry, fisheries, employment, and other human activities, the regional Federal Reserve banks and the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, under the supervision and direction of the Monetary Authority, shall cooperate in carrying out the policy and principles herein set forth and as provided in this act.

SEC. 2. Creation of monetary authority: The Congress, in order to vitalize the provisions of the Constitution and to carry into effect the monetary principles and financial policy set forth in section 1 hereof deems it necessary to, and does hereby, create the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System into a governmental agency to be designated as a Monetary Authority (herein referred to as the Monetary Authority) for the express purpose of regulating the value of money: Provided, That the constitutional clause—regulating the value of money—shall be construed to mean adjusting the value of the dollar to that point which will serve the best interests and best promote the domestic economy of the people of the United States: And provided further, That said clause—regulating the value of money—shall be construed to mean not only the adjustment of the value of money but also the stabilization of such regulated and adjusted value as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. Dollar-value control items: The Monetary Authority, in regulating, adjusting, and stabilizing the value of the dollar as herein provided, shall take into account and give consideration to, among other things, the following:

(a) The amount of the annual total tax bills necessary to support the several units of Government;

(b) The amount of the annual total public and private interest items;

(c) The amount of consolidated or massed debts, public and private, owned by the several units of Government, corporations, and the people jointly and severally;

(d) The general price level and the relation of such price level to the tax, interest, and debt burdens resting upon the people.

(e) The interests of taxpayers, mortgagors, debtors, producers, consumers, wage earners, holders of fixed investments, and those who live on fixed incomes;

(f) The relation of the general domestic price level to the general world price level; and

(g) The relation of the value of the dollar to the values of the monetary units of the other governments of the world.

SEC. 4. Standards and limitations: Immediately upon the passage and approval of this act, the said monetary authority shall assume and exercise the powers herein delegated and conferred according to the standards and within the limitations herein set forth: Provided, That the said monetary authority is hereby authorized and directed to proceed without delay and as provided herein to so regulate the value of the dollar as to raise the general price level to a point equal to the average of the general price level for the year 1926, as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics: And provided further, That, pending the regulation and adjustment of the value of the dollar to the 1926 level as provided herein, the said monetary authority shall proceed to investigate, consider, and determine the proper value of the dollar as provided in section 3 of this act: And provided further, That the adjusted, regulated, and stabilized value of the dollar, as may be determined by the said monetary authority, as provided herein, shall not be at a point of value in excess of the average value of the dollar during the year of 1926, as shown by the said Bureau of Labor Statistics.

SEC. 5. Equilibrium price level: The monetary authority, in carrying into effect the principle of monetary policy stated in (b) of section 1 hereof, and after full consideration of said items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g) in section 3 hereof, shall regulate and adjust the value of the dollar, as provided herein, so as to effectuate, produce, and bring about as nearly as possible, an equilibrium price level designed to serve the best interests of the people of the United States as mentioned in (e) of section 3 hereof.

SEC. 6. Stabilization: Immediately upon the completion of the regulation and adjustment of the value of the dollar, as provided herein, the monetary authority shall proceed to stabilize and thereafter keep stable as nearly as possible, the value of said dollar at the point of value so determined as provided in section 4 hereof: Provided, That in the regulation, adjustment, and stabilization of such value at such point, the said monetary authority shall have all the authority herein delegated and conferred and, in addition, shall have all the authority heretofore delegated and conferred upon the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

SEC. 7. Specific powers: In order to carry into effect the principles of the monetary policy set forth in this act, the monetary authority, acting under the powers conferred herein and acting as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall have the following specific powers:

(a) Full and complete control over reserve requirements of member banks of the Federal Reserve System;

(b) Full and complete control over the discount rate at each of the regional Federal Reserve banks;

(c) Full and complete control over the eligibility of all kinds and classes of collateral to be accepted by the several regional Federal Reserve banks, their branches, and other member banks of the Federal Reserve System; and

(d) Full and complete control over all open-market operations in all regional Federal Reserve banks, both in the buying and selling of securities at home and abroad.

SEC. 8. Monetary authority statistics: For the purpose of assisting in the regulation, adjustment, and stabilization of the value of the dollar the said monetary authority is hereby authorized to investigate, prepare and officially adopt, subject to the approval by the Congress, a system of statistics to be known as the monetary authority statistics: Provided, That in preparing such statistics the monetary authority shall have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for such statistics, data, and information as may be desired and requisitioned: And provided further, That pending the adoption of such monetary authority statistics the said monetary authority shall make use of, and be governed by, the Bureau of Labor Statistics as provided herein.

SEC. 9. Officers and employees: In carrying into effect the provisions of this act the monetary authority shall have power to appoint officers and employees, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers and employees. The said monetary authority is hereby empowered to adopt and promulgate such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. Interpretation of delegated powers: The powers conferred upon and delegated to the Monetary Authority herein created shall be construed to be a delegation of legislative powers conferred upon the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution to regulate the value of money: Provided, That such powers so delegated shall be further interpreted and construed to be a delegation of such legislative powers to a governmental agency to carry out a fixed policy of the Congress according to definite and fixed standards, and within definite and fixed limitations, as set forth herein and as provided by this act.

SEC. 11. All provisions of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, with amendments, including title 3 of Public, No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, and amendments thereof, and other public acts of the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses, when not in conflict and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be, and are hereby, continued in full force and effect.

SEC. 12. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, annually such sums as may be necessary for carrying into effect the purposes of this act.

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 14. The Monetary Authority shall report to the Congress annually such data, report of activities, and statement of policy as may be deemed in the public interest, and shall make recommendations to the Congress at its discretion relative to amendments of this act.

SEC. 15. The short title of this act shall be the "Monetary Authority Act."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have chosen an hour when the Senate would be least inconvenienced, and the time I shall consume will be devoted to establishing the background for the suggested legislation.

Conditions are somewhat unsettled in the United States and throughout the world. With a nation of 130,000,000 people, the strongest and the richest and the most influential nation on the earth, it is presumed that conditions from time to time might be unsettled.

It is my judgment that the unsettlement and the trouble we are now having throughout the United States, and largely throughout the world, are due, either directly or indirectly, to the value of the monetary unit in this country, and likewise the value of the monetary units in the other nations of the world. Take, for example, the sit-down strikes occurring throughout this country. What is the reason for those strikes? A few years ago millions of the wage earners of this country were out of employment. Now many millions of those formerly unemployed have secured employment. Formerly prices were very low and living was very cheap. Because the dollar has become cheaper, prices have risen. When prices rise the cost of living goes up, and while many of the men who were formerly unemployed now have jobs, they find that their living costs are going up but wages are still "sitting down", and these "sit-down" wages refuse to rise. To me the explanation is simple. The wage earners are sitting down with the wages, and they are refusing to rise until wages are willing to rise with them.

Let me call attention very briefly to a few news stories appearing in the press of today and perhaps of yesterday. I have before me a copy of the American Banker, the issue of only 1 or 2 days ago. The editorial in this publication is under the following caption:

Gold clause—no more. Responsibility now rests with Federal authorities for price level.

The heading of this editorial merely states that the price level of today is the result of the management of Federal authorities. From this editorial we may deduce the conclusion that the price level of tomorrow and the price level of next week and of next year will be that which may be dictated and brought about by the Federal authorities representing the Government of the United States.

I call attention to other news stories. For instance, I find in the public press of a recent date an article under very heavy headlines, which read as follows:

Rising prices new worry of administration. Advance in commodities seen as peril like that of 1929.

In the story is an attempt to broadcast a scare that prices are about to run away with themselves, and that because prices are about to run away with themselves conditions in the United States are likely to get out of control.

Another news story I find under this heading:

Inflation—How near is it?

Another news story appears under the following caption:

Eccles points boldly to danger. Federal Reserve head warns of price and wage inflation.

I find another news story in another publication under the following heading:

Rising price levels threat to recovery? A boom in prices. Effect on living costs. Aims of the administration. Money controls.

Another news story appears quoting the chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate to the effect that prices are not now too high.

I find another news story under this heading:

Rising commodity prices pinch District of Columbia wage earners' stable pay. But while his dollar has fallen in purchasing power, it is still far above 1929.

If this story is to be credited, and if it is based upon the facts, while the dollar has fallen in value, causing prices to rise, yet prices have not risen to the point where they were in 1929, and in 1929 prices were not as high as they were in 1926. So we must first reach the 1929 level before we can reach the 1926 level. The 1926 level has been the goal of many persons who have been interested in the management and control of the value of the dollar.

Another news story I find under the heading:

Lack of policy.

The article states that the Congress has no policy, that the Federal Reserve Board has no policy, and that the administration has no policy. In other words, no one seems to know to what point the dollar is to be cheapened before the cheapening process will stop.

Mr. President, I have had prepared a graph, or chart, which is suspended on the wall of the Senate. Across the center of the chart will be found a straight, heavy black line designated by the figure "100."

I call attention to the second line, a very crooked black line which is designated as "dollar value." It will be noted that the black, crooked line is sometimes above the center or medial line and sometimes below. That is the line which represents the rise and fall in the value of the dollar from 1800 to the present hour. This line is about as straight as a lightning flash. We have heard it said that we now have a rubber dollar. During these 137 years we have had a dollar as unstable as that line is crooked. If we have ever had a rubber dollar, a bouncing dollar, we have had it from 1800 up to the present time, save through two short periods of emergency, one from 1800 to 1810, when the dollar value was rather stable, the other from 1921 to 1928, when again the dollar value was rather stable.

We have a system for measuring values, including the value of the dollar. This system is a set of statistics and is compiled by what is known as the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This system embraces 784 separate items or commodities and is sometimes designated as the wholesale price list.

It is now generally admitted that the dollar value controls prices and that prices control income and prosperity; hence, at all times the price of any given item or commodity embraced within the 784 items making up such index is controlled by the value of the dollar. The value of the dollar, as measured by commodities, is controlled by various elements, such elements including the size or the weight of the gold content of the dollar, the amount of the dollars or units in circulation, the amount of credit or deposit money in circulation, and the velocity with which such dollars circulate.

Under the formula just stated, we find that during the past 137 years the value of the dollar has bounced up and down something like the bouncing of a rubber ball. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the dollar had the value or purchasing power of 89 cents in the year 1800. From 1800 to 1810 the dollar value was rather uniform, and when the dollar value is uniform the price level is likewise uniform.

From 1810 to 1820 we had the national disturbance known as the War of 1812. During that period money became plentiful, and thereby cheaper; hence, commodity prices rose accordingly.

About 1820 the dollar value started upon an upward, irregular course, reaching 152 cents in 1830, dropping to 119 cents in 1837, going up to 160 cents in 1850, and to 164 cents in 1860. As the value of the dollar during the years from 1820 to 1860 remained above the medial line of 100, we find that the value of commodities remained uniformly below the 100 medial line.

In 1860, when the disturbance between the States started to develop, the dollar value began to fall, and as the dollar went down the purchasing power or commodity price went up, until in 1865 the dollar had a value of 60 cents, and commodity prices had a correspondingly high value of 132 cents. In other words, about 1865, when we had no gold or silver in circulation, but only greenbacks, because of the amount of greenbacks in circulation and because the greenbacks were not at that time redeemable in either gold or silver, the dollar value fell to 60 cents as measured by this commodity index; and when the dollar value fell, commodity prices rose accordingly.

In 1865 the dollar again started on an upward, irregular course, until in 1878 the dollar had a buying or purchasing power of 162 cents, and in 1896 the dollar reached its greatest value, as measured in terms of commodities, and, according to the graph and the Bureau of Labor Statistics, such dollar had a value or buying power of 215 cents. It was at this period that the general price level was at its lowest period in history.

In passing I may call attention to the fact that it was this high-valued dollar and correspondingly low price level which brought on the campaign for cheaper money and higher prices as led by William Jennings Bryan in the so-called "free silver" campaign of 1896.

That is in the period, as shown on the graph, from 1890 to 1900. At that time the dollar, in measure of commodities, was worth 215 cents; and because the value of the dollar was so high, and commodity prices were so low, Bryan led a party in an effort to secure a cheaper dollar, and likewise higher prices for the things people produced. That, as I have said, is known as the Bryan campaign for free silver in 1896.

In 1897, because of the discovery of vast deposits of gold, money became more plentiful, and thereby the value of the dollar again began to fall; and as the dollar fell, we find commodity prices starting upon an upward trend.

In 1914 the World War brought about another flurry in the value not only of the dollar but of the other currencies of the world; and as the dollar started on its downward trend in 1914 we find the wholesale price level starting upward again.

In 1920 the dollar had a buying or purchasing power of 64 cents; and at that time commodities, as shown by the price level, had purchasing power to the value, on the average, of 154 cents. In the national campaign of 1920 the question of the price level developed into a national issue. The Democrats had been in power for 8 years, hence the high prices of that year were blamed upon the Democratic Party.

The Republican National Convention met in Chicago on June 8 to 12, 1920, and in the platform declaration of such convention we find the following planks:

Under the heading The High Cost of Living we find the following language:

The prime cause of the high cost of living has been, first and foremost, a 50-percent depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar, due to a gross expansion of our currency and credit.

Also, in the same platform declaration, the Republican Party made the following promise to the people of the country. I quote:

We pledge ourselves to earnest and consistent attack upon the high cost of living by rigorous avoidance of further inflation in our Government borrowing, by courageous and intelligent deflation of overexpanded credit and currency.

The Republican Party was successful in the November election of 1920, and immediately a program of deflation, as promised in the Republican platform, was initiated.

Mr. Harding was inaugurated on March 4, 1921, and during the following 18 months the sum of $100,000,000 per month was taken out of circulation, and the money thereby canceled. When Mr. Harding was inaugurated President we had $6,207,000,000 of money in circulation, and on September 1, 1922, 18 months thereafter, such circulation had been reduced to the sum of $4,393,000,000.

During the 18 months from March 4, 1921, the policy of deflation took out of circulation $100,000,000 per month, or $1,800,000,000 in that brief period. That is deflation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Senator please explain what is meant by his expression of vast millions being canceled? I confess not to understand it, and I shall be pleased to have enlightenment from him.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have just stated that when Mr. Harding became President there was in circulation the sum of $6,207,000,000. At that time there were that many gold dollars and silver dollars and paper dollars actually outside the Treasury of the United States.

Some of this money was in bank vaults; some of it was in the tills and safety-deposit boxes of people; some of it was in hiding; some of it was in the cash registers of the merchandising establishments of the Nation; and some of it was in the pockets of the people. But on that date there was in circulation, as we define the term "circulation", the sum of $6,207,000,000.

During the next 18 months there was taken out of circulation $100,000,000 per month. That was done in this manner: The Federal Reserve Board, in obedience to a resolution passed by the Senate, submitted a report to the Senate stating that it proposed to adopt a policy of deflation. In that report the Federal Reserve Board stated that the Board had advised the banks of the country not to be so liberal in making loans in the future as they had been in the past, and that not only should they not be so liberal in making loans as they had been, but they should serve notice on their borrowers that good policy dictated that the borrowers should not borrow in the future, but should begin to pay, should begin to reduce the amount of their loans at the banks.

Pursuant to that policy, and under the influence of the banks upon their customers, the customers and borrowers began to pay. The borrowers from the banks throughout the Nation sold what they had or what they could, raised money, and applied the money on their loans at the several member banks throughout the Nation. As the member banks received the money on their loans the member banks sent this money to the Federal Reserve banks, because the facts show that during these years of activity the member banks, in order to finance the business of their customers, had to borrow vast sums from the Federal Reserve System. So the member banks had loans, or had money borrowed from the Federal Reserve banks. As the member banks collected money they sent it to the Federal Reserve banks and had it applied upon their indebtedness; and that is when the money went out of circulation.

I hope I have in a limited way or in a partial manner answered the question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I appreciate the reply of the able Senator, but I should like to ask him a further question. In using the term, as used a moment ago, that these vast millions were canceled, did my able friend mean, by the word "canceled", the definition he has now given of the retirement of this money?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For the time being, the money went into hiding. It went where it could not be had except through another series of loans by the Federal Reserve System to member banks, so that in turn the member banks could, if they desired, make loans to their customers. When I used the word "canceled", I meant canceled for the time being. The money was not destroyed. The money went to the Federal Reserve banks, went into their vaults, and remained there until some future years when they should see fit to loan it again to member banks. But for the time being, at least, the money was taken out of circulation; it was returned to the several Reserve banks, and remained there until called for again at some future period.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, its uses were canceled.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. The money was not in a place where it could do any work; it was in prison, so to speak.

The platform declaration of the Republican Party in 1920 contained, in condensed form, the economic principles relating to and controlling the value of the dollar. The action of the Republican administration from March 4, 1921, demonstrates the possibility of regulating the value of the dollar and, by such regulation, the control of the general price level of the Nation.

At this point I might call attention to the fluctuation of prices caused by the deliberate deflation of currency and credit by the Republican administration under President Harding. By referring to the graph on the wall—and in order to make the graph understandable I have indicated under each period the name of the President—it will be seen that at this point [indicating] Mr. Harding came upon the scene. That was in 1920. He was elected in November 1920 and was sworn in as President on March 4, 1921. When Mr. Harding was elected President the dollar had a value of 64 cents and commodity prices had an average value of 154 cents. That meant that commodity prices had an unusually high price level. At the same time it meant that the dollar had an unusually low price level. After Mr. Harding became President money was taken out of circulation, and money became scarcer and thereby dearer. The chart or graph shows the zigzag line going upward. From March 4, 1921, to September 1, 1922, the value of the dollar was increased from 64 cents to 100 cents, and as the dollar went up in buying power commodity prices fell. The chart shows that the average price of commodities fell from 154 cents on March 4, 1921, to 100 cents by September 1, 1922.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it the Senator's statement that that was entirely due to the reflex in the volume of currency?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As stated a moment ago, there are different conditions that control the value of money: One is the amount of currency in circulation; another is the amount of credit or deposit money in circulation; and the third is the volume at which all classes of money circulate. But when the Harding administration decided to deflate, as they did, as announced in the Republican platform of 1920, when the party came into power and began to do the things they promised to do everything began to slow down; money went out of circulation; deposit and credit money ceased to expand and began to contract; and, as money went out of circulation and deposit money began to contract, the velocity began to be retarded, and within 3 years, according to my viewpoint, caused the dollar value to go up and commodity prices to fall.

At this point I might call attention briefly to the fluctuation of prices caused by the deflation program of President Harding. When the Republican convention met in June 1920 cotton was selling for 42 cents a pound, and after 18 months of deflation, as promised by the Republican platform, cotton was selling for 22 cents a pound. When the convention met wheat was selling for $2.50 a bushel, and, within 18 months, the price of wheat had dropped below $1 per bushel. The same percentage of reduction was reflected in the several items making up the wholesale price list. In the brief space of 2 years it was conclusively demonstrated that the value of the buying power of the dollar could be changed and regulated by the control of money and credit permitted to be in circulation.

By referring to the graph, it will be noted that the heavy black line, indicating the dollar value of 64 cents in 1920, took an upward trend until in 1922 the dollar value, as measured by commodities, had reached the medial line designated by 100. As the dollar-value line reached the 100 medial line, we find the commodity price level likewise meeting the same 100 medial line.

From 1922 to 1928 the value of the dollar was adjusted, regulated, and stabilized at approximately 100. In 1926, at the middle of this period—that is, the period from 1922 to 1929—we had a stabilized price level and a stabilized dollar; and it is impossible to have a stabilized price level without having a stabilized dollar. In that year—1926—every group of commodities represented in the Bureau of Labor system of statistics showed that the buying power of the dollar was 100, which means, of course, 100 cents.

It is because of the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar at 100 cents in 1926 that that year has been designated as the most satisfactory to consider as the norm or standard. During the period from 1922 to 1928 we had a general era of prosperity. Wage earners were generally employed at fair wages; commodity prices were adjusted to a level which enabled producers to receive the cost of production plus a degree of profit. It was during this period that the national income increased perceptibly; it was during this period that the income of the Treasury derived from taxation was sufficient not only to meet the expenses of the Government but at the same time to reduce the national debt approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

I might also suggest that this temporary regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, and consequently the temporary regulation and stabilization of the value of commodities, was due entirely to the ability and courage of Benjamin Strong, the governor of the Federal Reserve bank located in New York City.

In 1921 Governor Strong, without a mandate from the Congress, obviously exercised the power conferred upon the Federal Reserve Board, and thereby, through monetary and credit control, adjusted the value of the dollar to a hundred cents and kept such adjusted value stabilized during the remainder of his brief lifetime. In 1928 Mr. Strong passed on, and at the moment of his death, there being no one left who assumed to carry out his policy, the dollar began to seek its former haunts; it started upward; in a very few years the dollar had advanced from 100 cents to 167 cents; and as the value of the dollar rose the price of commodities fell.

It cannot be doubted, Mr. President, that the high-valued dollar in 1932, as shown by this graph, it being then 167 cents, was responsible for the defeat of President Hoover and the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

This point [indicating] shown on the graph is supposed to represent March 4, 1933, with the dollar at its highest value in recent years, such value being 167 cents. At that time, when the dollar was at its highest value, commodity prices were as low as they were back in 1896. So immediately upon the election of President Roosevelt the power of the administration was directed to the cheapening of the dollar and the consequent raising of commodity prices. As hereinbefore stated, the value of the dollar has fallen from 167 cents in February 1933 to a value, or purchasing power, of 114 cents on March 13, 1937. As the value of the dollar has fallen commodity prices have increased.

By glancing at the graph it will be noted that the value of the dollar started to fall on March 4, 1933, and it has been on a downward trend from that day until this. The dollar has lost value from 167 cents in 1933 until today its value is 114 cents. So the dollar value now, after 4 years of effort, is still higher than it was in 1929, and much higher than it was in 1926. The graphic trend shows that commodity prices have not reached the level of 1926.

The bill which I am proposing, and which I have introduced this afternoon, provides a plan for the still further cheapening of the dollar until the value or buying power of the dollar shall be reduced to the 1926 level of 100 cents.

If the dollar value is still further reduced to the level mentioned, we will find the price level of commodities restabilized again at approximately the 1926 level.

It is my contention that the value or purchasing power of the dollar can be absolutely and safely controlled, and that, through regulation and control of the value of the dollar, we can likewise absolutely and safely regulate and stabilize the price level for commodities.

From the point where the dollar value of 114 cents is shown on the graph it is my contention and my purpose and my plan, so far as I can effectuate them, to see that the dollar is still further cheapened until this black line [indicating] shall reach the medial line of 100, which will bring the dollar value down to 100 cents in terms of commodities. If and when this black line [indicating] is brought down to this 100 medial line [indicating] it will be found that the red or commodity line will be raised to the same line, exactly as it was from the period of 1922 to 1928, and as it was away back from 1800 to 1810. The fluctuation from 1800 to 1810 was greater than the fluctuation from 1922 to 1929.

Under Governor Strong the dollar varied only as follows: He brought the dollar to a hundred cents; it then fluctuated down to 97 cents; then up to a hundred cents; then to 101 cents; then up to 103 cents; then down to 96 cents; then up to 104 cents, a fluctuation above or below the line of 3 or 4 cents a year.

I do not hope to have the medial line from this time henceforth as straight as an arrow. That is too much to be expected or too much to be hoped for. But if Governor Strong, without a mandate from Congress and without the powers that may be conferred by congressional enactment, could adjust and regulate the value of the dollar from 64 cents to 100 cents and thereafter keep such value regulated and stabilized at approximately 100 cents for a period of almost a decade, then I contend that with a mandate from Congress and with additional powers conferred, an agency of the Government may again adjust and regulate the value of such dollar to 100 cents and thereafter keep such regulated value stabilized in terms of commodities.

My bill if enacted into law would bring the black line down to meet the medial line on the one hand. If my bill will do what I think it will do, it will bring the red commodity line up to meet the same medial line, and then when the dollar has been adjusted or regulated in value as the Constitution provides, from that time henceforth the dollar will be possible of stabilization, and with the stabilization of the dollar it will be possible, in my opinion, at the same time, to stabilize the value of commodities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Referring to the period which the Senator describes as Governor Strong's era of stabilization, does the Senator think Governor Strong would have done what he says was done during that period if the Government itself had been running at a constant deficit and financing its deficits by borrowing?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would have made it harder for him, I will admit. Is the Senator from Michigan worried about increasing the amount of the national debt and increasing prices?

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am trying to find out is the Senator's philosophy in respect to control, and I am wondering, and asking only for information, whether the factor to which I now allude would not have embarrassed Governor Strong if such had been the situation at that time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No doubt it would have been harder for Governor Strong to do all that he did, but the fact is that he was in charge of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City from 1913. He served as governor of the Federal Reserve bank in New York from 1913 until 1928, but during the war period others had control of finances. The bill was not passed until 1913. It took a good while to get the law in operation. Governor Strong was a young man. No doubt he went along carefully and cautiously.

Governor Strong took charge immediately after the war closed. The war closed in 1918. Governor Strong was then governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City. He began to exercise his power and his genius shortly after the close of the war, but he actually took charge March 4, 1921. From then on what was done, as I believe, was done by Governor Strong through his ability, his foresight, his knowledge of money, and his knowledge of what the country needed and demanded in order to get back on its feet again. I wish to state for the public record that I approve of what Governor Strong did. I am hoping that what he did may be done again. I believe it can be done again.

With reference to the bill which I have introduced, I do not expect it to pass tomorrow. It may never pass. But the question of the regulation of the value of money is now uppermost. I realize that few, perhaps, understand the mechanism of money. It is difficult to get people to listen to one talk about money. Some people seem to think that money is an Einstein proposition. They never did understand it; they never can understand it; they will never try to understand it. But from my viewpoint it is the most important question that confronts the Congress.

The Constitution provides that Congress shall regulate the value of money. That provision has stood in the Constitution for 148 years. During those 148 years the Congress has made no effort or little effort, if any, to regulate the value of money. There was a time when the people thought that a little piece of gold of a fixed weight and fineness was an unvarying measure of value just as the yardstick is an unvarying measure of length. But it has been demonstrated now, and I think admitted by the nations of the world, that gold is not stable in value.

For a long time we had the gold dollar as the basis of our money. We had what is called the single gold standard. That simply meant the currency we had, our checks or money, upon our own motion could be taken to a bank and redeemed in gold. The last word in money was the gold dollar. That is the reason why we said we were on the gold standard.

Many people seem to think that the gold dollar was an unvarying, unchanging, and unchangeable measure of value. Look at the graph which I have placed on the wall of the Senate Chamber. We had the gold dollar for one-hundred-and-thirty-odd years and, as shown by the graph, the value of the gold dollar has bounced up and down, as I said a moment ago, exactly like a rubber ball. As the dollar bounced up and down the prices of commodities likewise bounced up and down. The Congress in all those years has never made a serious effort, so far as I know, to regulate or stabilize the value of our money.

The Constitution provides that the Congress shall have that power. No one else has the power to regulate the value of money. Some have assumed to use some power to do the job. Governor Strong had the power of the Federal Reserve System at his command. He was the head of the largest bank in the Federal Reserve System. That bank had charge of the open-market operations. No doubt he was the best qualified man to advise the Federal Reserve officials as to what they should and should not do.

I have read the book prepared by Dr. Burgess on the Strong plan, and it is my viewpoint that the officials of the Federal Reserve System deferred to Governor Strong and let him outline what should be done. Then the whole Federal Reserve System fell in behind Governor Strong and did what he recommended.

At the present time this power is not centralized. Some power is vested in the Federal Reserve Board. called now the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; some power is vested in the President; and some power is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury. Today there are three boards or three agencies which might assume to control and regulate the value of the dollar, but the Congress has never tried to do this directly. It is obvious, as I shall explain in a few moments, that Congress cannot do this, and I shall give the reasons why.

Mr. President, 4 years ago, when the dollar value was high and prices were low, I introduced in the Senate a bill providing a plan for the cheapening of the dollar and thereby raising prices. The bill was passed by the Congress. The law was held to be constitutional by a 5-to-4 decision of the Supreme Court.

During these 4 years the dollar has been cheapened and prices have been raised. Today the value of the dollar is still falling and, consequently, prices are still rising.

Because of this 4-year trend, the following questions have arisen: How cheap shall the dollar be made, and how high shall prices be raised? Who is able, competent, and qualified to answer such questions?

In all the land there is but one tribunal legally qualified to make reply, and that tribunal is the Congress of the United States. Section 8 of article I of the Constitution confers upon Congress the exclusive power to regulate the value of money. Save the power delegated and conferred upon the President by the act of 4 years ago, no person, board, or department has any mandate to presume to say how cheap the dollar shall be made, or how high prices shall be raised.

The Federal Reserve System, a private banking organization, has power to alter, change, and, to a degree, regulate the value of the dollar, but has no legal mandate from the Congress to act in such capacity.

The President and the Department of the Treasury have power to alter, change, and, likewise, to a degree, regulate the value of our money.

While full and complete power rests in the Congress to adjust and regulate the value of the dollar, no mandate other than the one mentioned has ever been given any person, board, commission, or department of the Government.

Our Government is now almost 150 years of age. The Congress has had full constitutional power to adjust and regulate the value of the dollar during all this time, but has failed to act.

During all these years just what has the Congress done to vitalize this constitutional provision?

When the Constitution was adopted we had practically no monetary system. Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, in 1791 recommended that a mint should be established and that both silver and gold should be used as money.

The Congress in 1792 enacted a law making silver and gold dollars the basic units of currency for the States.

The silver dollar was to contain 371¼ grains of pure silver, and the gold dollar was to contain 24¾ grains of pure gold, and each such weighted dollar was to answer to a dollar in the money of account. From the first the content of pure silver in the dollar has never been changed.

During the administration of Andrew Jackson the weight of the gold dollar was twice reduced.

In 1873 the Congress demonetized silver. In 1900 the Congress, for the first time, made the gold dollar the single standard and basis of our monetary system.

Then, in 1933, the Congress conferred upon the President power still further to reduce the weight of the gold dollar. The power delegated was exercised, and the weight of the gold dollar was reduced from 25.8 grains of gold 0.9 fine to a weight of 15$\frac{5}{21}$ grains of gold 0.9 fine.

Until recently all our money, consisting of currency and subidiary coins, was based upon and redeemable in gold.

Today all dollars outside of the boundaries of the United States are, in effect, based upon gold, and each such dollar is worth exactly what 15$\frac{5}{21}$ grains of gold 0.9 fine are worth in the markets of the world.

Our domestic dollars are neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence the value of such dollars has little, if any, relation to the value of the foreign dollar.

Under present law, rules, and regulations, the United States is on a pseudo-gold standard abroad and on a managed currency at home.

Formerly the public was led to believe that fixing the weight or size of the silver and gold dollar regulated and stabilized the value of such dollar. This was on the principle that a large nugget of silver or gold would be worth more than a smaller nugget of either of such metals.

Both gold and silver, while held to be monetary metals, are now and have always been commodities with values subject to the law of supply and demand.

When the dollar is given a fixed weight in gold, such action stabilizes the value of but the one commodity of gold. If the law of supply and demand operates on the value of gold in the same way that that law operates on the value of other commodities, then it is obvious that the value of the gold dollar fluctuates exactly as the value of other commodities fluctuates.

In 1920 we were on the gold standard, and our basic monetary unit was the gold dollar. In that year 1 bale of cotton would exchange for 10 ounces of gold.

In 1932 1 bale of cotton would exchange for only 1 ounce of gold.

In 1920, 1 ounce of gold would exchange for 8½ bushels of wheat, while in 1932 the same ounce of gold would exchange for 80 bushels of wheat.

In 1920, 1 ounce of gold would exchange for 8 barrels of oil, while in 1933 the same ounce of gold would exchange for 100 barrels of oil.

At the times mentioned the same approximate ratio which obtained between the value of gold and the value of cotton, wheat, and oil also obtained between the value of gold and corn, gold and livestock, and gold and property, real and personal, of every kind and character.

Heretofore we have been taught that the value of gold was stable, and that it was the value of commodities and property that fluctuated in the market places. Since the close of the World War public opinion has crystallized into an axiom that the value of gold fluctuates with the supply and demand therefor. Because of this belief and development practically all nations are today off gold insofar as concerns having their currency tied to and redeemable in a fixed weight of such metal.

For 4 years the American domestic dollar has been a managed dollar. The value of the dollar is exactly what its managers have prescribed and dictated. For 4 years our dollar has lost value constantly.

Today the consumers and creditors complain that the dollar is becoming too cheap and that prices are already too high.

The producers and debtors deny that the dollar is too cheap or that prices are too high.

Thus this ancient issue—consumers against producers, creditors against debtors, and bulls against bears—is to the fore again.

What are the facts?

Consumers and creditors call rising prices inflation, and condemn the policy. Producers and debtors know that falling prices constitute deflation, and that deflation produces panics, depression, and bankruptcy.

As stated, our Government is almost 150 years old. From the beginning these groups have engaged in constant economic warfare.

During our national existence, in all periods save three, the producer and debtor groups, because of high-valued dollars and low prices, have been at a distinct disadvantage.

I am not arguing that the producer and debtor groups should have an advantage; but it must now be obvious to all that these groups, embracing by far the larger percentage of our population, should not—and I prophesy that they will not—continue to feed the few on the fat of the land, and clothe the privileged class in fine raiment, while they themselves, undernourished, scantily clothed and improperly housed, toil and slave on a price level below cost of production, and on wages too low to permit a decent or humane standard of existence.

Mr. President, the monetary system of any government is one of the most important problems with which any such government has to deal.

Our own monetary system is no exception to this rule.

The all-important item in all financial systems, at all times, is the value of the monetary unit.

The value of the dollar controls prices, and prices control income and prosperity.

When money is too plentiful, the dollar is too cheap, prices are too high, and we have inflation.

When money is too scarce, the dollar is too high, prices are too low, and we have depression.

Too cheap money produces inflation and consequent booms, while too scarce money produces deflation and the inevitable depressions and panics.

The Constitution confers upon the Congress the power to regulate the value of the dollar; hence, the power to minimize, if not prevent, both inflation and deflation, and the resultant booms and depressions.

To this date this constitutional power conferred upon the Congress has never been formally or legally vitalized.

During most of the life of our Nation the dollar has been either a fixed quantity of gold or silver of a certain degree of fineness and minted into coins forming the basis of our monetary system, or paper currency based upon and presumably redeemable in such monetary metals.

Today the dollar is neither based upon nor redeemable in either gold or silver. Gold is out of circulation; hence, no form of currency is redeemable in such metal.

Formerly silver certificates were redeemable in silver dollars, but now such certificates are redeemable not in silver dollars but in so many dollars' worth of silver. Literally, this means that the amount of silver needed for the redemption of silver certificates varies from day to day as the value of silver bullion varies in the markets of our country.

A few years ago our silver certificates contained on one side, in substance, the words "redeemable in one silver dollar." Those certificates have been withdrawn from circulation, and the present certificates contain the wording, "So many dollars, redeemable in silver." Mr. President, if you should take a $1 silver certificate to the Treasury and ask for its redemption, they probably would give you a silver dollar; but that would not conform to the contract. The contract on the silver certificate would require the Treasury to weigh out to you $1 worth of silver and tender to you or redeem for you your bill in either $1 worth of silver or $2 worth of silver or $10 worth of silver, as the case may be. Since the value of silver bullion changes daily, the amount of silver you would receive for your dollar is subject to change daily. So the contract as now printed on the paper silver certificate is impracticable of operation. Nevertheless, that is what it states on its face.

Today we are on neither a gold nor a silver standard.

As stated, the dollar is a managed money unit. We now have a commodity dollar. The value of the dollar in terms of commodities and services changes from day to day.

In February 1933 the dollar, then on the orthodox gold standard, was valued in commodities at 167 cents.

One year ago the managed dollar, in buying power, was worth 127 cents.

Today such dollar is worth 114 cents.

The dollar is constantly changing in value.

Under the old gold standard it likewise changed in value.

In the past the dollar, when based on gold or silver, or both, has been a dollar of varying values.

Who is responsible for the kind or value of the dollar provided for the people of the country?

The Constitution answers:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin.

No other tribunal has the constitutional or legal right or power to regulate the value of the dollar.

Important as this question is, the Congress has never exercised this power in a formal, practical, or legal manner.

It is obvious that the Congress could not, through its committees or otherwise, exercise this constitutional power directly. The exercise of such power makes mandatory adequate and proper legislation.

If Congress is unable to act directly in regulating the value of the dollar, then such power must be delegated.

The delegation of legislative power is surrounded with difficulties.

Under the Constitution the coinage of money and the regulation of the value thereof was intended to be a complete governmental monopoly.

In practice at times this monopoly has been farmed out to private interests.

At this time there is no congressional mandate relative to the regulation of the value of the dollar to any definite point.

As I have stated, the dollar is constantly losing its value. It is going down day by day; and as the dollar goes down in value, as it is doing today, as it did yesterday, as it will do tomorrow, prices are constantly rising.

The question now is, How far will the Congress permit the value of the dollar to fall, and, consequently, how high will Congress permit the prices of commodities to rise?

I desire to place in the RECORD at this point plans and specifications of the new dollar as outlined by the President. On May 6, 1933, over a Nation-wide radio hook-up, President Roosevelt said:

> The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

Again, on July 3, 1933, in a message to the London Economic Conference, the President said:

> Let me be frank in saying that the United States seeks the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future.

He was frank to admit at that time that the dollar did not then have the value which he wanted the dollar to have, but he said that in the near future we hope to so regulate the value of the dollar that it will have the value at which we hope it may be stabilized.

On July 5, 1933, in a second message to the World Economic Conference, President Roosevelt said:

> The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear: We are interested in American commodity prices.

On October 22, 1933, in a Nation-wide radio address, the President said:

> It is the Government's policy to restore the price level first.

In the same address, at another point, he said:

> When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July. And I say it now once more.

Mr. President, there we have the plans and specifications of the President of the United States, if I may so term them. But the President does not have the complete power to adjust and regulate the value of the dollar perhaps to the point where he thinks it should be fixed. The only power the President has directly over money is the power to still further reduce the gold content of the dollar. Under present law he can take from the gold dollar 10 percent, approximately, of its present weight, thereby reducing the weight, and consequently the value, of the gold dollar.

Under existing law the President has the power to reduce the old gold dollar to one-half its former size. He has taken 40 percent from the value of the dollar, leaving 60 percent in the dollar, and the only power the President has is as to the remainder, between the 40 percent and the 50 percent. Whether or not he will exercise that power further remains to be seen. At the present time I see no occasion for him to reduce the content of the gold dollar any further, for the very obvious reason that the domestic dollar, the commodity dollar, is a much higher valued dollar than the foreign gold dollar. Every dollar in American money, when it gets outside of the United States, becomes a foreign dollar, and the moment it becomes a foreign dollar it becomes of the value exactly of $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains of gold, because the foreign dollar can be converted into gold.

We have set aside a $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund in gold to see to it that our foreign dollar is held stable at the value of $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains of gold. But that rule does not apply in the United States. The value of the dollar in the United States is controlled entirely by the number of dollars in circulation, not by the amount of gold in the foreign dollar, and not by the amount of silver in the domestic dollar, because the value of the silver in the domestic dollar is worth about 30 cents, so that is out of the question.

The question now is, Can we regulate the value of the dollar down to the point where we think it should be?

The Attorney General of the United States, in discussing the gold clause issue before the Supreme Court, made some reference to this question, and I desire to place in the RECORD at this joint just what the Attorney General said, and inasmuch as Senators are not very busy, I think it might not be out of place to read what he said. In arguing the gold-clause cases before the Supreme Court, Attorney General Cummings used the following language:

> It is my belief that the word "regulate" as used in the Constitution has never been completely and carefully analyzed in all of its implications. How far does the term "regulate" carry us? Manifestly, it reaches to the regulation of value, and value itself is a relative thing. Value appears only in relation to the value of other things.
> And, moreover, the word "regulate" implies a continuing power, and is the same term that is used with reference to commerce, and connotes the power of adjustment. It implies the power of making the condition accord more fully with reality and with justice.
> But when you come to the power "to fix the standard of weights and measures", the Constitution abandons the word "regulate" and uses the word "fix."
> All these things, philosophically or semiphilosophically considered, have some relationship to these sudden and violent fluctuations in commodity prices which so completely disarrange important equities; and to the proposition that, as a matter of essential justice, the dollar we borrow should be, in purchasing power, substantially the dollar we are expected to repay. What that relationship is I do not assume to suggest, what the future may develop with regard to this aspect of the constitutional question I do not know. These things will follow in due course.

Only a few months ago the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Marriner S. Eccles, delivered an address in Cincinnati. After discussing some elements of the money question at some length, in summarizing what he intended to leave as definite suggestions, he used the following language:

> The Government fiscal policy and the central-bank policy, credit expansion and contraction should be coordinated. I think that within the Treasury and the Reserve System there is a real possibility of money management.

Mr. President, my construction of Mr. Eccles' statement is that he thinks that if the power now vested in the President and the power now vested in the Treasury Department were vested in his board, with the power which he now has plus these two additional powers, he could satisfactorily manage money. Governor Strong did it without the powers which Governor Eccles has. If Governor Strong was able to do it, Governor Eccles could do it. But he has no mandate.

Who is there anywhere who can tell Governor Eccles at what point of value the dollar should be stabilized? No one can do that save the Congress. Anyone else who undertakes to do it assumes that power and speaks only for himself. That is what has happened for 148 years, and when that has happened in these 148 years the holders of fixed investments have had control and the producer, as shown by this graph, for 149 years, save in three short periods, have been at a distinct disadvantage.

Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, the chairman of the board of directors of the Chase National Bank, in a recent address before the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, described some of the methods of control of the value of the dollar. In this address he referred to the following powers:

(a) Raising the reserve requirements of member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

(b) Control, through Federal Reserve, open-market operations.

(c) Control of the discount rate.

Mr. President, before I overlook it, I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks, and after I shall have concluded, some data in the form of quotations from Supreme Court decisions as to how the Congress can delegate its power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked me a question awhile ago about one phase of this subject, and in return I asked him whether he was alarmed because of the amount of the public debt which now rests upon the people of the United States. I do not remember that he gave me a definite answer. I will not insist that he shall give me a definite answer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to answer the Senator if he desires to have my opinion. The subject was injected solely because I was endeavoring to determine what the Senator's interpretation of the Strong episode was. It is my feeling that a continuous operating deficit in the Government inevitably leads to an inflation which is dangerous.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree entirely with the statement of the Senator, and I wish to suggest at this point that there is no chance ever to balance the Budget until the dollar has been stabilized, and there is no chance ever to get rid of ever-recurring strikes until the dollar is stabilized.

The dollar tomorrow will have a different value from what it has today.

Not long ago strikes broke out in one of the States of the Union. For the time being, those strikes were temporarily settled; but shortly, with a mounting price level, unless wages are increased accordingly, the wage earners who went on strike only a few weeks ago will be forced to face a higher price level, so they will perhaps go on a second strike. If that is settled, shortly afterward there will come a third strike. There is no chance to avert strikes, there is no chance to balance the Budget until the dollar shall be stabilized. With the stable valued dollar we shall have stable valued commodities. Rents will become stabilized. All the things the wage earners and all our people have to buy will become more or less stabilized.

Of course, I do not say that the farmers will receive a dollar and a half per bushel for wheat every year. Under the system I am advocating, we might have $2 wheat one year and 50-cent wheat the next year. In other words, if wheat became unusually scarce because of drought or rust or the chinch bug it would rise in value even with the stabilized price level. On the other hand, if we should raise a double crop of wheat it would go down in value, although at the same time we might have a stabilized price level. However, the theory of a stabilized price level is that as a rule the commodities will be stabilized. In stabilizing seven or eight hundred commodities it will be necessary to stabilize some that are going up while others are going down.

Getting back to the question of the amount of the national debt, I wish to place this statement in the RECORD for what it is worth. It is my contention that the increased debt resting upon the people of the United States today is less in value than the smaller debt which rested upon them when Mr. Roosevelt became President of the United States. If that statement be true, no one has a just ground for complaint because of the increase of the debt in terms of dollars. It has not increased in terms of gold; it has decreased in terms of gold. The debt has not increased in terms of wheat; it has decreased in terms of wheat. It has not increased in terms of cotton, or oil, or oats, or of commodity prices generally. The debt has decreased during the past 4 years in terms of the things I have just mentioned.

In order that an answer shall be available to those who may wish to question my reasoning, I desire to give in the RECORD the reasons for my statement.

Under this program the country is working out of the worst depression in history. Some of our people are complaining that the dollar is already too cheap and that prices are now too high. Also we hear fear expressed that the public debt is becoming so large as to be dangerous, yet the facts are that such debt today, in terms of gold and commodities, is not nearly so large, burdensome, or dangerous as the debt inherited by the present administration.

On March 3, 1933, the total national debt was $20,934,729,209. Since 1933 the public debt has increased to $34,753,487,389, yet the debt today, in terms of gold, is $1,000,000,000 less than the debt of 4 years ago.

The truthfulness of this statement is easily demonstrated. On March 3, 1933, we were on the single gold standard and all our bonds were payable in gold at the rate of 25.8 grains of gold 0.9 fine to the dollar. By multiplying the amount of the debt by the number of grains of gold in each dollar, we find that, on March 3, 1933, we owed 540,116,013,592 grains of gold.

Since March 3, 1933, we have reduced the gold content of the dollar from 25.8 grains to $15\frac{5}{21}$ grains, so that the present debt, multiplied by the number of grains of gold in the present dollar, shows that, at the present time, we owe only 529,576,950,685 grains of gold.

By subtracting the value of the present debt, in terms of gold, from the value of the 1933 debt, likewise in terms of gold, we find that the present debt is almost $1,000,000,000 less than the debt of 4 years ago.

In terms of commodities the value of the present debt is far less than the value of the debt of March 3, 1933. The truthfulness of this statement is likewise easily demonstrated.

On March 3, 1933, cash wheat was selling for approximately 25 cents per bushel or 4 bushels to the dollar. The national debt at that time, measured in terms of wheat, was equal to the value of approximately 84,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. Today cash wheat is selling for approximately $1.35 per bushel, so that the present debt, valued in wheat, is equal to only approximately 26,000,000,000 bushels; and 26,000,000,000 subtracted from 84,000,000,000 leaves 58,000,000,000, so that the present national debt, valued in wheat, is approximately 58,000,000,000 bushels less than the total national debt of March 4, 1933.

Certainly the man who raises wheat has no right to complain, because so far as he is concerned the debt resting on his shoulders, or his portion of it, is 58,000,000,000 bushels of wheat less than the smaller debt which rested on his shoulders on March 4, 1933.

So far as prices are concerned, wheat and oil are Siamese twins. When wheat sold for 25 cents a bushel, oil was selling for 25 cents a barrel. Today, when wheat is selling for $1.35 per bushel, oil is selling for about the same amount per barrel, so that the national debt, in terms of oil, is approximately 58,000,000,000 barrels less than the national debt of March 3, 1933.

In terms of cotton the national debt during the past 4 years has been decreased rather than increased. On March 3, 1933, the total national debt, in terms of cotton, equaled approximately 837,000,000 bales. Today the total national debt could be liquidated with approximately 496,000,000 bales, or the sum of 341,000,000 bales less than the value of the debt 4 years ago.

In terms of corn the same conclusion is reached. Four years ago the value of the national debt in terms of corn equaled approximately 105,000,000,000 bushels. At that time corn was selling for less than 20 cents per bushel. Today corn is selling for over $1 per bushel; hence the present debt in terms of corn is equal to approximately 34,500,000,000 bushels; so that in terms of corn the national debt is approximately 70,000,000,000 bushels less today than on the day Mr. Roosevelt became President of the United States.

Mr. President, let me recapitulate briefly. During the past 4 years the Congress has passed laws cheapening the dollar and raising prices. The first law reduced the weight of the gold dollar by 40 percent. The second law has expanded the currency by some $700,000,000 through a wider use of silver. These laws have worked. The dollar is cheaper and prices are higher.

As stated, the Constitution provides that Congress shall regulate the value of our money. The laws enacted to date form the first step in the program for the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar. The next step is to determine the proper point of value at which the dollar should be stabilized. That is the purpose of the bill introduced by me today.

The bill just introduced suggests a formula for determining such point of value, suggests the means by which the dollar shall be adjusted, regulated, and stabilized, and also provides a governmental agency to carry out the policies to be adopted by the Congress.

The bill proposes that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall be converted into an agency of the Government, designated as a "monetary authority", for the expressed purpose of supervising the operations of the law.

The bill provides for the kind of a dollar favored by President Roosevelt.

At this time many reasons suggest, if not demand, that the dollar value be decided upon, and thereafter that such adjusted and regulated value should be stabilized. The end sought to be attained is in the public interest. The plan suggested to bring about the desired results is possible, practical, and constitutional. If the bill becomes a law, the value of the dollar will be adjusted, regulated, and thereafter stabilized.

The practical effect of this program will be substantially as follows:

First. The value of the dollar will be agreed upon and thereafter adjusted to such value.

Second. The adjusted value will be stabilized, thereby tending to stabilize the price level of commodities and services.

Third. Under the plan suggested the threats of inflation, likewise deflation, will be eliminated.

Fourth. This program is absolutely necessary and, when adopted, will give the country a breathing spell, insofar as monetary legislation is concerned.

EXHIBIT A

United States Reports, volume 293, October term, 1934, page 421 (Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan):

"Undoubtedly legislation must often be adapted to complex conditions involving a host of details with which the National Legislature cannot deal directly. The Constitution has never been regarded as denying to the Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality which will enable it to perform its function in laying down policies and establishing standards, while leaving to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules within prescribed limits and the determination of facts to which the policy as declared by the legislature is to apply. Without capacity to give authorizations of that sort we should have the anomaly of a legislative power which in many circumstances calling for its exertion would be but a futility."

United States Reports, volume 293, October term, 1934, paragraph 8, page 390 (Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan):

"Congress may lay down its policies and establish its standards and leave to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules, within prescribed limits, and the determination of facts to which the policy, as declared by Congress, shall apply."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) declaring Joseph P. Kennedy eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs.

PROFIT SHARING AND SIT-DOWN STRIKES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a few days ago, when discussing the labor situation, I made this statement:

I think that appropriate and definite profit sharing is the essential key to the appropriate American labor relationship.

I believe that firmly although I do not pretend to present a standard formula by which it can be done. I believe the part the Government can play in such a prospectus may be to offer tax exemptions to encourage the diversion of employer funds for profit-sharing purposes. I welcome every evidence I see of encouragement for the profit-sharing idea. There was a very interesting dispatch in the newspapers this morning from Jersey City indicating a very significant development in this connection, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I should like to see an official legislative study of the whole profit-sharing subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JERSEY FIRM'S 200 EMPLOYEES NOW PARTNERS—WORKERS ARE JUBILANT AT 15 PERCENT SHARE IN MONTHLY PROFITS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., March 24.—Recognized now as partners, the 200 employees of the Union Packing Co. set out today to increase business and the profits they will share in.

A promise of monthly dividends to the extent of 15 percent of the profits came in a surprise announcement by Joseph Gross, president of the meat-store chain, and Louis A. Falk, secretary-treasurer.

Employees, jubilant at the news, estimated their monthly cut would range from $5 to $20 each for butchers and $18 to $75 for managers of the 50 stores in New Jersey and New York.

SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS A MONTH MORE

"I stand to make $75 a month more under this system", said Stanley Tarack, manager of the largest in the chain.

"It is one of the best things that ever happened. It is going to make every man step out now and see that more sales and more profits are made."

Tarack also predicted employees would be anxious to cut down operating expenses.

Joseph Coppola, who has been behind a meat counter 3 years, commented:

"I would rather work under this system than to get a flat raise of so many dollars a week. It is a very fine thing the company is doing and they will benefit by it in the end."

MAY SOLVE UNITED STATES' PROBLEM

As for the bosses, Falk says the company has never had any labor difficulties, and the partnership idea "might prove a way out for the rest of the country if it follows suit."

"We may be altruists", Falk said, "but we can't see why one person should earn $1,000,000 and another $20."

In business 16 years, the company has stores in Manhattan, Long Island, and Westchester County, N. Y., and in five north Jersey counties—Hudson, Passaic, Bergen, Union, and Essex. In 1935 it gave employees $14,000 in cash bonuses.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, while I am briefly referring to the labor situation, may I add the statement of my great satisfaction to see in the newspapers that a White House conference apparently is contemplated this week end, out of which may come some expression from the President respecting sit-down strikes. I know of nothing which would be more important to the welfare of a harassed Nation than an explicit statement from the Chief Executive upon this subject. Government should speak upon this matter without further delay and through its highest and most authoritative mouthpiece.

CROP INSURANCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1397) to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, it will be recalled that today Senate bill 1397 was made the unfinished business. That bill has to do with the creation of a crop-insurance program to be effective for the year 1938. It is my purpose to discuss generally the arguments for a crop-insurance program in its relation to other agricultural programs that are in effect, and perhaps at a later time I will discuss in detail the specific provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission has just submitted a report to Congress in response to a resolution passed last year requesting an investigation of conditions of agriculture. This report contains some very interesting information. It is pointed out that in the last 25 years, while the Nation's population has grown nearly 40 percent, farm population has actually declined. In 1910, population on farms was about 32,000,000. In 1929, it had fallen to 30,257,000. In 1935 it was back to 31,800,000, but about 200,000 less than in 1910. This decline took place in spite of the fact that the annual excess of births over deaths on the farm is from 400,000 to 500,000 a year. If those who were born on the farm since 1910 had remained, farm population would have increased more than 10,000,000. Instead of that, it has decreased some 200,000. It is estimated by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics that over 6,000,000 persons left the farm between 1920 and 1929; yet this period is regarded as one of general prosperity in business. Between 1930 and 1935, about 1,000,000 more people left the farm than went to it, notwithstanding the fact that during the depression a considerable number did move onto farms in order to exist.

Interestingly enough, during the past 25 years the national land area included in farms rose from 46 to 55 percent. This leads the Federal Trade Commission to conclude that the survival of independent farming by home owners is in jeopardy.

Into this picture comes the specter of tenancy. In 1900, 35.3 percent of farmers were tenants; in 1910, 37 percent; in 1920, 38.1 percent; in 1930, 42.4 percent; and in 1935, 42.1 percent. The actual number of tenants in 1935 was estimated at 2,865,000. It is estimated that tenancy is increasing at the rate of 40,000 a year. The depression, of course, greatly accelerated tenancy. During the 4 years before the depression the number of foreclosures per 1,000 farms varied from 19 to 23 percent. In 1932 it was about 42 percent, and in 1933, 50 percent. In 1936 it had been reduced to 26 percent.

Hardships among farmers are reflected in various ways. It is found that in rural areas about 13 percent of those who are sick receive no medical care, while in large towns and cities only about 7 percent receive no such care. Due to the inadequacy of school facilities, rural illiteracy runs about 7 percent of those 10 years old and over, as compared with a little over 3 percent in cities and towns. Of course, rural disadvantage applies to the use of telephones, electric lights, running water, and all other modern conveniences.

The Federal Trade Commission points out a number of causes for these conditions—such as monopolistic tendencies among handlers, manufacturers, and processors of agricultural products, unbalanced relations between industry and agriculture, lack of fully effective organization among farmers, disadvantages in marketing, and other causes.

The farmer's share of the consumer's dollar is still too low. For instance, the average price of bread to the consumer for 1935 was 8.3 cents per pound. The retailer got 19 percent of this amount, the bakeries about 56 percent, the flour millers about 7 percent, the middlemen and transporters about 5 percent, and the farmer about 13 percent. The tobacco grower gets about 12 percent of the price paid by the consumer for cigarettes. The average price of cigarettes sold in 1934 was 12.8 cents per package. Forty-six and seven-tenths percent went for taxes, 20.4 percent went to the manufacturer, 21 percent went to middlemen, leaving 12 percent for the farmer. I may say that these were figures obtained by the Federal Trade Commission and are set out in its report. With reference to beef products, distributors received 42 percent of the consumer's dollar, processing companies 13 percent, transportation companies 5 percent, and the farmer received 40 percent.

During the past few years farm conditions, of course, have improved. The combined effects of recovery measures and droughts have moved average farm prices up from about 50 percent of parity in March 1933, to nearly 100 percent today. It will be recalled that parity, as here used, means the relation of prices of the things the farmer sells and the things he buys during the period of 1910 to 1914. It must be concluded, however, that parity is only one factor in the whole farm problem.

The time was, not so long ago, when the slogan was "Equality for Agriculture." That was and is a good slogan, but parity in prices is only one element in determining equality. It has been suggested that the slogan "Security for Agriculture" is a more accurate expression of the hopes of the farmers of this country. The tenancy system and natural hazards, such as droughts, floods, insect pests, and hail, come into the picture under any consideration of equality or security.

Since a high degree of organization exists in nearly every other field of industry, it is certainly desirable that farmers have an opportunity to organize effectively. Much progress has been made during the last few years in this direction, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, under the Soil Conservation Law, and in other ways. Organization among the farmers should press on. Fair and stable farm prices on a parity with the prices of other industries should be thoroughly established and maintained. The supply of farm products should be kept in line with domestic and foreign demand. Foreign markets should be expanded for American farm products in every practical way. The soil, which is a precious heritage of all our people, should be restored and conserved. Submarginal land, more suitable for grazing, forestry, and other purposes, should be removed from cultivation, and good farming land made available.

Much has been and is being done to carry these policies forward. During the last few years, the people of this country have become conscious, as never before, of the necessity of a thoroughgoing governmental program to assist the farmer to solve these problems. He cannot do these things alone. He must have the help of the Government. So this work must go on with ever-increasing vigor. It must be clear to all who have studied the problems of agriculture that no one measure, no one method of apprach, will meet the needs of the American farmer. There is no one panacea for his ills.

There are many avenues of approach that must be occupied if the farmer is ever to have a fair degree of security. As one of these approaches, crop insurance takes its place.

During the last year or two a widespread interest has been manifested in this form of protection for the farmer. The subject is not new. As far back as 1868 a German economist made a rather complete study and report to the Japanese Government on crop insurance. He pointed out many of the factors that would enter into a successful plan and called attention to the difficulties inherent in it. Since that time efforts have been made in a limited way by private insurance companies in this country to furnish such protection. It seems quite well demonstrated, however, that the undertaking is too great for private efforts. Too much capital is required, the area of operation is too limited, and the spread of the risk is too small. This is freely conceded by representatives of those insurance companies that have undertaken in one way or another to insure farm crops.

I may say that before our subcommittee appeared representatives of the various companies which have attempted private crop insurance, and it is their conclusion that a power greater than is possessed by any company must be had in order successfully to write crop-insurance policies.

It is recognized, of course, that industry other than agriculture is fairly well protected by insurance. There are nearly all kinds of insurance—life, fire, marine, fidelity, health, sickness, liability, surety, accident, credit, burglary, boiler explosion, forgery, rent, and many others. Insurance may even be obtained against the little incidents of life, such as baldness, triplets, injury to arms, legs, and to preserve shapely figures and beautiful faces. Paderewski's fingers are insured. Fred Astaire's feet could be the subject of a policy, and Lloyds of London, 6 months before the United States went off the gold standard, issued policies insuring importers against such a contingency. Incidentally, Lloyds paid out a very large sum of money on account of that insurance.

So far as the farmer is concerned, however, there is no way for him to protect his growing crops in any comprehensive or effective way. Outside of hail insurance, he can obtain no effective coverage for other natural hazards that may at any time destroy his entire source of income for himself and family. Every reason for insurance that may exist in any case would apply to the farmers' crops.

The enterprise of farming is about the most speculative in the world. The prices of farm products are, of course, highly speculative. I think it can be said that the producers of no other goods are subjected to such a high degree of speculation in the matter of prices. Certainly the clothing manufacturer, the shoe manufacturer, the maker of steel goods, the processor of farm products, and other manufacturers of finished goods, need not face so much uncertainty in the prices of their goods. In addition to that, I know of no other industry that can remotely approach the uncertainty of the farmer in the production of crops. He is haunted by drought, frost, floods, tornadoes, blight, insects, lightning, and other unavoidable hazards. This uncertainty, this disadvantage, this inequality, this lack of security, should be removed insofar as it is possible for him and his government to remove it.

It is the purpose of S. 1397 to deal with this problem so far as wheat farmers are concerned. At once the question is raised as to why such insurance should be limited to wheat. There is no reason in principle why insurance should not apply to all staple crops. They are all subject to natural hazards. But there is good reason in practice for the limitation at this time. In the first place, sufficient data have not been obtained upon which to base a sound program as to crops other than wheat. One important reason why private attempts at crop insurance have failed is the lack of dependable agricultural data—data on yields and losses, and their variation in different sections of the country. It would be unwise for any program to be put in operation without having obtained the most accurate data possible as a basis for the insurance. Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act production records of individual farms were kept, and other reliable information is at hand. By a careful and detailed study as to wheat, a basis for determining average yields in the various sections has been reached. On this basis, insurance coverage and premiums can be fixed with a fairly sound actuarial basis.

It will be noted that in arriving at the average yield of a farm, upon which is based a percentage of coverage and the insurance premiums, the history of the individual farm is not the only data considered. The average yield of farms in the locality or region is also considered. It has been suggested that the actual average yield of the individual farm be given 50 percent weight and the actual average yield of neighboring farms be given 50 percent weight, but the corporation has discretion on this point. It has also been suggested that a third element be considered—the probable future yield of the farm. A good argument can be made for including it.

The farmer's efficiency, his industry, his preparation of the soil, and other considerations would certainly affect the probable yield. The fact that a good farmer might take the place of a poor one on a particular farm would be likely substantially to influence the yield. The committee is of the opinion, however, that this factor brings into consideration personal elements to such an extent as would make it difficult in practical application. It would open the way for charges of discrimination on personal or political grounds. It seemed best to us to avoid this element that might create considerable embarrassment in the administration of the law.

These studies have not been completed as to corn, cotton, tobacco, and other basic crops. As soon as this work has been done as to the other crops and sound bases arrived at, then this law should be amended to include other commodities.

Some other reasons also exist for limiting the bill to wheat. The wheat farmers generally have shown more interest in such a program. At the hearings before the committee representative farmers from 12 wheat States appeared and testified. It is thought to be the part of wisdom to begin with one commodity, for such a program contains a large element of the experimental and it may be well to try it out in this limited way.

The plan for crop insurance as provided in this bill includes the creation of an agency in the form of a corporation, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, for putting the program into operation. It has seemed to the committee that the corporate form possesses some distinct advantages over a bureau within the Department of Agriculture. It seems clear that the prompt and expeditious handling of the business of this organization is of vital importance to the success of the program. The adjustment of claims and the prompt payment of indemnities is highly desirable. The elimination of just as much red tape as possible in the administration of the law is necessary.

The committee had in mind the organization of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which resulted in many cases in long-delayed payments of benefits.

If the premiums, when paid, become the property of the United States Government and if the claims for indemnities are considered as ordinary claims against the Government, it is not hard to understand that the regulations and requirements might unreasonably delay the administration of the program.

The corporation is clearly within the strict supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. He appoints the three directors who constitute the board. They are to be appointed from employees within the Department of Agriculture. They are to hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the manager of the corporation will be appointed by the board with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. All employees will be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The bill provides that the directors shall receive no additional salary, but will receive expenses for traveling and subsistence outside the District of Columbia.

Among the powers given to the corporation is that of utilizing the committees and associations of producers which have been set up under the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Soil Conservation Act. The experience which these committees have had in dealing with the farmers in the various communities will be valuable in the administration of this act. They may receive from the corporation expenses in doing their work, but all or a part of these expenses may be included in the insurance premiums.

I mean the expenses of the local committees may be included in the insurance premium. It is thought that this provision will tend to insure care and economy in incurring expense by the local committees.

Probably the most interesting feature in the plan provided by the bill is the provision that premiums and indemnities must be paid in bushels of wheat or in cash equivalent at the time of payment at the option of the insured farmer. This premium wheat will be stored in warehouses to form a reserve for payment of indemnities. The idea of the ever-normal granary is thus, in a measure, to be realized.

It is clear, of course, that during years of large yield, premiums will exceed indemnities, and during years of general crop failure indemnities will exceed premiums. Thus, in fat years a portion of the surplus will be stored, and during lean years such stored carry-over will be paid out to the farmer. In this way supplies of wheat will be stabilized and made available to consumers.

It is interesting to note how this will work out according to studies of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. A chart has been prepared showing that if this law had been in effect from 1930 to 1936 the excess of premiums over indemnities during the first 3 years would have made an accumulation of about 72,000,000 bushels in the Great Plains States. These were years of good yield. The chart shows that during the last 3 years, which were years of unusual drought in those States, the 72,000,000 bushels in storage would have been paid out in indemnities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, those figures depend for their validity upon the rate of premium that is figured in their preparation. Can the Senator indicate what that rate of premium is?

Mr. POPE. It varies in different sections. For the purposes of this table, those compiling it have taken the yield of the individual farm over a period of 6 years, and have averaged it up with the average yield of the farms in that locality, and have worked out first the average yield, and then a premium that varies all the way from half a bushel per acre up to 3 or 3½ bushels per acre, depending upon the particular region or section that is considered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the average? Am I anticipating the Senator? Is he planning to discuss the question of premiums later?

Mr. POPE. I shall discuss it later. I am not sure whether or not I shall cover what the Senator has in mind. If not, I shall be glad to answer any questions he may propound.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am interested in knowing what, in the prospectus, the average premium will be.

Mr. POPE. The average premiums will vary according to the locality. For instance, in the West, where we have irrigated farms, there is a fairly uniform average yield. The individual farmer may lose his crop by reason of lightning, or fires started by railroad trains, or by reason of frost, or something else: or the same thing may happen to a group of farmers in a certain region, as in the West or in the East. Those losses would be taken care of, but it would mean a very low premium. I think in the calculations the premiums have gone as low as one-tenth of a bushel per acre in some sections, and they have gone as high as 3 or 4 bushels per acre in other sections; and, of course, those sections are the places where serious droughts have occurred within the past few years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the spread in premium bear any relationship to the productivity of the land?

Mr. POPE. Not so much to the productivity as to the uniformity of yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Perhaps the Senator can answer my question by giving me a typical example of a wheat field and its yield, and its probable premium as related to that yield.

Mr. POPE. There is in the record a showing of a number of cases of that kind in various counties—counties in North Dakota, counties in Oregon, counties in Ohio, and counties in Maryland. Let us take, for instance, a county in Maryland, where we will say the yield is 10 bushels per acre. Then let us assume that the coverage would be 75 percent of that, which would be 7½ bushels per acre. Then the premium, as I recall—depending, of course, upon all the circumstances—would be perhaps one-tenth to one-fourth of a bushel per acre, which would be sufficient to pay the loss which it may be expected would occur as shown by the history during the past 10 years, or whatever period the board may take. As I recall, in Maryland and in the other sections where there is a fairly uniform yield, the premiums are very low—one-tenth to one-fourth of a bushel per acre.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did the Senator say the premium goes as high as 3 bushels per acre?

Mr. POPE. In some places—North Dakota, western Kansas, and so forth—according to some of the studies, it will go as high as 3 or 4 bushels per acre.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Against what yield?

Mr. POPE. As I recall, the average yields there were 8 bushels per acre. I may say that it at once appears obvious that the insurance premium in those sections would be prohibitive, and therefore it would not be desirable either for the Government or for the individual farmer to insure his crops in those cases where the yields do not average up fairly well. That brings up the whole question of submarginal lands. Undoubtedly it would be the desire of the administration, judging from statements which have been made by those who probably will administer the act—the Secretary of Agriculture and others—to discourage the further cultivation of land where the yield is not sufficient to make a living for the man who cultivates it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think it is manifest that the farmer would not pay a 3-bushel premium on an 8-bushel yield.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, let me ask the Senator another question. In figuring out the actuarial results of this operation, has it been anticipated that all farmers will take advantage of it, or that only a portion of them will do so?

Mr. POPE. In these calculations it is estimated that about 50 percent of the farmers will take advantage of this insurance.

As I was saying a few minutes ago with reference to the yields in the Great Plains area, during the years from 1930 to 1936, when some 72,000,000 bushels accumulated as a result of excess of premiums during the first 3 years, the 72,000,000 bushels would have been paid back to the farmers, under the calculation that has been made, during the last 3 years.

What would have been the result of this process upon the farmer? At the prevailing price of wheat during the first 3 years, the value of the 72,000,000 bushels was about $60,000,000. During the last 3 years, at the then prevailing price, the value of the same wheat was about $95,000,000. The farmers would have received a profit of $35,000,000. As it was, since the farmer could not store and hold much of this wheat, the speculators who were able to do so received that profit. It would be a novel and delightful experience for the farmer to be in a position to receive such profits as this. Thirty-five million dollars distributed among the farmers of the Great Plains region during the recent drought years would have gone a long way to keep them off the relief rolls, and it would have saved the Government a great deal of money which was expended for drought relief.

Since in bumper-crop years the price of wheat is likely to be lower, and in years of widespread crop failure the price is likely to be higher, wheat producers under a system of crop insurance would get the benefit of such price variations. It also seems reasonable that with this method of draining off a portion of the surplus in fat years, the price of wheat would not reach levels as low as it otherwise would; and in lean years, with the stored surplus thrown on the market, the price would not go quite as high as it otherwise would. This, of course, would limit the profits that would be received by the farmer, but it would tend toward a stabilization of prices, which is a most desirable thing both for producers and for consumers.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I think I was absent from the Chamber when the Senator discussed the question of premiums and losses. Do the losses against which the farmer insures include prospective profits, or are they based on cost of production?

Mr. POPE. On neither. They are based upon the average yield over a period of years; and, as I pointed out a few minutes ago, "average yield" does not mean merely the average yield of the individual farm. It means that and the average yield of the farms in the community. I may say, in that connection, that good records of yield are available during the past 6 years, and only partial records are available for the other 4 years; but it is thought advisable that a 10-year period be taken. In some States, like North Dakota and Kansas, good records have been kept over the entire 10-year period, and for even a longer time; but upon the basis of the average yield determined over a period of, say, 10 years, the premium is fixed. Not the whole average yield is covered by insurance, but it is provided that a percentage of coverage, say 75 percent, will be determined by the board; or it is thought that two forms of policies may be provided—a 75-percent coverage policy, upon which the premiums would be higher, and a 50-percent coverage policy, upon which the premiums would be very much lower.

In the drought sections—where, as I said a few minutes ago, the premiums would be high—perhaps a coverage of 50 percent—the premium for which would be considerably less than for a 75-percent coverage—might be used by many of the farmers; and it would be advantageous to the Government as well to encourage farmers to use the 50-percent coverage policies instead of the higher coverage policies.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the farmer permitted to elect whether he shall pay the premium in cash or in wheat?

Mr. POPE. Yes; the bill provides that the premium will be paid in wheat or in the cash equivalent at the option of the farmer, and in the event it is paid in cash, there is a requirement upon the board of directors immediately to invest the cash in wheat and place the wheat in storage.

Mr. McNARY. I have not had opportunity to read the bill, it has been so recently supplied to us, and the hearings have not been printed, but I understand it contemplates the storage of vast quantities of wheat during the fat years which will take us over into the lean?

Mr. POPE. As to the probable amount of storage I can only say that in the studies which have been made covering the past years it is estimated that during the years from 1930 to 1936 in the Great Plains area the total amount of 72,000,000 bushels would have been stored at one time, which represented the excess of premiums over indemnities that were paid. As I said a few minutes ago, during the first 3 years, from 1930 to 1933, under the calculations, 72,000,000 bushels would have been accumulated. During the last 3 years, which were drought years, they would have been paid out as indemnities to the farmers.

Mr. McNARY. I am not speaking of that feature, but is it in the mind of the administrator of the measure we are to pass that he will acquire and store large quantities of wheat when there is a surplus?

Mr. POPE. Yes. Of course, the only way they can acquire wheat is through the receipt of premiums, and as I have indicated to the Senator, on the basis of the premiums, which are now thought to be fair and actuarially sound, the amount I have indicated would have been accumulated over the past 6 years, and would have been paid out.

Mr. McNARY. What was the total?

Mr. POPE. Seventy-two million bushels would have been accumulated during the first 3 years, from 1930 to 1933, and during the last 3 years, by reason of the drought, that amount would have been paid out, so that it would be about even at the end of 6 years, on the basis of the premiums, which are thought to be actuarially sound.

Mr. McNARY. Suppose we should return to a normal yield, such as that we had, say, between 1915 and 1928, which was about 800,000,000 bushels, exporting, as we did, about 600,000,000. We had a surplus of about 100,000,000 bushels.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Then you also add to that surplus the premiums paid?

Mr. POPE. No; they are not added to the surplus. They would take care of the part of the surplus in this form.

Mr. McNARY. If these large quantities are to be paid, not in cash, but in a commodity, that figure must be added to the surplus in order to find out the amount of wheat we would have on hand at a given time.

Mr. POPE. No. If 800,000,000 bushels were produced and 600,000,000 were consumed, leaving 200,000,000 surplus, and there were 72,000,000 bushels in storage, that would be deducted from the 200,000,000. We assume this does not increase the production of wheat. I will go into that in a few moments.

Mr. McNARY. It does, in this respect. I am assuming that we still have foreign markets for the major part of our surplus production.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What was paid in premiums would not go to the foreign markets; it would be domestically held.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The aggregate volume on hand would be due, probably, not to the A. A. A. or to any legislation, but would be due to the drought, of course.

Mr. POPE. To both the A. A. A. and the drought.

Mr. McNARY. We have not had a surplus to bother us.

Mr. POPE. I think it is due both to the A. A. A. and to the drought.

The philosophy of the ever-normal granary is not new. It was applied by Joseph in the land of the Pharaohs a long time ago. The idea of storing grain during the 7 fat years for use during the 7 lean years was sound then, and it is sound now. It is often suggested that if the individual farmer could store his surplus during years of heavy production to be used by him during seasons of crop failure, the desired result would be accomplished. It is plain, of course, that it is not practical for him to do so. He is not in a position financially to hold his crops, and he usually does not have any storage facilities for that purpose. It is the purpose of this proposal to do in a comprehensive way what he cannot do himself. The same principle is, of course, true as to any other kind of insurance.

In this connection, may I point out another value of the storage reserve feature of this program. In time of war or threatened war, prices invariably soar. This is because of unusual demand for wheat. The foreign demand is always great and wheat reserves are consumed. This is well illustrated by conditions that prevailed both before and after our entrance into the World War. Not only were all reserves drained off but thousands of additional acres were planted to wheat. Under these circumstances, suppose there occurred a widespread and disastrous crop failure. There might well be a distressing shortage of wheat for our domestic consumers. Substantial reserves of wheat in the insurance fund, which would be paid out in indemnities during deficit years, would be a welcome addition to our available wheat supply. This was pointed out in 1914 by Prof. Josiah Royce, of Harvard University, in his essay on War and Insurance. He saw then, when the essay was written, that a disastrous crop failure in wartime might create serious economic disturbance. While this may be regarded as a rather remote benefit, it is nevertheless one which should be considered in the discussion of this subject.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator perhaps may have discussed a point in which I have been interested, namely, the ascertainment by the committee of the amount of premium which will probably be charged to the insurance.

Mr. POPE. I have attempted to explain that. I may say that the question of the determination of the premium is one of the most difficult matters in connection with this subject, as one can readily see. In addition to the data which I have indicated are now in the possession of the Department of Agriculture, the Department has drawn upon the experience of those private insurance companies which have made some effort to write crop insurance. The tentative premium rates which have been arrived at have been the result of the data obtained and calculated in the manner I have already indicated, plus the experience of those actuaries with the private insurance companies which have been engaged to a limited extent in writing such insurance during the past 10 or 15 years.

It is realized, of course, that with reference to these matters a good deal of experience will be necessary in order to arrive at thoroughly accurate actuarial rates for the insurance premiums. But it is an object to be accomplished, and it seems that the data are procurable, and even the representatives of the insurance companies who did fail in their private efforts agree that a great deal of data have now been obtained upon which it may be fairly said that a sound actuarial basis can be arrived at. That is about all that can be said about the matter of premiums.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think that when I entered the Chamber a moment ago the Senator was saying that the net cost, measured in terms of wheat, would be about one-quarter or one-half of a bushel per acre.

Mr. POPE. I will say to the Senator that it depends upon the number of factors. In the charts which have been prepared from studies of all the available data the premium rates have ranged from one-tenth of a bushel per acre to as high as 3 or 4 bushels, depending upon the section of the country.

It is the mature judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture that the reserve feature of this plan is equal in importance to the insurance protective feature. And in a recent critical analysis of the plan by the Brookings Institution in a book just off the press, the same conclusion is reached. This language is used in that book:

> The feature of having the Government accumulate large stocks of farm products over years of normal or heavy production, so that they could be released in seasons of crop failure, constitutes the most essential element of this proposal.

A guaranty to the Nation against wheat shortage is a vital thing, and any method of using carry-overs to accomplish this purpose is worthy of most serious consideration.

In the Northwestern States there is surplus production of wheat every year. It is estimated that about 50 percent of the production is surplus. There is no likelihood of a general crop failure, but there are many instances of individual crop failures due to storms, lightning, forest fires, insect pests, and plant diseases. There are crop failures in entire communities due to these causes. Insurance would give much-needed protection to these individuals and communities. This is true of other sections of the country where extended droughts do not occur; and since there are no extended droughts in the Northwestern States, naturally the premium there would be very low, and would give important protection to the comparatively small number that may be in a community and suffer from those hazards.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the following statement is made:

> The Board may require a minimum amount of participation in a community before issuing insurance.

I wonder why that statement is made. I am extremely interested in the problem of crop insurance, and think it is a sound approach to the problem; but to me that sentence, if I gather the meaning which would naturally be inferred from it, is exactly contradictory to good principles of the mutual plan of insurance, based upon my past experience along that line. For example, the soundest plan to be followed by a mutual insurance company would be to have the risk widely scattered, and it would seem that the same principle should apply to farm insurance.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator asked that question, because I do not deal with that feature in my prepared address. The reason for that is that since this insurance is purely voluntary, it may be that in a certain county or in a certain section no one will want to take the insurance, or perhaps only half a dozen or a dozen farmers, and the number who were interested in the insurance would be so small that it would not be economical for the Government to undertake it. So it seemed advisable to give the Board power to insist upon a certain amount of participation before they would undertake to write insurance in a certain section.

For instance, in the Senator's own county, if by reason of the premium rate or for any other reason the farmers did not desire to take the insurance, or if only a few desired to take it, it might be advisable that the whole machinery of the Government in the form of county committees, appraisals in case of losses, inspections, and that sort of thing, not be used where only one or two or half a dozen persons wanted the insurance.

Under the provisions of the bill, premiums would be fixed according to counties or other small regions and individual premiums would be fixed in the manner already indicated. A county in Idaho, because it is free from drought, would have a very low premium. A county in Maryland or Ohio which is not subject to severe drought would also have very light premiums. On the other hand, a county in North Dakota or in western Kansas may have much higher premiums. In the studies that have been made it has been found that these premiums will vary all the way from one-tenth of a bushel per acre to 3 or 4 bushels. Because of this regional application of the law it would seem that the plan should appeal to all wheat farmers, although it is expected that the greater appeal would naturally be to the farmers in drought areas.

The bill provides for the authorization of an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the capital stock of the corporation. The reason for this appropriation is to cover possible excess of indemnities during the first few years of operation. In case one or more short crop seasons should occur immediately after the proposed law goes into effect, it would be necessary to have a fund with which to pay indemnities. If normal production throughout the country should prevail during these years, no part of the fund would be used; and if surplus years should exist, of course there would be an accumulation of wheat reserves. It is not likely, according to the Bureau of Crop Estimates, that a series of drought years will occur following the recent years of drought; but in case short years should follow the enactment of the law, a portion or all of this fund would be used. When good years do come, the reserves could be used to replace the funds used.

It may be interesting at this point to recall the experience of the United States Government with its war-risk insurance during the World War. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for a reserve in connection with that program. Cargoes and hulls of American ships were insured. From the first, premiums exceeded indemnities; and during the 4 years of operation the Government received $46,000,000 in premiums and paid out $29,000,000 in indemnities, leaving a profit of $17,000,000. The cost of administering this Bureau was $165,000, or less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the premiums collected. When one remembers that about 60 percent of the premiums in ordinary private insurance is used for operating expenses, it is seen that Government insurance in the war-risk experiment could not be charged with excessive costs of operation or with inefficiency.

I may say at that point that during the war the Government did obtain the services of very valuable actuaries and men experienced in insurance without paying them any compensation, and that this $165,000 is perhaps low for ordinary peacetime operations.

The bill also provides for an appropriation of $10,000,000 for administrative costs. It was the opinion of the committee appointed by the President to investigate crop insurance that these costs should be borne by the Government. They include the expense of storing the wheat. The premiums to be paid by the farmers will take care of the indemnities they receive. At once the question arises as to whether the Government should pay operating costs. It may be contended that the insurance program should carry itself, and that the premiums should be loaded with administrative expenses. In theory, this would certainly be a desirable condition; but the committees which have studied this insurance question are of the opinion that it is fair and reasonable to require the Government to assume this burden.

There are several reasons for this conclusion. In the first place, a service is rendered to the public in such a program. It gives the consumer some assurance of an adequate supply of wheat and of reasonable retail prices. It benefits not only the farmer but business generally. With the additional purchasing power of the farmer, it is clear that all lines of industry will benefit.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. There is not any doubt in the Senator's mind that this plan would somewhat increase the cost of bread, is there?

Mr. POPE. I will say to the Senator that I do not see how it would.

Mr. COPELAND. I have always taken the position in the Senate of enthusiastically supporting the McNary-Haugen bill through all its vicissitudes, but I always did it in full consciousness that any plan of crop conservation is sure to add to the cost of the product to the consumer. I do not resent that. I do not want the Senator to think I do. I have found my people, who are consumers, quite willing to bear their share of the expense of making it possible for people upon the farms to prosper. We are not wholly unselfish in the matter, because we know that we do not prosper unless they do. But, with full candor, I mean to say that in my opinion the plan, able as it is, would add somewhat to the cost of the product to the consumer.

Mr. POPE. That objection never has been raised upon any careful analysis of this plan. In the Brookings Institution analysis, which I regard as very critical and very careful, that objection was never suggested. It had not been suggested by anyone, and personally I can see no reason why it should be true. The mere fact that a certain amount of wheat is stored during surplus years and paid out during deficit years does not seem to me likely to affect the price of bread or affect the consumer substantially. If it did, the effect it might have on the price at one time might be offset by the effect on the price at another time. At any rate, that effect has not been suggested by anyone considering this matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. In the studies I have made of this subject I have realized that a plan of this kind—of crop insurance—is not calculated to elevate price levels. It prevents violent fluctuations, and thereby stabilizes income.

Mr. POPE. Exactly.

Mr. McNARY. Therefore, it would have no effect upon the consumers of the country.

Mr. POPE. The conclusion stated by the Senator from Oregon is exactly the conclusion that has been reached by those who have carefully studied the matter and analyzed it. It will not have any effect upon either raising or lowering the prices permanently, but it will prevent such violent fluctuation in prices as would otherwise exist, for the reason that I have already indicated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the plan does not contemplate any reduction in the production of the commodities insured but simply reimbursement or compensation in the event of loss?

Mr. POPE. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that under the plan such insurance would not increase the cost of the product itself any more than fire insurance increases the cost of building a house if subsequently the house should burn down. It is simply a form of insurance against loss.

Mr. POPE. I think that is a perfectly sound statement. In this measure we have sought to establish a plan upon a more nearly business basis than any other measure I know of during the time I have been in the Senate, and I have studied carefully the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the soil-conservation program. This measure really involves no element of charity. It is true that operating expenses are to be paid by the Government to begin with; but I wish to point out what I think is a very good reason for that, at least for the first few years of operation. The farmer pays his premium; he receives his indemnity; he pays for what he gets just as he does in any other insurance program.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. In the Senator's explanation he referred, for example, in the drought area of North Dakota to the risk being considerably greater and stated that the premiums paid might vary from a tenth of a bushel to probably 3 bushels an acre. Is it the general purpose of this bill so to aggregate the districts as to make them stand "on their own", so to speak, or to sort of level them off, distributing the risk over a larger area? I was interested in that particular phase of the bill, which I do not understand.

Mr. POPE. So far as the payment of premiums is concerned, as I have indicated, they will stand upon their own feet, based upon the average year over a period of years. So far as the actual payment of indemnity is concerned, it will be from a reserve, just as in the case of any insurance company. Those who are entitled to the indemnities will receive their wheat or their money equivalent. But what interests the farmer particularly is, first, the amount of his premium; and, second, will he receive his indemnity when he suffers loss? Both those questions have been considered and, I think, fairly worked out in this porgram.

Another reason exists for requiring the Government to appropriate $10,000,000 for the operating expenses of this program. For the past 10 years the United States Government has appropriated about $615,000,000 for necessary loans and grants to farmers. Seed loans, feed loans, drought relief, expenditures for insect pests and plant diseases, and flood-relief loans are all in this category. An average of more than $60,000,000 per annum has been appropriated for these purposes during the 10-year period.

It does not seem unreasonable that $10,000,000 be appropriated for accomplishing this program, when it is clear that a substantial portion of the relief appropriations will be eliminated by such a program. Almost every witness who testified before the subcommittee—and they constituted a considerable number—made the point that undoubtedly during deficit years, during dry years, the receipt of these indemnities will enable the farmer to take care of himself, where without such a program he would have to look to the Government for relief. It will be far better to appropriate money for the creation of a program which will enable the farmer to meet his own obligations and not subject him to some form of charity.

I think this point cannot be too strongly emphasized. In the other programs for agriculture there has been an element of charity involved. The payment of benefits under those programs may seem to many to be an outright gift or a bonus, but there is no element of that kind involved in this crop-insurance program.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. The Senator makes the point that this program will perhaps do away with a large number of the annual requests which are made for aid to agriculture. Assuming that the crop-insurance plan were to become the law of the land, there would remain little justification, would there not, for a request each year, as we have encountered it in the past, for seed loans for farmers? This plan would be expected in the future to wipe out the necessity for seed loans, would it not?

Mr. POPE. To a very large extent, if not entirely. Let me again refer to the point I made a few moments ago with reference to what under this plan would have been the situation in the Great Plains area, which includes North Dakota, for the years 1930 to 1936. During the years 1930 to 1933 there would have been accumulated some 72,000,000 bushels of wheat, which would have represented the excess of premiums over the indemnities paid. During the last 3 years, or from 1933 to 1936, those 72,000,000 bushels of wheat would have been distributed to the farmers, because the indemnities would have been that much greater than the premiums. Considering the price of the wheat paid in premiums from 1930 to 1933 and the value of the wheat from 1933 to 1936, there would have been a difference in the value of that wheat of around $35,000,000. The farmers in that region would have received that $35,000,000 during those 3 years. Therefore, considering the amount of money that has been actually appropriated for drought relief, one can see that perhaps the entire amount which has been so expended for drought relief would have been eliminated.

The most insistent question perhaps that has been raised about this plan——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. POPE. Is the Senator from Oregon desirous of interrupting me?

Mr. McNARY. I do not want to ask the Senator any question which will in any way destroy the continuity of his argument.

Mr. POPE. The Senator will not do so by asking questions.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator discussed the causes and reasons for which insurance contracts may be made?

Mr. POPE. I have not discussed them.

Mr. McNARY. They are found in section 7. If the Senator is going to discuss them, I shall wait until he reaches that point in his remarks.

Mr. POPE. No; I have not planned a detailed discussion of that provision in my prepared address, but I will be glad to answer any questions about it, so far as I can.

Mr. McNARY. I am very much interested in that phase of the bill because it seems to cover a wide field of causes, and yet, at the same time, appears to be restrictive and would give rise, I think, to differences of opinion.

Let me read from the bill. As originally drafted it provided for insuring against loss from "drought, flood, hail, wind, tornado, insect infestation, plant disease, and such other causes as may be determined by the board." The committee has inserted the words "unavoidable causes, including" and retained the words which I have read.

There is a rule of statutory construction, I think, that specific words following general words are related wholly to those similar in character and type, which raises the point in my mind that, outside the legalistic proposition, does the inclusion of the phrase "unavoidable causes" give any discretion to the board to insure against everything; and why were those words inserted at that point?

Mr. POPE. They were inserted for the reason that we felt we could not name specifically all the hazards that ought to be insured against. Therefore those specifically named, such as tornadoes, floods, hail, winter-kill, and the like, are included in the "unavoidable causes", but we found, upon consideration of the matter, there were some causes which ought to be insured against, perhaps, in one section of the country and not in another. Take the matter of forest fires, take the matter of fires from railroad engines, the matter of animals, cattle, or sheep getting into a field and damaging the crops. They may be matters which ought not in all cases to be insured against; the board ought to have some discretion, it seems, to cover such cases. The insured might have a perfectly good remedy, for instance, against a railroad company whose engines had destroyed his crop by fire; or a farmer might have a remedy in a case where, through the negligence of someone else, sheep or cattle got into his field and damaged his crop. So there are certain causes which involve the element of being avoidable or not avoidable, and therefore it seemed that with reference to some of those cases the board should have discretion as to covering them with insurance.

Mr. McNARY. Then, the specific enumerations are simply there for examples, and not as limitations?

Mr. POPE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And the words "unavoidable causes" are designed to include everything that might be coverable, in the opinion of the board? Is that the Senator's interpretation?

Mr. POPE. Yes; that is exactly the reason the amendment was adopted; the amendment was adopted in order to cover all unavoidable causes, including certain well-defined and well-recognized unavoidable causes, such as lightning and tornadoes and hail.

Mr. McNARY. When the committee were including specific causes, I wonder why they did not include grasshoppers, a subject which comes before us every year?

Mr. POPE. Grasshoppers are included in the provision with reference to insect pests.

Mr. McNARY. I assume they are, but I should like to have the name specifically used in the bill.

Mr. POPE. It is our intention to cover in the general term all insect pests such as grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and various other kinds.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In view of the question submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], I call attention to the fact that it was the testimony of Mr. Shumway, with whom the Senator from Oregon is acquainted, as to conditions in eastern Oregon, eastern Washington, and Idaho, that influenced the committee to act on the bill in this way. The testimony of Mr. Shumway showed that insofar as fire is concerned, the possibility of fire in our territory affecting wheat is much greater than it would be in other parts of the country because of the dryness of the wheat. It was, as a matter of fact, as a direct result of that testimony that the committee handled the matter in the way it did.

Mr. POPE. It must be recognized that certain hazards exist in certain sections of the country that do not exist in other sections. It was thought advisable to give the board some discretion in determining what policies should be written and what hazards covered in the different sections of the country. We sought to include in this specification those hazards which are recognized by everybody as being unavoidable. Some may be avoidable and others may be unavoidable.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. POPE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Did the Senator and his subcommittee give any consideration to the practical maximum of his product that a farmer should pay for this insurance?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. McNARY. For instance, I heard the Senator state a little while ago that the range ran from one-tenth of a bushel to 5 or 6 bushels per acre.

Mr. POPE. I said 3 or 4.

Mr. McNARY. Very well, 3 or 4. In some counties and in some sections of a State the average production would be only 8 or 10 bushels. It would be impossible for a farmer to try to protect himself by giving up one-third or one-half of his crop each year for fear he might suffer a loss. Has the Senator any statistics which indicate, considering the yield, what would be the limit to which a farmer could part with his crop in order to buy insurance and come within the provisions of a measure of this kind?

Mr. POPE. No; we have no information of that character. As I recall, there was nothing in the testimony to show how much a farmer could pay. The Senator will recall that a few moments ago I referred to the fact that two forms of policies might be written. The figure I gave the Senator for premiums was based on 75-percent coverage. A 50-percent coverage might be less than one-half the cost of a 75-percent coverage, so that a farmer might be able to buy a 50-percent coverage within his means whereas he would not be able to buy a 75-percent coverage within his means. That is a matter of administration, but I think perhaps it can be worked out.

The most insistent question, perhaps, that has been raised about this plan is whether the storage of substantial quantities of wheat, such as is contemplated in this bill, will be a constant threat to wheat prices on the market. The experience of the Farm Board is in everybody's mind. The effect of the acts of that Board in purchasing large quantities of farm commodities and placing them in storage is generally regarded as one of the reasons for the tobogganing of market prices.

Those who have devised this plan and drafted this bill have had that experience constantly in mind. It must be clear, however, that the principal reason why the Farm Board surpluses played havoc with prices was that they might be thrown upon the market at any time. The Farm Board had the power to do so. The very uncertainty of what might be done in this respect had a strong bearish effect.

With reference to the reserves to be created under this bill it is expressly provided that stored wheat cannot be placed on the market except by the payment of indemnities and, to a limited extent, by sale to prevent deterioration. In case wheat is sold to prevent deterioration, however, it is provided that it shall be promptly replaced with other wheat. There is no power in any body, in the Secretary of Agriculture, or the board of directors, or anybody else, to dump this wheat upon the market. It may be that the very existence of substantial quantities of wheat in storage may have a slight bearish effect, but it is believed that no such result as the Farm Board experienced will occur as a result of this law.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know that it is always appropriate for one to speak of a personal experience, but as long as the Senator is referring to the Farm Board I may say that I was chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in 1929 when that bill was passed under the Hoover administration. During the period of its operations, particularly through the stabilization corporation, somewhere between 250,000,000 and 300,000,000 bushels of wheat were acquired by the corporation. There was a constant threat from that fact. It did depress the market. During that period the Board spent large sums of money to peg the price at 70 cents a bushel.

Following that unfortunate event in our history I wrote a report on the Farm Board which I should be glad to have the Senator read, because it covers the very subject the Senator is now discussing. I am wholly in accord with him that that is not a fair comparison and a fair example.

Mr. POPE. I shall be glad to read the report to which the Senator refers. Some very helpful information that we had during the consideration of the bill was that which resulted from a hearing under the chairmanship of the Senator from Oregon in 1923. We had two or three of the same witnesses who testified at that time before his committee. One of the principal witnesses who so testified was a Mr. Vallgren. He testified before the Senator's committee and also before our committee. He has made a continuous study of the subject since that time and he approved of this program. In fact, he has been advising closely with the Department of Agriculture officials who had worked out the specific plan here. He thinks that such a plan will work.

It will be recalled that the Government has made cotton and corn loans, and these commodities were stored in large quantities. The Government in those cases had the power to place these commodities on the market. There were no limitations on their sale such as are contained in this bill. The policy pursued, however, was generally known, and sales were made in such a way as to damage market prices as little as possible. It is difficult to determine what effect the disposition of these surpluses actually had upon prices, but it is certain that prices generally rose during the period of these operations.

With the limitations contained in this bill it seems safe to say there will be no serious effect upon the market.

This plan will not be a substitute for any other agricultural measure now in operation. It will not conflict with the Soil Conservation Act, the resettlement program, or any tenancy legislation that may be enacted. It will supplement those measures. It will be integrated with them. It is the purpose to administer this law in conjunction with the soil conservation and domestic allotment program. It will probably be quite closely related to crop curtailment. The participation in crop insurance will be generally limited to those participating in the soil-conservation program. However, I may say that such a limitation has not been placed in the bill itself.

At first thought, it might appear that such an insurance program would tend to increase production and would be in contradiction to a policy of curtailment. It seems practical, however, that these programs be worked together.

When one considers other features of the bill, it appears that any tendency to increase production would be met by the provision that the average yield is not insured. Only a percentage—50 to 75 percent, it is estimated—of the crop will be insured. The farmer would have nothing to gain by unduly increasing his production. This situation would be like insuring an automobile for 50 or 75 percent of its value. There is no incentive, because of such insurance, to acquire other automobiles.

The plan contained in this bill has received a great deal of careful consideration. About a year ago I introduced a bill providing for insurance against unusual and extraordinary natural hazards to crops. About that time the Bureau of Agricultural Economics began a study of the subject. They began the collection of data from all possible sources. During the entire year since that time a group of competent men in that Bureau have continuously pursued this work.

In the latter part of September 1936 President Roosevelt appointed a committee composed of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce to study the problem in its fiscal and commercial as well as agricultural aspects, and to prepare recommendations for crop-insurance legislation. Three conferences to explore the problem were held by this committee on November 5, 6, and 7. One conference was held with a group of actuaries, another with warehousemen, and the third with representative farm leaders. In the conference with representatives of insurance companies, which have had experience with private crop insurance efforts, much valuable information and data were obtained and analyzed. In the conference with warehousemen it was learned that it will not be necessary to create additional warehouse facilities, and that in all probability substantially reduced rates may be obtained for the continuous storage necessary in carrying out the law. I may say that the warehousemen say it is thought that the Government may receive storage for one-half the commercial rate for the reason that there will be continuous storage, and it would be to the benefit of the warehousemen to grant reduced rates. Farm leaders expressed a deep interest in such a proposal, and explained that their organizations throughout the country have been studying the subject of crop insurance for some time.

On December 23 the President's committee reported, recommending a system of all-risk crop insurance, applying it first to wheat. The President has sent a message to the Congress urging the importance of this program. The recommendations of the President's committee and of the President himself have been substantially followed in this bill.

At the hearings held by the subcommittee, farmers from 12 wheat States appeared and unanimously supported the bill. They stated that of all the farm measures that have been presented to the Congress during this administration, this one has met with the most general and enthusiastic support. In fact, they said there is no division of opinion among the farmers on this bill, and they further said that that is a very unusual thing. Representatives of several insurance companies were heard by the subcommittee, and they also supported the measure. They stated quite frankly that they feel this is an undertaking for the Government; that it is too large for private capital. Even in the case of certain companies writing hail insurance, their attitude was one of cooperation.

Businessmen, bankers, warehousemen, and those engaged in other lines of industry generally support this bill. I am advised that even the secretary of the Chicago Board of Trade, in a statement to the press the other day, said he favored this measure.

Just yesterday I read that the United States Chamber of Commerce favors this measure. It is not difficult to understand why bankers and businessmen generally would be favorable. Undoubtedly, as expressed to me by the president of a large bank in my State, it would improve the credit of the insured farmer and furnish additional security to those who lend the farmer money. It would increase the purchasing power of the farmer who had suffered crop loss, which would be of benefit to all other lines of business.

Let me call attention to another very practical reason for urging this program. During the past 3 years the continued droughts of unprecedented severity in several Middle Western States have resulted in complete destitution and bankruptcy for a large percentage of the farmers in the area affected. Agencies of the Federal Government have extended various forms of relief to prevent actual suffering and starvation.

It is not the nature of American citizens to remain year after year in a place where they are unable to make a living. The same pioneering spirit which originally settled the country west of the Alleghenies impels those who have lost their incomes to move on to a new home and seek a new start in life. Last year the highways of the Western States were crowded with families moving west seeking new homes. In the State of Idaho alone there are more than 4,000 such families at the present time. Many other thousands have gone to Oregon, Washington, California, and other Western States.

These people stayed on their farms in the drought area until all hope was gone. They exhausted their financial resources, and gave up the battle only when faced with destitution and stark privation. These families are not of the ne'er-do-well type. They are solid, substantial citizens, willing and anxious to work, seeking only an opportunity to make a living. The free land in the West is gone, and they have no money with which to purchase farms; yet they cannot be permitted to starve. Something must be done for them. At the same time, the Government cannot go on supporting them year after year. The logical solution is to provide new tracts of farm land on which they may settle and prosper in the future.

The task of caring for transients from drought States who have migrated to the Pacific coast, however it is handled, will require the outlay of large sums by the Federal Government. In such cities as Twin Falls and Boise, in the State of Idaho, I have seen hundreds of destitute families who have migrated westward seeking homes. Many of them are living in hovels and shacks of their own construction, and suffering privations and inconveniences such as the United States Government never should permit any of its citizens to experience. Sooner or later public demand will force action in these Western States to provide homes for their increasing population.

If a program of Federal crop insurance had been in effect during the past 4 years, this condition would have been greatly alleviated. Families in the drought area whose insured crops were destroyed would have been reimbursed in indemnities from the insurance fund, requiring no outlay of taxpayers' money. If such families decided, as they have now determined, that they could not look forward to anything better, they then could move westward. If their crops had been insured, they would have had funds with which to move. They would have money with which to purchase new farms and to establish themselves in the communities of their choice in the West. Simply because these families had no protection against the droughts, for which they were in no way responsible, they were permitted to become destitute.

Finally, is this bill constitutional? The answer is, of course, that nobody knows.

If the language of the Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case that agriculture is a local matter, and its regulation is not within the constitutional powers of the Federal Government, were strictly followed, the authority conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture and the corporation created by this bill would be subject to grave doubt. It will be recalled that when the Soil Conservation Act was before the Senate, many Members of this body were of the opinion that the act was unconstitutional under the ruling in the Butler case. In fact, doubt was cast upon the constitutionality of the Department of Agriculture and all the acts of Congress which appropriated money for agricultural relief.

There are, of course, numerous examples of appropriations for relief of distress caused by such catastrophes as fires, famines, tornadoes, cyclones, floods, droughts, and the like. No tests have been made in the Supreme Court involving such statutes, for the reason that it is almost impossible for the taxpayer to question the expenditure of public funds for such purposes under the doctrine of Massachusetts v. Mellon (262 U. S. 447).

The character of spending under this bill does not seem to be different from that under many other acts of Congress. As before indicated, a vast amount of money has been spent for agricultural relief over a long period of years. If those acts could be upheld, it would seem clear that this bill is constitutional.

It is also believed that the power of Congress to enact this bill may be sustained under the fiscal power of the Federal Government. In the case of Smith v. Kansas Title & Trust Co. (255 U. S. 180), the Supreme Court upheld the Federal Farm Loan Act, which set up a rural credit system. In that case Chief Justice Hughes, then of counsel, wrote a very elaborate brief upholding the power of Congress to spend money for the benefit of agriculture in the interest of the national welfare. The Court refused to pass upon the scope of the general-welfare clause, but the law was sustained on the very narrow ground that the corporation making the loans was authorized to act as a depository of Federal funds. Very frankly, section 11 of the present bill, which provides that the crop insurance corporation is authorized to act as a depository of Federal funds, was inserted for the purpose of conforming to that decision of the Supreme Court.

It is interesting to note that in that case it was urged that such a provision was nothing but a pretext. The Court held, however, that—

> Nothing is better settled by the decisions of this Court than that when Congress acts within the limitation of its constitutional authority, it is not the province of the judicial branch of the Government to question its motives.

This decision was rendered some 15 years ago, and recent decisions of the Court have cast doubt upon the principle of constitutional construction as to the province of the Court as laid down in that case.

It can be further argued that this bill is a proper exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce. The testimony at the hearings showed that in good years wheat will sometimes flow across State lines into warehouses in payment of premiums, and in bad years it will flow from the warehouses back to the producers in payment of indemnities. It may be said that wheat thus transported is in the current of interstate commerce. In view of recent decisions of the Supreme Court, however, this would certainly be weak ground upon which to attempt to uphold the constitutionality of this measure. It is firmly believed, however, by myself and others who have drafted the proposed legislation, that it is constitutional, and it is our hope that the Supreme Court will uphold it.

Certainly, we feel justified in continuing our efforts for legislation that will be of benefit to agriculture even though we are harassed with doubt as to what the Supreme Court will do with it.

I have referred to a most careful and critical analysis of this plan by the Brookings Institution. The difficulties of administration have been pointed out, the principles involved carefully analyzed, and a conclusion reached which is expressed in this language:

> Owing to peculiarities in the nature of the farming business, it has not been possible to put crop insurance on a commercial basis in spite of several experiments in this direction by our largest insurance companies. This leaves the farmer exposed to hazards which other businessmen have been able to mitigate. We believe that the possibilities of crop insurance under Government auspices should be fully explored and vigorously experimented with.

Mr. President, I have attempted to discuss fully and frankly the essential provisions of the measure now before the Senate. To my mind crop insurance carries a strong humanitarian appeal as one of the means of improving the condition of the farmer, which means the improvement of our whole economic life. It means the making of life more abundant, and consistent with the abundancy of the national resources with which our Nation has been endowed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POPE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There has been considerable discussion in the latter part of the Senator's argument concerning the constitutionality of the bill. In view of the fact that we this week received from the Chief Justice an advisory opinion on a matter not before the Congress, I was wondering whether it would not be proper for us now to ask for an advisory opinion on a matter which we actually have before us.

Mr. POPE. It would be a source of very great relief to those who are preparing legislation if an advisory opinion could be obtained before the legislation goes into effect, and not put the taxpayers to the expense of paying for elaborate machinery to put into operation a law such as this measure and then find, 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 years later, that it was invalid and unconstitutional. I know everyone feels that if it were possible to obtain an advisory opinion upon this legislation, it would be very helpful.

I might suggest to the Senator that in spite of the fact that an advisory opinion has been given by the Chief Justice on a question not before the Congress or the Court, there is a long line of decisions holding invalid the practice of rendering advisory opinions. Even if we were successful in obtaining the advisory opinion now suggested, the opinion itself would probably be unconstitutional.

NOMINATIONS OF MEMBERS OF MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am sure that those who have heard and those who will read the address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] will be grateful to him for the very able, comprehensive, and constructive explanation he has given of the measure pending before the Senate.

At the request of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], I wish to make a very brief statement for the RECORD. Earlier in the day, during legislative session, he sought to submit reports from the Committee on Commerce on the nominations to the Maritime Commission. The reports were objected to by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

It had been thought there would be an executive session later in the day for the purpose of considering any business on the Executive Calendar. Such a session will not be held.

The Senator from New York asked me to state that, in view of the objection of the Senator from Alabama, and in view of his opposition to the confirmation of certain of the nominations to the Maritime Commission upon which the Senator from New York had been instructed to make a favorable report, he is willing that the nominations be held in the Committee on Commerce until next week in order to give the Senator from Alabama an opportunity to appear before the committee if he desires so to do.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Robert Lee Williams, of Oklahoma, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, vice George T. McDermott, deceased, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 29, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 25, 1937

JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

Robert Lee Williams, of Oklahoma, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, vice George T. McDermott, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Edward A. Duff, captain, Chaplain Corps, United States Navy, Chief of Chaplains, offered the following prayer:

I read Washington's prayer for the United States of America. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

"Almighty God, we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection. That Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government and entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another and for their fellow citizens of the United States at large.

"And finally that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the divine Author of our blessed religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example, in these things, we can never hope to be a happy nation.

"Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill (H. R. 6) to authorize the construction and use of underground pneumatic-tube service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by a very distinguished judge from my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on Monday next after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

INCOME-TAX RETURNS

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, this morning we received a special invitation to come over and hear the prayer that was offered, and I think it was a very fine one. May I say that each day a prayer is offered in the House, and I believe it would do every Member of the House some good if they attended at the appointed hour of prayer. And the Speaker might do a good turn to all Members if he would invite them to be present at the opening of each session of the House to hear our dear Chaplain pray to Almighty God for the Congress; they need this inspiration.

I have been trying to secure time to address the House for the past week or more and it has been rather difficult for me to secure it. After I was granted the time many newspaper reporters asked me what I was going to talk about and I could not make up my mind because there are so many things we ought to discuss here in the House of Representatives for the good of America. It has therefore been quite difficult for me to come to a decision in reference to that matter.

CONGRESSIONAL ETIQUETTE

You know there is a custom prevailing today insofar as what we call medical etiquette is concerned. If you employ one doctor to attend you, and then have another doctor come in to see you without giving the first physician formal notice, he becomes quite vexed and does not like it at all. The same etiquette prevails in connection with the legal profession. If you employ one lawyer in a case and then consult another one, which should be your right, you are chastised and criticized by the former lawyer because you have secured information from another lawyer without talking to the first one. Then there is what I have learned about the last 5 or 6 years, congressional etiquette.

Mr. Speaker, this congressional etiquette is something that has me somewhat perplexed and I am embarrassed many times when I say things that naturally reflect on the Members of Congress. I do not endeavor to say anything that reflects on individual Members of Congress nor their integrity, but I do say things that some of the Members do not like about the poor laws we pass and the unbusinesslike things we do. I am a good bit like the man who says: "I do not agree with what the other man says, but I agree that he ought to have the right to say it", and I shall defend that right. That is American liberty, so long as he does obey our laws.

I think that is our right and privilege as a Member of the House of Representatives. The other day I criticized the laws that were enacted and put on the statute books last year, especially the one that caused the Treasury Department to get up a rather complicated income-tax return. I think it is the responsibility of Congress, because they passed the laws which require the Treasury Department to formulate these complicated returns. However, certain Members of Congress came to me afterward and said, "You must not criticize the Congress in that regard. Criticize the Treasury Department. They are responsible for these returns."

Mr. Speaker, I must differ with other Members of Congress on that score, because the Treasury Department is charged with the duty of formulating returns that are in accordance with the law. If we enact laws that are difficult to administer, then it is not the fault of the Treasury Department. It is the fault of Congress. Therefore it is my pleasure to protect Mr. Morgenthau and the Treasury Department in this respect. I have received many complaints.

SIMPLIFIED TAX RETURNS

Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of the Members of Congress to enact laws that the ordinary, average citizen back home may understand. It is our duty to enact laws so that when the Treasury Department makes up an income-tax return in accordance therewith the people back home may understand how to make out the return without being surrounded by a lot of Government officials to assist in doing something that the average intelligent citizen should be able to do himself, or being compelled to hire tax experts to report to the Government what his income was for a certain year. I have received many complaints about the complicated returns, and I hope the Ways and Means Committee will simplify the law so the returns can be understandable by the average intelligent citizen. I quote from a citizen from West Virginia regarding the tax returns, and can supply many more just about the same sentiment:

Personally I pay a good amount of Federal taxes. I have paid money and spent time in trying to get my reports correct. Notwithstanding all of this, revenue inspectors also spend considerable time in rechecking, all of which cause the taxpayer trouble, time, and expense. The ordinary businessman (personally speaking) wants to do business and continue in business but he is unable to keep up with the revenue laws governing his business. He is discouraged and prefers to quit business rather than to continue under present conditions, especially so when there are so many complicated, misunderstood reports, laws, rulings, and taxes governing his business.

This is all I am going to say about congressional etiquette. But I claim the right to criticize when criticism is justified.

I might talk about the sit-down strike. Thank goodness, the President of the United States is coming back here on Monday from his rest and sit-down and meet the leaders of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Mr. Speaker, the President will no doubt call you into this conference on Monday to talk about the sit-down strikes, and he will call in the majority leader. When you get together you can make up your minds to one thing, remembering you have taken an oath to support the laws of the United States, that the laws of the United States do not permit sit-down strikes and the confiscation of another's property, whether it be his factory, his farm, or his home, without due process of law. I congratulate the President of the United States, and I hope when he calls you together you will do your duty. We wish him every success in preventing any more unlawful sit-down strikes.

SPEND LESS—TAX MORE—OR BUST

However, this was not the object of my speech today. On last Tuesday I addressed the House on "spend less, tax more, or bust." I talked on the "spend less" on all the time I was allowed. It seems to have awakened some of the Members of Congress on the Democratic side of the House. It is one of our serious questions of government today. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] took the floor Tuesday and told you about the enormous expenditure of Government funds; and my good and genial friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has asked for time to speak to the Members of the House next Tuesday. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is the administration spokesman for the Appropriations Committee, and there is no finer speaker or finer gentleman in the House of Representatives. [Applause.] I know if the Members of the House of Representatives listen to Mr. WOODRUM Tuesday they will hear him talk about economy in government. And it is about time some great Democrat realizes it.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I shall be pleased to yield to any Member on the floor if he will get me additional time after my 15 minutes has expired; but I cannot yield now.

We must not continue the present extravagance in Government, as we are heading for ruin. We will wreck the financial structure of the Government. The stability of our Government is being shaken. Why, five issues of Government bonds sold below par in one day last week.

Last Tuesday I gave considerable data with reference to our spending. I want to recite some things which have happened in the last few years in regard to our taxation. In 1933 the income of this Government from taxation was $1,855,000,000. In 1934 it was $2,954,000,000. In 1935 it was $3,621,000,000. In 1936 it was $3,899,600,000. You will note that in 1936 it increased over 100 percent above what it was in 1933, a great increase. The reason for the increase is we have put so many tax laws into effect the people of this country had to pay this additional amount. One of the great tax burdens we placed on the people of this country last year in one of the most iniquitous tax bills the country has ever seen was the tax on the undistributed incomes of corporations.

We all know the income the Government was supposed to receive from the income-tax returns as of March 15 fell short of the anticipated amount by about $150,000,000. It has not measured up to the expectations of the authors of the bill. Not only are the taxes falling short of what was expected, but the greatest damage lies in the fact many, many corporations in this country have been put in jeopardy of financial disaster by not increasing surplus out of earnings; if for any reason we ever go into another depression, it will be just too bad, for the corporations cannot pay dividends then unless they have earnings; the dividends they paid during the depression was a godsend to America and to those who owned the stock of corporations who paid dividends. If you cut the corporation out of surpluses, you will not only lose the dividends in time of depression but you will wreck the corporations. Much could be said on this subject alone. This danger of tearing down the structure of American business enterprises is the greatest damage resulting from the tax on undistributed surplus, and if there is one thing above all else this Congress should do it is to reconstruct the tax bill of 1936.

I believe firmly in the income tax. I think the more a man earns the more he ought to pay. I think with the income tax and the inheritance taxes which we can impose and have imposed we ought to regulate pretty well how much a man should earn and how much of this world's goods he should accumulate during his lifetime.

There is nothing which will do the people of this country more good than to work and save. This has been the theory I have always been taught by my father, and thank God, I had a father who taught me to work hard, work long hours, and then save a part of what I earned. This theory was good when I was a boy, and I am firmly convinced it is good today more than ever in the history of our Nation.

In the past 4 or 5 years we in Congress have been trying to make people believe they ought to get all the world's goods, they ought to have everything they need, and yet have to do nothing to get it. We must stop that kind of preaching. That will wreck any government or any nation, and surely it will wreck the people in it and make them a nation of dependents on their government rather than a nation of people who support and maintain their government.

NEW TAXES YOU HAVE IMPOSED

We had the A. A. A. tax of 1933, the N. I. R. A. tax of 1933, the non-intoxicating-liquor tax of 1933, the Railroad Retirement Act tax of 1934, the Bankhead Cotton Act tax of 1934, the Revenue Act tax of 1934, the liquor tax of 1934, the Revenue Act tax of 1935, the Social Security Act tax of 1935, the Railroad Retirement Act tax of 1935, the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Act tax of 1935, the Potato Control Act tax of 1935, and the Revenue Act tax of 1936.

I have spoken of the Revenue Act tax of 1936, and if I thought I had sufficient time I should like to dwell on that further, but I am afraid my time will not permit.

Let us see what the corporation had in the way of payment of income tax.

They have the capital-stock tax imposed by the Federal Government, the corporate-loan tax imposed by the Federal Government, and they have the social-security tax. Then they have their State income tax, and in the State of Pennsylvania this amounts to 10 percent on the income.

They also have their State capital-stock tax and local taxes, such as county, borough, and city taxes, as well as State social-security taxes and others. When you think of the taxes imposed on corporations, you realize that we have left the wrong impression with the people of this country as to the effect of taxes on corporations. Claiming the corporations pay the tax—do not think you can fool the public long on that. Those who do not pay income taxes must pay outgo taxes, and the outgo taxes of this country are 10 times the amount of the income taxes. Outgo taxes are concealed taxes—you pay by proxy. Thus, the taxes assessed on corporations are reflected in every item you buy; the corporations must and do pass them on in the price of the commodities they sell in increased cost. Do not anyone be fooled on that. All corporation taxes except income are passed on to the consumer by increasing the cost of your bread and butter; the increased cost of gasoline, oil, and automobiles; shoes and shirts; the increased cost of your dresses, neckties, face powder, clothes, and so forth—everything you buy to eat and wear and use.

I am not advocating increased taxes, Mr. Speaker, but I am trying to show how the small-salaried man pays more in proportion when you compare his small $1,200 income to the income of the man who makes $25,000. The smaller the income a man has, the greater proportionate share he pays to support our extravagant Government. I am advocating, however, the reduction of our spending spree in Government. What the President has said about taxes, I agree to these quotations 100 percent; and when he is right I like to give him credit, but when he is wrong I am just as glad to criticize him or any other individual.

Here is the President's tax statement—and I quote:

PRESIDENT ABOUT TAXES

Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors. * * * If excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence, in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in increased cost of what they buy, or (as now) in broad cessation of employment. * * * Our people and our business cannot carry its excessive burdens of taxation * * *. (Franklin D. Roosevelt, Pittsburgh, Oct. 19, 1932.)

I shall use this position of high responsibility to discuss up and down the country, at all seasons, at all times, the duty of reducing taxes, of increasing the efficiency of Government, of cutting out the underbrush around our governmental structure, of getting the most public service for every dollar paid by taxation. This I pledge you; and nothing I have said in the campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of this country. (Franklin D. Roosevelt, Sioux City, Sept. 29, 1932.)

Now, Mr. President, why do you not help the poor man, stop the enormous spending of government; consolidate the departments, thus cut down Government overhead; and, Mr. President, do one more thing:

PAYMENT OF FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. President, ask the foreign countries, who owe us over $22,000,000,000, to start payment of their honest debts to us rather than spending so much for war. Great Britain owes us over $11,000,000,000; France over $6,000,000,000; Italy over $2,000,000,000; Poland over $435,000,000; Belgium over seven hundred and twenty-seven million, and other countries are included in our list of debtors; and the interest rate varies from four-tenths of 1 percent in the case of Italy, to 3.3 percent in the case of Great Britain.

Mr. President, collect our debts, spend less, and you can reduce instead of increase taxes, which bear heaviest on the poor. And, in closing, let me quote to you from that great Democrat, because this is the most extravagant administration in our Nation's history:

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

I am for a government rigorously frugal and simple, applying all the possible savings of the public revenue to the discharge of the national debt; and not for a multiplication of officers and salaries merely to make partisans, and for increasing, by every device, the public debt, on the principle of its being a public blessing. (Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Eldridge Gerry, Jan. 26, 1799.)

Mr. Speaker, again I say, spend less, tax more, or bust.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ANTILYNCHING BILLS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement on a matter which I think is of interest to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that beginning on next Wednesday the Committee on the Judiciary will conduct hearings on the antilynching bills that are pending before the committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a memorial resolution and a radio address which I delivered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] for 30 minutes.

THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, a great deal is being said about the Supreme Court and the pending bill for judicial reform. Members of the House and of the Senate have been deluged with communications, ranging from the temperate to the torrid zone of propaganda, against the judiciary bill.

I am free to say that I have not been able to get greatly excited over the commotion that has been raised in certain quarters over the President's plan to enable the Supreme Court Judges to retire on full pay at a certain age, and to give some of the superannuated Judges some assistance in the way of fresher blood—call it a transfusion if you will—in their laborious researches and in the study of the cases that come before them.

I am filled with wonder and amazement at the hysterical lengths to which public men—men of reason and common sense—have allowed themselves to be led in the discussion of this subject.

SUPREME COURT AN ISSUE IN THE CAMPAIGN

It is being repeatedly stated—on the floor of this House, in editorials in the newspaper chains, over the radio, and in the flood of propaganda letters that are now cluttering up the mail boxes—that the people have given no verdict on this Supreme Court question; that it was not made an issue in the last Presidential campaign. That argument is on a par with the other stock argument that we are trying to destroy the Constitution, and is just about as silly and inane. I say it was an issue in the campaign. It was the paramount issue. The people themselves, who had been made the victims of the Court's adverse decisions, made it an issue. The opposition challenged the issue, and made it a subject of public debate. From the town halls of the great agricultural sections to the gilded palaces of the Liberty Leaguers, we never heard a political speech made by a representative of the old guard of monopoly and special privileges, nor read a political editorial in the partisan press, that did not point with pride to the decisions of the Supreme Court against the recovery measures.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM IN ALTERNATIVE

Let me read you the plank of the Democratic platform of 1936 that the opposition are trying to twist into a mandate for amendment to the Constitution. Here it is:

The Republican platform proposes to meet any pressing national problems solely by action of the separate States. We know that drought, dust storms, floods, minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, and working conditions in industry, monopolistic and unfair business practices cannot be adequately handled exclusively by 48 separate State legislatures, 48 separate State administrations, and 48 separate State courts. Transactions and activities which inevitably overflow State boundaries call for both State and Federal treatment.

Now, listen to this. The Democratic plank continues:

We have sought and will continue to seek to meet these problems through legislation within the Constitution.

If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution we shall seek such clarifying amendment as will assure to the legislatures of the several States and to the Congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the State and Federal legislatures, within their respective spheres, shall find necessary in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety, and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

Here we have an alternative question upon which that campaign was fought, an issue that was widely discussed. First, the Democratic platform pledged itself to meet the situation created by the adverse Supreme Court decisions through measures within the Constitution as it stands and to maintain the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. We believed, and so stated, that we had been at all times within the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. One decisive member of the Supreme Court thought and wrote otherwise in three of the most vital pieces of legislation enacted to carry into effect the needed reforms. Minority members of that Court believed that we were right and that the majority of the Court was wrong in those decisions.

We had a right to assume and to pledge the people that we would seek, first and foremost, to remedy the situation without recourse to amendments. We placed that issue before the people. But, the platform continued, if that way should not be open, then we pledged that we would, as a last resort, seek to amend the Constitution to prevent nullification of the reform laws in the future.

That whole question was argued out in every State of this Union. The decisions of the Supreme Court were talked about and deplored and attacked as unfair interpretations of the law. The issue, in its alternative form, to proceed within the Constitution, if possible, or by amendment, if necessary, was fairly and fully presented to the electorate, and the 27,000,000 votes and the 46 States that returned President Roosevelt to the Presidency was a warrant and a mandate from the people to deal with the problem by their platform alternatives.

PRESIDENT WITHIN CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

The President chose the direct route of reforming the source of all the trouble—the Supreme Court—and there is not one opponent of his plan who can constitutionally challenge his right to do so. They may impugn his motives, as they are doing, but they cannot question that he is within his constitutional rights and that he is acting in accordance with the overwhelming mandate of the people who approved his course and elected him to carry on his recovery program along the same lines.

It would have been just the same, as far as the opposition are concerned, if the President had decided to submit an amendment to the Constitution. I am satisfied they would have raised the usual cry that he was seeking to undermine the Constitution, to destroy our civil liberties. In fact, they did say those very things during the campaign when an amendment was talked about; and now they are shouting themselves hoarse for the amendment route.

THE VOICE OF HAMILTON

Here we have a recurrence of the old Hamiltonian doctrine that the people are not to be trusted. Time and again, in the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention, Hamilton voiced his distrust of the people. In one of his speeches before that body he stated:

I frankly acknowledge that I do not think favorably of a republican form of government, but I am addressing my remarks to those who do think favorably of it, in order to prevail on them to tone their government as high as possible.

In fact, if it had been left to Hamilton, we would have had a government toned so high that the people would have had very little to say about it; it would have been a government as autocratic, as arbitrary, and as far removed from the approval or disapproval of the people as the judicial branch of it is today. And it is Hamilton's voice we are hearing when we hear the opponents of the judicial program saying that we must shut our ears to the verdict rendered so overwhelmingly in the late election.

LANGUAGE OF CONSTITUTION UNEQUIVOCAL

Now, I want to say a few things in my own way about this Supreme Court question. I will begin by saying that I have great respect for the Constitution. I think the men who wrote it wrote a great document of human liberty, a great charter of free government. Yes; I will go that far and farther; I will say that the framers of the Constitution meant every word they wrote into it. They meant that "public welfare" meant public welfare, and not private welfare. They meant that this Government should be composed of three separate and distinct branches—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. They meant what they said when they outlined the duties and the prerogatives of each of those branches. They jealously and exactly defined the powers of each branch. They gave no hint that the American people were to give ordinary respect to the legislative and the executive branches, but to the Supreme Court some extraordinary species of respect amounting almost to religious worship.

The framers of the Constitution knew that the men who were to function in the three departments of government were ordinary human beings, none of them infallible, all of them subject to human faults and human prejudices. And there was not a word in that Constitution, nor an utterance from those Constitution makers, that could be construed into an intention to set the Supreme Court in a niche aside, as in a sort of Buddha temple, where one must kowtow before entering, with reverent awe. It was to be an American court, made up of American citizens, to administer justice in accordance with American principles of government and American traditions of liberty, freedom, and public welfare.

I prefer to take my stand on this age-long question of the judiciary with the man who wrote the declaration of our independence, with the man who visioned the great development of this country from ocean to ocean, with that great statesman whose devotion to American freedom and civil liberty was never questioned. Needless to say, I refer to Thomas Jefferson, whose principles of democracy were grounded in the very bedrock of the revolution that shook the Old World traditions from our shoulders.

JUDICIAL DICTATORSHIP FORESEEN

As far back as 1810 Jefferson foresaw the danger of a judicial dictatorship. When the power of the judiciary to annul the will of the people was assumed and used by Chief Justice Marshall, Jefferson wrote to President Madison:

His (John Marshall's) twistifications in the case of Marbury, in that of Burr, and the Yazoo case show how dexterously he can reconcile law to his personal biases.

Let me quote a few more utterances of Jefferson's on the subject of the Federal judiciary.

In 1819 he wrote to Judge Spencer Roane:

The Constitution * * * is a mere thing of wax in the hands of the judiciary, which they may twist and shape into any form they please.

In the course of his debates with Stephen A. Douglas, Abraham Lincoln quoted from Jefferson as follows:

Our judges are as honest as other men, and not more so. They have, with others, the same passions for party, for power, and the privilege of their corps. Their maxim is, "boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem" (it is the part of a good judge to amplify jurisdiction); and their power is the more dangerous, as they are in office for life, and not responsible, as the other functionaries are, to the elective control.

In 1820, referring to opinions of the Federal judiciary, Jefferson wrote to Thomas Ritchie:

An opinion is huddled up in conclave, perhaps by a majority of one, delivered as if unanimous, and with the silent acquiescence of lazy or timid associates, by a crafty chief judge, who sophisticates the law to his mind, by the turn of his own reasoning.

Thus we see that opinions by a majority of one are not new. They were rendered in Jefferson's time, and he foresaw and warned us of the dangers of such opinions "huddled up in conclave."

In 1823 he wrote to A. Coray:

At the establishment of our Constitutions the judiciary bodies were supposed to be the most helpless and harmless members of the Government. Experience, however, soon showed in what way they were to become the most dangerous; that the insufficiency of the means provided for their removal gave them a freehold and irresponsibility in office; that their decisions, seeming to concern individual suitors only, pass silent and unheeded by the public at large; that these decisions, nevertheless, become law by precedent, sapping, by little and little, the foundations of the Constitution, and working its change by construction, before anyone has perceived that that invisible and helpless worm has been busily employed in consuming its substance.

Then in 1825 Jefferson wrote to Edward Livingston:

One single object, if your provision attains it, will entitle you to the endless gratitude of society, that of restraining judges from usurping legislation. And with no body of men is this restraining more wanting than with the judges of what is commonly called our general government, but what I call our foreign department. They are practicing on the Constitution by inference, analogies, and sophisms as they would on an ordinary law.

Of course, what Jefferson implied, when he referred to the judiciary as the "foreign" department of our Government, was that it was foreign to the rights of the people.

THE DRED SCOTT DECISION

We must not forget that it was a Supreme Court decision—in the Dred Scott case—which in reality precipitated the War between the States. That decision, delivered by Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney in 1857, with the majority of the Court concurring, declared the Missouri Compromise Act of March 1820 unconstitutional and void. Thus an act of Congress was invalidated by the Supreme Court 37 years after its enactment, and as a result thereof this country was plunged into the bloodiest conflict it has ever known. It was in connection with this decision that Abraham Lincoln made the statement that it would be better that we destroy the Supreme Court than to permit that Court to destroy this Republic.

The opponents of the program for judicial reform are not overlooking any opportunity to present to the public their side of the controversy. Anyone who is known at all, or who has ever held public office, is called into service and is given wide publicity if he will just raise his voice against the plan.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION OF 1877

A few days ago I read in a local paper an account of a speech made in Philadelphia by former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper. The former Senator was quoted as having referred to the decision of the Electoral Commission which declared Hayes elected President as an argument in favor of close judicial decisions.

To my mind, the decision of that commission illustrates perfectly another instance when a Supreme Court Judge was called upon to defeat the will of the people.

I do not think many of us have forgotten Samuel J. Tilden, that great New York Democrat who defeated Rutherford B. Hayes for the Presidency in 1876. The Electoral Commission threw out the votes of Democratic precincts in Louisiana, South Carolina, Oregon, and Florida and gave the electoral votes of those States to Hayes.

Let us recall our history for a moment.

When Congress met after the disputed election of 1876, it passed (January 1877) the Electoral Commission Act "to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon."

As was said by James Ford Rhodes in his History of the United States:

The paramount motive of the members of the Senate and House committees and of the Senators and Representatives who voted for the bill was patrotism and the desire to quiet the passions in the country. * * * The Democrats felt so sure of the rightfulness of their cause, especially in Louisiana, that they were ready to submit it to any fair tribunal of arbitration.

Under the act the Electoral Commission was to be constituted of five Members of the Senate, five Members of the House, and five Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. The act specified that the Associate Justices assigned to the first, third, eighth, and ninth circuits should serve on the Commission, and that those four should select another of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court for the fifteenth member of the Commission.

The Senate chose as its members of the Electoral Commission George F. Edmunds, of Vermont; Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana; and Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, Republicans, and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, and Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware, Democrats.

The House appointed as its members Henry B. Payne, of Ohio; Eppa Hunton, of Virginia; and Josiah G. Abbott, of Massachusetts, Democrats; and George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, and James A. Garfield, of Ohio, Republicans.

BRADLEY NAMED "IMPARTIAL ARBITER"

The four Associate Justices of the circuits specified in the act were Nathan Clifford (Democrat), William Strong (Republican), Samuel F. Miller (Republican), and Stephen J. Field (Democrat). These four Justices selected as the fifteenth member of the Commission—the decisive umpire—Joseph P. Bradley. This Supreme Court Justice, Bradley, "was expected to sink all political bias and be an impartial arbiter while his brothers on the bench had been chosen because of their political predilections."

Now, let us see what happened.

By uniform votes of 8 to 7, Bradley casting the decisive vote, the Electoral Commission decided all objections to the electoral votes of Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Oregon, in favor of the Republicans, and the final result was declared to be 185 electors for Hayes and Wheeler to 184 for Tilden and Hendricks.

Bradley failed entirely in his role as an "impartial arbiter." Instead, it might well be said that he became the most partisan member of that Commission.

The following quotations, taken from Rhodes' History of the United States, indicate the reaction to the Commission's decision:

The Democrats were grievously disappointed at the decision of the Commission in the case of Florida, and after Louisiana had been counted for Hayes, they were sore and angry. They felt that they were being cheated out of the fairly won presidency; but the Democratic Senators and two-thirds of the Democratic Members of the House made it evident that they would abide loyally by the award.

Further, Mr. Rhodes said:

Of all those connected with the great lawsuit, Bradley occupied the most responsible position; and owing to the "deep-seated feeling of injury" and "keen sense of wrong" on the part of the Democrats has not escaped calumny. One charge was that "after preparing a written opinion in favor of the Tilden electors in the Florida case" he changed his views "during the night preceding the vote in consequence of pressure brought to bear upon him by Republican politicians and Pacific Railroad men, whose carriages it was said surrounded his house during the evening." * * * Another story was that when Bradley was wavering, Miller with partisan argument and overbearing disposition brought him to his (Miller's) own view by urging that he was the trustee for 4,000,000 Republican voters and must prove worthy of the trust.

SWAYED BY POLITICAL PASSIONS

The man who made the charge of vacillation against Bradley was his Associate Justice, Stephen J. Field. I am not unaware of the fact that after the trouble was all over and Tilden robbed of the election by the vote of Justice Bradley, Justice Field said that, in stating that Justice Bradley had changed his mind, he did not mean to infer anything derogatory to Justice Bradley's "honor or integrity."

That was a fine piece of judicial courtesy; but you will take notice that Justice Field did not take back the charge that Bradley had changed his mind overnight. And you can further read in the history of those times just what occurred during that night of Bradley indecision. Hundreds of carriages, we are told, surrounded his house that night, and a swarm of visiting statesmen of his party rang his door bell, and every big railroad attorney and railroad president in the country, and even some of his Republican associates on the bench, were warning him that he held the fate of the Republican Party and 4,000,000 Republicans in his hand.

Bradley should have realized that in addition to the 4,000,000 Republicans there were 4,300,000 Democrats—constituting a majority of all the votes cast at that election—who were depending upon him to serve as their trustee. As a Supreme Court Justice selected as a nonpartisan, it was believed he would be absolutely fair, and that he would cast aside his "passions for party" and decide according to the evidence, but he failed utterly. His party, not his conscience, was his guide.

In the light of that historic event, well may we talk of a body "toned high above party clamor" and clothed with the vested right to "make the Constitution what the Supreme Court says it is." No wonder we seem to hear again the voice of Jefferson warning us across the years that:

It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the constitution of the Federal judiciary, an irrepressible body, working like gravity by night and day, gaining a little today and a little tomorrow, and advancing its noiseless steps over the fields of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped from the State and Government and all be consolidated into one. * * * There is no danger I apprehend so much as the consolidation of our Government by the noiseless and therefore unalarming instrumentality of the Supreme Court.

"IMPLIED POWERS" ASSUMED BY COURT

What has that citadel of infallibility, the Supreme Court, ever done to help carry out the ideals of the founders of our Government? I have said that a Chief Justice—John Marshall—was the first to write an opinion declaring that the Constitution did not mean exactly what it said; that "implied powers" could be read into it.

And you know, and I know, that that decision opened wide the gates in this country for corporation control of industry. The big business combinations grew and expanded; they became the privileged industries; they controlled elections; they grew more and more powerful under protective legislation, and soon the country passed into that era of the trusts and big combinations, when the big banks and the big railroads and the big industries were linked together in their interests and manipulating the powers of government to subserve those interests.

THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW

So great was the menace of those sinister influences that at last, in 1889, John Sherman, a fearless statesman, framed his antitrust bill. It was entitled, "A bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production." That bill was debated in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives for a period of some 5 months. Finally it was passed by both Houses of Congress and was approved by President Harrison on July 2, 1890.

Let us look briefly into the character of men who were in the Congress of the United States when this measure was debated and passed. In the Senate there were such men as John Sherman, of Ohio; George Frisbie Hoar, of Massachusetts; George Franklin Edmunds, of Vermont; George Graham Vest and Francis Marion Cockrell, of Missouri; John James Ingalls and Preston B. Plumb, of Kansas; John H. Reagan, of Texas; James Z. George, of Mississippi; and many other great men of that period.

In the House there were Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, Speaker; Richard P. "Silver Dick" Bland and William J. Stone, of Missouri; John H. Bankhead and Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama; Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, who later became Speaker of the House; Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts; John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania; William McKinley, Jr., of Ohio, later President of the United States; Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin; David B. Henderson, of Iowa; and many other eminent statesmen.

In discussing the trust evil in the Senate on March 21, 1890, Senator John Sherman said:

Sir, now the people of the United States, as well as of other countries, are feeling the power and grasp of these combinations, and are demanding of every legislature and of Congress a remedy for this evil, only grown into huge proportions in recent times. They had monopolies and mortmains of old, but never before such giants as in our day. You must heed their appeal or be ready for the Socialist, the Communist, and the Nihilist. Society is now disturbed by forces never felt before.

The popular mind is agitated with problems that may disturb social order, and among them all none is more threatening than the inequality of condition, of wealth, and opportunity that has grown within a single generation out of the concentration of capital into vast combinations to control production and trade and to break down competition. These combinations already defy or control powerful transportation corporations and reach State authorities. They reach out their Briarean arms to every part of our country. They are imported from abroad. Congress alone can deal with them, and if we are unwilling or unable there will soon be a trust for every production and a master to fix the prices for every necessity of life.

True to John Sherman's prediction, we have today "a trust for every production and a master to fix the price for every necessity of life."

The Sherman Antitrust Act passed the Senate with but a single negative vote, and in the House every vote present was cast for the act. The men voting for it knew no sectional bounds; they knew no line of party distinction in that contest. They stood together to pass a law which they hoped would protect the American citizen in the future from the encroachments of great organizations of wealth.

For a time the act held the big business pirates in abeyance. Congress, under great pressure, refused to repeal the law. For more than 21 years there was no judicial interference with its provisions. Repeatedly the act was attacked in the courts and upheld.

GREED OF CONCENTRATED WEALTH PREVAILS

Finally, however, the greed of concentrated wealth prevailed. In 1911, 21 years after its enactment, the interpretation of the law came before the Supreme Court of the United States in two cases upon appeal. One was from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, New York, and the other from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, Missouri. The case from New York involved the American Tobacco Co., and the one from Misouri involved that hoary old trust known as the Standard Oil Co.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, in the Standard Oil Co. case, by a unanimous decision, upheld the Sherman Antitrust Act in every particular. A most courageous opinion was written by Judge Walter H. Sanborn, of that court, and an equally strong concurring opinion was written by Judge William C. Hook.

Judge Sanborn, in his opinion, said:

If the necessary effect of a contract, combination, or conspiracy is to stifle or directly and substantially to restrict free competition in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, it is a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of that trade, and it violates this law. The parties to it are presumed to intend the inevitable result of their acts, and neither their actual intent nor the reasonableness of the restraint imposed may withdraw it from the denunciation of the statute.

Judge Hook, in his concurring opinion, said:

The construction of the act should not be so narrow or technical as to belittle the work of Congress; but, on the contrary, it should accord with the great importance of the subject of the legislation and the broad lines upon which the act was framed. The language employed in the act is as comprehensive as the power of Congress in the premises, and the purpose was * * * adequately to promote the common interest in freedom of competition and to remove improper obstacles from the channels of commerce that all may enter and enjoy them.

But the Supreme Court of the United States saw fit to overrule the most vital part of the decision of these great judges in the Standard Oil case, as well as the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in the American Tobacco Co. case. It was that autocratic power—the Supreme Court—that killed the antitrust law and turned the predatory monopolies loose upon the Nation. With a little turn of legislative diction the supersacred Supreme Court did the trick. By a single word adroitly written into a judicial decision the great fabric of the Sherman antitrust law was toppled to the ground to become a ruin and a memory.

JUDICIAL AMENDMENT OF SHERMAN LAW

Here is how that law was nullified. The Supreme Court handed down a decision that was not an interpretation of the law but a bold assumption of legislative power. The writer of the decision, Mr. Chief Justice Edward Douglass White, simply took his pen in hand and amended that Sherman antitrust law by writing into the act the word "undue"; and that decision was concurred in by a majority of the Court. It was held that what Congress meant to say was that every combination in "undue" restraint of trade was illegal. The word "undue" became a magic word, and it shattered the whole fabric of the antitrust law. Yet the Chief Justice writing the opinion had the temerity to say:

Our conclusion is that the decree below was right and should be affirmed, except as to the minor matters concerning which we have indicated the decree should be modified.

And that "minor" modification, if you please, was the insertion into the act of that word "undue", which, in effect, nullified the law.

JUSTICE HARLAN DISSENTS

Associate Justice Harlan dissented to this part of the Court's opinion. He pointed out that if the act—

Ought to read as contended for by defendants, Congress is the body to amend it, and not this Court, by a process of judicial legislation wholly unjustifiable.

He said further:

The Court by its decision, when interpreted by the language of its opinion, has not only upset the long-settled interpretation of the act, but has usurped the constitutional functions of the legislative branch of the Government. With all due respect for the opinions of others, I feel bound to say that what the Court has said may well cause some alarm for the integrity of our institutions.

The new legislation thus enacted by the Supreme Court was given the sweet-sounding name "the rule of reason."

It comes to mind, in recalling the wreckage of small business that followed in the wake of the emasculation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, that the Irish poet Oliver Goldsmith once deplored, in poetic language, a similar catastrophe in the life of his deserted village. He wrote:

A time there was, ere England's griefs began,
When every rood of ground maintained its man.

And then he went on to recite what the griefs of England were. They were the "rise of unwieldy wealth and cumbrous pomp", when every human want was "to opulence allied", and the crowding out of the little man on his rood of ground before the insatiate greed of the big landlords and the rage for speculation and concentrated wealth that rang the death knell to that "loveliest village of the plain", and many another home town in his country.

It seems to me that we might well paraphrase that couplet of Goldsmith's to fit the business situation in our own country since the Supreme Court wrote the death knell of the antitrust law. I can remember the time when there was not a village, not a town, not a city in the country that did not boast its independent prosperous business man and business community. Men of the home towns were doing a thriving business in manufacture or trade, in hardware, in groceries, in furniture, in drugs, in the butcher shops—in fact, in every line of business that catered to the wants of the townsfolk. These men were free and independent, proud of their home towns and institutions, respected by their neighbors, building their homes in their communities, and depositing their money in the home-town banks.

Where are they now? Some of them are working, when they can get work, for concerns whose headquarters are far removed from the home town. Many of them were driven to a worse fate—that of despair and death. Where once their business houses stood are now branches of the great chain stores, with imported clerks and managers, and as few of these as possible. And all the home-town banker knows of their profits is as a temporary 48-hour custodian until they can get a draft to forward the money out of the town to headquarters. The day is gone when the "rood of ground", representing the site of an independent business, "maintained its man." The site of his ancient activities is now a temple of concentrated wealth, before which the little man in business has to kowtow as he passes by, according to the law of the land.

BRYAN CHARGED "PACKING" OF COURT

And all of this is because of the rendition of that famous "rule of reason" decision of the Supreme Court. When this decision was rendered William Jennings Bryan charged that Mr. Taft, who was then President, had "packed" the Court in the interests of the trusts. Of course, what Mr. Bryan meant, and had the courage to say, was that Mr. Taft, a Hamiltonian, had appointed a Hamiltonian Court, and that his Hamiltonian Court had handed down a Hamiltonian decision; and a Hamiltonian decision always was and always will be that property—especially big property—has rights that the common man does not possess.

The great disadvantage I find of courts appointed by trust-minded Presidents is that they function so long. Two of the Supreme Court Judges appointed by Mr. Taft in 1910—Charles Evans Hughes and Willis Van Devanter—are still on the bench.

The decision of the Supreme Court nullifying the Sherman antitrust law was unexpected by a majority of the people of that period, who still regarded the Court as a judicial and not a legislative body. I have a most interesting compendium by Alexander H. Walker entitled "History of the Sherman Law." This book was published in 1910, and it was closed by the author in the firm belief that the Sherman law was on the statute books to stay. The author was confident that the Supreme Court would follow the precedents established on the subject and would uphold the law. In his book Mr. Walker referred to the Sherman antitrust law as a "magna carta" of the United States. Yet just 1 year after the publication of this book the Supreme Court found it had another weapon with which to defeat the will of the people; it found that in addition to interpreting the law it could assume legislative powers, and thus this magnificent "magna carta" was relegated to the ash heap.

Let me inject another thought that has been uppermost in my mind. Why is it that opponents of this administration's reform measures deem it within their constitutional privileges to libel, scandalize, and belittle the legislative branch of this Government, and to pour out abuse and misrepresentation upon the head of the executive branch, without limit or decency, and yet demand that when we approach the question of the Supreme Court we must kotow at the doors and advance in hushed whispers?

When did any one branch of this Government become more worthy of respect and fair treatment than any other branch? We are hearing a great deal of talk about dictatorships. Are we not more in the way of creating a dictatorship while we are engaged in fostering an unreasoning worship of one branch of the Government and encouraging a disrespect for the other branches? What, let me ask, is a greater menace to our liberties than the creation of a tradition that one branch of the Government is vested with powers to nullify the actions of the other two branches, and to do that in the name of the Constitution? And the menace is greater when the favored branch, clothed with this high authority, is not to be questioned, never to be changed, never to be reformed, never to be made to keep pace with changing conditions.

SUPREME COURT AGAINST POPULAR RIGHTS

Edward Payson Powell, in his book, Nullification and Secession in the United States, published in 1898, summarized the history of the Supreme Court up to that time as follows:

Holding to a division of American history into the periods of a struggle of factions from 1779 to 1816, a struggle of sections from 1820 to 1860, and a struggle of classes since 1870, we shall see that the Supreme Court has in every instance thrown its influence against popular rights.

In the first era the Supreme Court was so violently Federal and partisan that two of the Judges were impeached for packing juries and delivering political harangues while charging juries.

In the second era the Supreme Court decided that the black man had no rights as a citizen that a white man was bound to consider.

In the third era the Supreme Court has already cast its wavering voice in the social struggle for the wealthy as a class.

* * * * * * *

That the Executive will find at some future time good cause to again check or resist the Court is probable. * * * Contingencies will arise to show that the judiciary is not in any way above the other departments.

All human beings make mistakes. Government officials make mistakes in judgment and in actions. But how easily those mistakes on the part of the executive and legislative branches of our Government can be remedied by the electorate. As pointed out by Jefferson:

The legislative and executive branches may sometimes err, but elections and dependence will bring them to rights.

But the errors of the judiciary may go on forever. "The Constitution is what we make of it", a distinguished member of the Supreme Court is reported as having said. If that is true, then that bogey of dictatorship may be looked for, not in the executive or the legislative branch of the Government but in that unchanging and autocratic body, the Supreme Court.

I do not think our country has come to any such pass that we need become alarmed over all this noisy clamor about dictatorship. Viewing the situation calmly, it seems to me that the President is proceeding in everything that he does within the Constitution and that it is the present opposition to the judiciary bill who are trying to amend that Constitution. But I cannot see that anything is in danger unless the Supreme Court's "rule of reason" becomes so fixed as a judicial dogma that in the end the Constitution will become a mere parchment for that Court to amend at will without recourse to the electorate.

HUMANITIES OF ADMINISTRATION'S PROGRAM

Let me add that I have not favored all the men nor all the methods employed by this administration to carry its programs into effect. I know that mistakes have been made both in men and in measures. But I have yet to find one single critic who doubts the sincerity, the earnestness, and the humanities of the administration's program.

In every law that the Congress has passed and that has received the present Executive's approval I find some humanitarian motive—some provision for equalizing opportunities in this country; some plan for taking care of the unemployed; some measures designed to take the children out of the death-dealing factories; some relief afforded to the farmer; some protection designed for the small-business man; some effort to increase the earning power of laborers and to provide them higher standards of living.

If to promote these things is treason, if we have come to such a state of national mind that laws designed to better the conditions of our citizens cannot be enforced, if we are never to question the right of any body of our Government to nullify such laws, then, indeed, I am afraid that our form of government is really undergoing a change, and a change in the wrong direction.

I fear no revolution, I fear no dictatorships, and I fear no military rule in this country, that was founded in the ideals of democracy and freedom; but I do fear the reactionary movement that seems now to be attempting to bear us back to the uncontrolled domination of the barons of industry, to those one-sided times when "wealth accumulated and men decayed." [Applause.]

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1938

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5779, with Mr. BUCK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Traveling expenses: For all traveling expenses under the Department of Labor, including all bureaus and divisions thereunder, $1,193,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 94, line 7, after the word "expenses", insert the following: "except travel expenses incident to the deportation of aliens."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 94, line 9, strike out "$1,193,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$661,400."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina explain the reason for this reduction?

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say to my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts that these two committee amendments are simply perfecting amendments and the amount will be placed back in the bill in another paragraph.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 94, line 9, strike out "$661,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$666,900."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Public Contracts, salaries and expenses: For personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, in performing the duties imposed by the "Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036), including supplies, stationery, printing and binding, telephone service, telegrams, furniture, office equipment, contract stenographic reporting services, and other necessary expenses, $265,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 96, line 6, strike out "$265,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$315,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, there is another amendment which I offer as a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 6, strike out the figures "$265,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$315,000."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to restore to the bill the amount of the appropriation that was reduced by the committee for the enforcement of the Walsh-Healey Act, appropriations for which are carried in this bill for the first time. Originally there was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget $350,000 for this purpose. The committee reduced that to approximately $295,000, primarily, I would say, as a result of the doubt that the committee entertained as to the question of the purchase of goods in the open market. During the course of the hearings this question was gone into at some length, and it was felt, at least on the part of the committee, that a ruling or decision should be had from the Comptroller General as to that point in that it affected the question of the validity of a contract that may be entered into between the Government or the manufacturer or concern that produced the article. Further than that, if the question were decided in one way but a small amount of administrative expense would be required, whereas if it were decided in another way a much larger administrative expense would be essential. As a result of that feeling, I called on the Comptroller General by letter under date of March 23, directing his attention to this question and asking that he give us an opinion as to the correct interpretation of the section of the act that exempts from the operations of the act goods purchasable in the open market. I have a reply from the Comptroller General on that question. The effect of his decision is to considerably expand the activities of this division over what would have been required had the interpretation favored by our subcommittee been placed on the law. In the light of these facts, I am moving to restore the amount that the committee cut from the estimates for the Division of Public Contracts.

I ask unanimous consent at this point in the RECORD to insert a copy of my letter to the Comptroller General and the Comptroller General's reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, and, of course, I shall not object, but I take this opportunity of expressing to the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee the sincere thanks and appreciation of those of us who realize that splendid work has been done in the enforcement of the Walsh-Healey Act and the accomplishments that mean so much to labor. We thank the gentlemen sincerely for their cooperation. The passage of the Walsh-Healey Act has been a great stride toward the elimination of child labor, convict labor, and those practices that are generally frowned upon by reputable employers of labor. For many months the Committee on the Judiciary labored assiduously to perfect a bill that would meet with the approval of those interested in this type of legislation. The action just taken by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN] insures the enforcement of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 24, 1937.

Hon. THOMAS S. McMILLAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of March 23, 1937, as follows:

"The attached report on the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor for the fiscal year 1938 indicates the necessity, in the mind of the Appropriations Subcommittee, of a ruling being made by your office in connection with appropriations to carry out the terms of the so-called Walsh-Healey Act passed by the last Congress. I refer you specifically to page 25 of the report, which clearly defines the problem.

"Inasmuch as your office must ultimately determine the question raised in connection with the legality of contracts entered into by the Government under the terms of the law, and that the decision so rendered in the matter of such contracts will essentially affect the amount of funds required to administer the act, I deem it of the utmost importance that an immediate decision be had on the following question:

"Does the exception in the Walsh-Healey Act contained in paragraph 43, title 41, United States Code, affect only contracts for supplies, materials, etc., as may be bought by the Government in the open market under the restrictions imposed by law upon such purchases by the Government or does it pertain to any purchases by the Government of supplies, materials, etc., which are ready and available in the open market for purchase by anyone under established custom?

"May I have your decision on this point at the earliest possible time?"

The statement in the report (No. 433) referred to is as follows:

"By the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act, purchases that may be made in the open market are exempted from the operation of the act. In construing this exception in the law the Solicitor of the Department of Labor has ruled that the limitation runs to all commodities or materials for which the purchase contract must by law be negotiated as a result of competitive bidding. The effect of this decision is to give a narrow construction to the terms of the exception by limiting the operation thereof to purchases that may be made by the Government under the terms of existing law in the open market, rather than extending the operation of the exception to purchases that may be bought by anyone under established custom in the open market. If the latter construction had been placed upon the words of the act, the field in which the statute would operate would be considerably narrowed. (It was testified that whereas between 3,500 and 4,000 contracts are now covered by the act, such a construction of the law would reduce the number of contracts to be considered to about 500.)

"It is the feeling of the committee that the legislative intent has not been properly defined in the construction that has been placed by the Solicitor of the Labor Department on that section of the law excepting goods purchasable in the open market, and before any of the money appropriated in this act is expended a ruling of the Comptroller General should be had on this point."

The Walsh-Healey Act, approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036), provides in part:

"That in any contract made and entered into by any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency or instrumentality of the United States * * * for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, and equipment in any amount exceeding $10,000, there shall be included the following representations and stipulations:"

[(a) That contractor is the manufacturer of or regular dealer in the materials.
(b) Minimum-wage stipulation.
(c) Maximum-hour stipulation.
(d) Minimum age of employees stipulation.
(e) Safe and sanitary working conditions stipulation.]

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to administer the provisions of this act * * * and to prescribe rules and regulations with respect thereto. * * * The Secretary of Labor shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 9. This act shall not apply to purchases of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market; nor shall this act apply to perishables, including dairy, livestock, and nursery products, or to agricultural or farm products, processed for first sale by the original producers; * * *."

The point raised in your letter and in the committee report—that is, as to whether the exception in section 9 of the act of such materials, etc., "as may usually be bought in the open market" comprehends all such patricular classes of materials or equipment as are usually available for purchase by the general public in the open market, or is restricted to materials, etc., which Government agencies are authorized by law to purchase in the open market—has not been made the subject of any formal decision by this office. However, the point was carefully considered in connection with other questions presented here for decision involving the operation of the Walsh-Healey Act, and, in disposing of those matters, I found no proper basis upon which to disagree with the interpretation placed on this provision in the opinion of the Solicitor of the Department of Labor, on which the regulations of the Secretary of Labor in this respect appear to have been based. See, for example, decisions of December 15 and December 16, 1936 (16 Comp. Gen. 583; id. 590), holding that the act applied and that the stipulations were required to be included in contracts in excess of $10,000 for automobiles and for tractors, both of which classes of articles are available for purchase by the public in the open market but which generally may not be procured by Government activities by open-market purchase. In the consideration of those cases there was not overlooked the fact that a similar provision in the 8-hour law of June 19, 1912 (37 Stat. 137–138), had been consistently construed to exempt all articles and commodities which might be purchased by the public in the open market. But, considering the difference in purpose between the two acts and the broad powers conferred on the Secretary of Labor to administer the provisions of the present act and to make, amend, and rescind such regulations as might be necessary to carry out such provisions, together with the cogency of the interpretation on which the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor were based, I concluded that the administrative interpretation was not contrary to law.

The Walsh-Healey Act applies only to contracts for the "manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, and equipment"—that is, to supply contracts as distinguished from construction contracts, and to give the open-market exemption provision of section 9 the wide application adopted under the 8-hour law provision would appear in practical effect to defeat the apparent purpose of the act. Under the construction of the 8-hour law provision there were exempted all classes and characters of supplies from twine and paper boxes to dynamos and locomotives (30 Op. Atty. Gen. 24; id. 31; id. 49). To permit such exemptions under the present act, which relates only to supply contracts, would so restrict its operation as practically to nullify its other provisions. Consequently, as between that interpretation and the one adopted by the Secretary of Labor, I felt compelled to accept the latter—the plain terms of the provision being such as to admit of only one or the other of those two interpretations.

Accordingly I have to advise that unless and until the matter be clarified by further legislation, I am constrained to concur in the interpretation placed on the provision by the Department of Labor.

Sincerely yours,

R. N. ELLIOTT,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I also desire to express my thanks to the able and distinguished chairman of the subcommittee who is in charge of this bill on the floor for his generous act in offering this amendment. I had intended to offer a like amendment and had sent the same to the Clerk's desk. This amendment restores the original appropriation recommended by the Budget to the new organization, Government Contracts Division of the Department of Labor. If adopted, it is believed that an effective working organization to enforce and administer the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act may be established. From the date of its enactment this division has operated without proper personnel and with very little money. Yet its achievements, even under these handicaps, indicate clearly the possibilities of this legislation to promote sound industrial practices throughout the Nation if provision is made for an adequate administration of the terms of the act.

The wage, hours, and labor provisions of this act were, as we all know, designed to take Government business out of the sweatshop and away from the bid peddler. Passed at the last session of the Seventy-fourth Congress primarily as an offset to the subsidization of sweatshops, homework, and bid-peddling resulting from rigid adherence to the low-bid statutes, the Government Contracts Act has now had an opportunity to prove itself.

The steel industry, the largest concentration of private enterprise in this country, recently reversed its traditional policy of long working hours and promulgated wage and hour standards which have won the acclaim of progressive leaders of labor and industry alike. It is significant that, in its commendable industrial statesmanship, the steel industry had its eyes fixed on compliance with the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act. Statements of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation at the time of the announcement of the industry's new policy so testify. The Walsh-Healey Act has established the 40-hour week as government policy. Its adoption by industry generally will fix it as the American standard.

It is estimated that because of the adoption of the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act by the steel industry, some seventy or eighty thousand additional men will be put to work in that industry alone, with an increased pay roll for the industry of $200,000,000. The extent of the indirect benefits which will result, it is impossible to predict.

It is further estimated that, if industry generally followed the example of steel, over 2,000,000 jobs would be furnished for men who are unemployed today. It is my prediction that the principle of the 40-hour week will soon be recognized as an economic necessity. It is generally recognized today that it is the most effective answer to technological unemployment.

After all if, as has been so well demonstrated by the accomplishments of this legislation to date, the Walsh-Healey Act can promote the adoption of the 40-hour week generally and the consequent reemployment of men in private industry, is not this one of the best answers to the problems which have so seriously beset us. Is not this the fervent wish and hope, not only of all Members of Congress but of Americans throughout the Nation—to take men off relief and welfare rolls and restore to them real honest-to-goodness jobs.

The act also prohibits the employment of child labor and convict labor and provides that a decent prevailing minimum wage shall be paid on Government contract work. The Board set up under the terms of this act to determine the minimum wage that might be paid to workers on Government contract work recently rendered a decision in the men's work-garment industry—an industry which perhaps more than any other has felt the heavy hand of labor exploitation, sweatshop conditions, child labor, and unconscionable wages. The Board determined that in this industry the wage throughout the country should be a minimum of $15 for a 40-hour week. The fact that this wage represented the union wage in plants which had been unionized indicates the deplorable level to which wages had fallen in that industry. And I do not believe that there is any man here who would say that such a wage is excessive.

These are some of the great objectives which have been advanced by this legislation—objectives toward which we have all striven. With these ends in view we have passed some legislation which has been declared unconstitutional. Perhaps we have passed some legislation which may prove ineffective. But this act has proven its effectiveness and its constitutionality has never been questioned.

I am very happy, indeed, that the doubts of the subcommittee on appropriations concerning the proper interpretation of section 9 of this act have been cleared by the ruling of the Comptroller General which the committee has secured and which has been made part of this record. The interpretation of the Comptroller General is in accord with that previously rendered by the Solicitor of the Labor Department. Both of these opinions, in my judgment, clearly reflect the intent and purpose of Congress in the passage of this act. This removes all doubt of the propriety of restoring this appropriation to the figure approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and I wish to pay tribute to my genial friend and the other members of the committee who have been so vitally interested in this question for their conscientious performance of duty in determining the proper appropriation for the administration of this act and the proper construction to be placed on the meaning of section 9 of the act. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I also commend the authors of the bill, and I particularly congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER], the members of the Judiciary Subcommittee, who worked strenuously upon this bill. I believe this is one of the best bills that has been passed by this House in the last 4 years. I also believe this bill will materially help to do away with child labor and sweatshop conditions. The success of a law often depends on its administration and in this case the successful administration of this bill is due to the energetic work of all those connected with the Department of Labor and the Bureau of Public Contracts, which is enforcing the Walsh-Healey bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, the real credit is due to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] and the subcommittee, Mr. HEALEY, Massachusetts; Mr. CHANDLER, Tennessee; and Mr. WALTER, Pennsylvania, who drafted the bill.

Mr. CITRON. They have worked hard for a long time, and, as I said, they certainly are to be commended. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. And I hope that the Secretary of Labor will administer this law with sounder discretion than she has shown in making some of her public expressions in recent days. [Applause.]

Mr. CITRON. I have certain detailed facts pertaining to the administration of this act that I have received from the Department, and I hope I will be permitted to put them in the RECORD, showing that she has fairly, honestly, and equitably performed in every way the purposes of this act. She has done equity to everyone concerned.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. To what extent has the distinguished Secretary of Labor interested herself in the enforcement of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. CITRON. The bureau under which this act is being enforced comes under her Department. Let me explain now about the bill and its enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, at the last Congress we enacted a bill known as the Walsh-Healey Act based upon the simple principle that the business of the Government should be awarded only to firms which were complying with reasonable labor standards to prevent the Government from being placed in the paradoxical position of urging the maintenance of enlightened working conditions in industry and yet awarding its own contracts to firms which were flouting the principles which the Government was advocating. We therefore provided in the Walsh-Healey Act that bidders on Government contracts should stipulate that they were paying certain minimum wages, were refraining from employing child labor and convict labor, and were not permitting employees to work for more than 40 hours in any one week or 8 hours in any one day. The administration of the act was vested in the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says and will he kindly explain further.

Mr. CITRON. We have recently heard the administration of this act assailed on the floor of this House on the ground that the Secretary of Labor has been refusing to grant exemptions from its provisions and therefore jeopardizing our program of national defense. It is true that under the act the Secretary of Labor does have authority to grant exemptions. There is a provision under section 6 reading as follows:

Upon a written finding by the head of the contracting agency or department that the inclusion in the proposal or contract of the representations of stipulations set forth in section 1 will seriously impair the conduct of Government business, the Secretary of Labor shall make exceptions in specific cases or otherwise when justice and the public interest will be served thereby.

Several days ago the eminent chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whom I respect and deeply honor, told the House that it was the intent of Congress where the head of the contracting department made such a finding the Secretary of Labor "was, it was assumed, compelled to grant an exemption to the stipulations of the act." It is true that this language places considerable responsibility upon the contracting agency of a department in regard to the inclusion of these labor stipulations but it is quite clear from the final clause in this sentence that regardless of what the finding of the head of the contracting agency might be the Secretary of Labor is to make exceptions only "when justice and the public interest will be served thereby." It is true also that the Secretary of Labor has repeatedly denied exemptions requested by the Navy Department, but there seems little ground for saying that these refusals were not in the public interest.

It is no secret that the Navy Department was hostile to the Walsh-Healey bill from the start. It opposed it throughout the 1935 session and even on the day of its passage by this House it sought to block action on the bill. Scarcely a month after the Public Contracts Act became law, a request was made by the Secretary of the Navy for a blanket exemption of all contracts relating to naval and aircraft construction. In accordance with the terms of the law, the Navy Department was advised that the request could not be granted, since there was no showing that the application of the act would "seriously impair conduct of Government business" and since contracts for construction are not covered by the act as it was finally passed.

Of 19 requests for exception or exemption made by contracting agencies between the effective date of the law, September 28, 1936, and February 1, 1937, 12 have come from the Navy Department alone. It has been the experience of the other contracting agencies that only a small portion of bids have been qualified on account of the stipulations required by the act. Failure to understand the law and misinformation as to its effect which has been circulated by bidders alarmed at the prospect of vigilant inspection by the Government were responsible for most of the difficulties encountered. The patience and cooperation of contracting officers in explaining the act to the prospective bidders, upon which the initial success of the act depends, has disposed of most of these difficulties. The Department of Labor, recognizing the necessity of educating contractors, has in each instance where exemption has been requested on the ground that no bids were received held conferences, and through explanation of the operation of the law been able in each instance to find qualified bidders. At my request the Department of Labor has furnished me a summary of its docket of exemption cases.

The record of Navy requests for exemption and the reasons for their denial are as follows:

(1) November 4, 1936. All bids on a proposal for three boring, drilling, and milling machines contained qualifications with respect to the Walsh-Healey Act. By personal contact with bidders and explanation of the Department's regulations applicable to this contract, the reservations of one bidder were withdrawn and the contract awarded to it.

(2) November 5, 1936. All bids on invitation for 157,000 pounds of flax twine took exception to the Public Contracts Act. Pending an investigation of the circumstances in which these reservations were made and of conference with bidders, the request for exemption was denied. The denial was without prejudice and renewal of the application may be made at any time, but no new request has reached the Department of Labor, for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy requested the local purchasing officer to buy a substitute.

(3) November 16, 1936: On a proposal for the purchase of one of its airplanes, the Beech Aircraft Co. took exception to the stipulations required by the Public Contracts Act. Investigation revealed that the manufacturer was already complying with the standards required by the law, and no exception was therefore required.

(4) December 1, 1936: No bids were received on an invitation for hydraulic shaper planers. Conference with a manufacturer with whom the production of these machines is standard resulted in the award of the contract to a firm complying fully with the requirements of the act.

(5) December 3, 1936: The two bids on a proposal for one boring, drilling, and milling machine contained qualifications with respect to the act. Reservations of one bidder were withdrawn after conference, and the award of the contract to him was recommended.

(6) December 12, 1936: The same bidder took exception to an invitation for horizontal boring machines. Interpretation of the law by the Department of Labor resulted in the withdrawal of the exceptions.

(7) December 4, 1936: All bids on a request for three ratio heavy duty drills were qualified on account of the Walsh-Healey stipulations. After a conference one manufacturer withdrew its exceptions, and is now bidding in full compliance with the act.

(8) December 4, 1936: Qualifications were made by both bidders on invitation for gun directing power plants. A conference having disclosed that one of the bidders is in a position to comply with the act in full, the impasse is now removed.

(9) December 30, 1936: Exemption was requested on an entire lot of 25,000,000 pounds of steel for ship construction upon which no proper bids were received. On March 1, 1937, all principal bidders announced new wage and hour schedules which make it possible for them to comply fully with the Public Contracts Act.

(10) January 4, 1937: Conferences promised to remove the objections of bidders on an invitation for three heavy-duty lathes. The request for exemption has not been denied.

(11) January 7, 1937: An invitation for reinforced steel bars was supended pending settlement of the impasse over the principal steel contract.

(12) January 11, 1937: No bids were received on invitations for a large quantity of copper ingots. Conferences with prospective bidders have made possible the award of two contracts on February 3. Navy Department officials have expressed themselves as satisfied at present and as believing that future proposals will bring out additional eligible bids.

It therefore cannot be claimed that every request for exemption by the Navy Department has been denied or that the Walsh-Healey Act has jeopardized the national defense. In no instance has the delay between the date of request and the time when eligible bidders have been found been such as to delay the Navy Department in the construction of a single ship or to cause the lay-off of any employee.

The Secretary of Labor, in denying the request of the Navy Department for the exemption of steel contracts, recognized that the public interest by which she must be guided in determining her action demanded that the Government stand firm until stable labor relations had been evolved in the steel industry. Since the firm stand against an exemption hastened the settlement in steel, the administration of the Walsh-Healey Act may well have avoided a costly strike in the steel industry which would have delayed indefinitely all branches of Government construction. I did not suppose that anyone believed it to be the intention of Congress in passing this act that the exceptions and exemptions would be made wherever bidders found it inconvenient to comply with the required stipulations. The provision in section 6 authorizing the Secretary of Labor to grant relief in the interests of justice and the public interest was, of course, included in order to meet circumstances of an extraordinary character. It was thought necessary to provide sufficient leeway in the act for emergency purchases in case of national disasters such as floods, or where a Government vessel is in port only long enough to pick up supplies. Were the law to be suspended every time bidders declined to submit to its conditions, it would soon become an empty collection of words whose meaning depends upon the graciousness of Government contractors. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it is my belief that this Department is performing a great service and is effectively carrying out the intentions and purposes of Congress in enacting this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro-forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment is withdrawn.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Salaries and expenses: For personal services, including temporary statistical clerks, stenographers, and typewriters in the District of Columbia, and including also experts and temporary assistants for field service outside of the District of Columbia; the appropriation for traveling expenses in Title IV shall be available, in an amount not to exceed $, for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the Bureau of Labor Statistics when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor; purchase of periodicals, documents, envelopes, price quotations, and reports and materials for reports and bulletins of said Bureau, $784,000, of which amount not to exceed $658,000 may be expended for the salary of the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: On page 96, line 12, strike out all after the semicolon, down to and including the semicolon in line 19, and insert a new paragraph, beginning on line 22, as follows:

"The appropriation for traveling expenses in title IV shall be available in an amount not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a clarifying amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON] was addressing the Committee a few moments ago and I made an observation, and I had a deliberate reason for making the observation. It is reported in the New York Times this morning, a reliable newspaper, that the Secretary of Labor, from its economic aspect, undertakes to place sit-down strikes in the category of picketing. That comes from the Secretary of Labor, as reported in the morning press. I do not know whether the newspaper quoted her correctly or not; but if it did, someone in Congress should call to the lady's attention the fact that there is a difference between what is lawful and what is a violation of the law.

It is perfectly proper for labor to picket. It is perfectly proper for labor to organize to obtain improved conditions. I think I can say without any contradiction that I have been one of the best friends of labor. In the Massachusetts Legislature 16 years ago, when an attempt was made to enact a law to incorporate labor unions, I led the successful fight against it. I also refer to my recent action in support of the bituminous-coal legislation, as indicating the support that I have always given labor in its efforts to improve working conditions. Labor legislation has constantly received my support. However, I do not recognize the right of any group in the United States, no matter who they are, to undertake to substitute themselves for the constituted authority of our Nation, State, or city. [Applause.]

I am just making a few observations on her reported remarks. The best friends of labor are those who caution its members at the proper time. The sit-down strike is the result of a state of mind which is in defiance of the law. Picketing is the result of a state of mind which is in conformity with the law. The Secretary of Labor should be careful in her public utterances. She can say things as an individual which have very little effect, but as a member of the President's Cabinet, any statement she might make has tremendous effect. I differ with the lady if she made that statement. If she did not make the statement, she should immediately repudiate it. There is a difference between a state of mind in defiance of law and a state of mind which prompts actions in compliance and in conformity with the law.

I am absolutely in favor of the Walsh-Healey bill. I came here today especially to help the amendment, if a fight occurred, and if my voice could assist its adoption by participating in the debate. I am glad that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN] offered the amendment, recognizing the necessity for the increased amount.

The observation I made to the gentleman [Mr. CITRON] had no relation at all to the Walsh-Healey bill. In the final analysis Senator WALSH and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] and the members of the subcommittee are the ones who worked hard and are entitled to credit. I know, because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] worked for approximately 3 months, together with his subcommittee, to correct the bill as it came from the Senate. He has done a great job. He is entitled to the commendation of labor. He is entitled to the commendation and respect of all persons who believes in progressive legislation, for the great work that he and his subcommittee did in connection with this matter. I also want to compliment the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON] for the excellent work that he did in the full Committee on the Judiciary in seeing the report and recommendations of the subcommittee were adopted by the full committee. I cannot, however, resist the feeling that it is the duty of someone to recognize the statement that appeared in the papers this morning and also the statement the Secretary made a few weeks ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the Members to the fact that we are interested in trying to finish this bill as quickly as possible. I hope that after the gentleman has concluded his remarks there will be no further requests for extended debate in connection with these items and that the debate will be confined to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. A few weeks ago the Secretary of Labor expressed doubt as to whether the sit-down strike was legal or illegal. Cognizance must be taken of that statement. Members of Cabinets, whether Republican or Democratic, should be careful in their expressions. This is a matter involving the welfare of our country. I take the floor reluctantly, hesitatingly, after waiting for 4 years for some evidence that would warrant me in forming an opinion of confidence in the Secretary. The Labor Department, under her leadership, has not as yet earned my confidence. I exclude from that statement the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau, and also Edward F. McGrady, who is entitled to the confidence of everyone for the great work he has done.

If in the past the Secretary of Labor has been merely careless in her statements, I hope that in the future she will be more careful not to make inciting remarks. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, here are three questions which have been asked me this morning. I am going to ask them of the membership and I hope somebody will answer them.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I am forced to make the point of order the gentleman is not confining his remarks to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PLUMLEY. These, under permission to revise and extend my remarks, Mr. Chairman, are the three questions I was undertaking to ask when the point of order was sustained against my proceeding further in the Committee. I have been asked—I have answered—let somebody else answer them also:

Has the Labor Department, through its Secretary, taken any action denouncing the sit-down strikes as an open challenge to law and order and a bold threat to that stability without which no nation can long survive? Is it not true that the Secretary has said that the legality of sit-down strikes has not been determined?

Is it not true that the man who with impunity may enter your plant or industry and hold it against your will may do the same with your dwelling house, your home, your farm, or your office? Is not the principle identical?

Is it not true that as between the right to strike and the right to continue a so-called sit-down strike there is a chasm as wide as the ocean itself which never can be spanned by constitutional and democratic methods and never be legalized?

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

Salaries and expenses: For enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration to, the residence in, and the exclusion and deportation from the United States of aliens and persons subject to the Chinese exclusion laws; for enforcement of the laws authorizing a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens; salaries, transportation, and other expenses of officers, clerks, and other employees appointed to enforce said laws; care, detention, maintenance, and transportation expenses incident to the deportation and exclusion of aliens and persons subject to the Chinese exclusion laws, as authorized by law, in the United States and to, through, or in foreign countries; purchase of supplies and equipment, including alterations and repairs; purchase, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles, including passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work; arms, ammunition, and accessories; cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts and digests thereof for official use; certifications of legal papers; refunding of head tax, maintenance bills, and immigration fines, upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection and deposit was made through error; mileage and fees to witnesses subpenaed on behalf of the United States, and for all other expenses necessary to enforce said laws; $9,055,000, all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, of which amount not to exceed $555,000 may be expended for the salary of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including services of persons authorized by law to be detailed there for duty: Provided, That not to exceed $45,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be available for the purchase, including exchange, of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may contract with officers and employees stationed outside of the District of Columbia, whose salaries are payable from this appropriation, for the use, on official business outside of the District of Columbia, of privately owned horses, and the consideration agreed upon shall be payable from the funds herein appropriated: Provided further, That not to exceed $36,000 of the total amount herein appropriated shall be available for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), not to exceed $1,700 for any person: Provided further, That $125,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available only for the payment of extra compensation for overtime services of inspectors and employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service for which the United States receives reimbursement in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1931 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 109a and 109b): Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the compensation of assistants to clerks of United States courts: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be expended for payment of rewards, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of Labor, for information leading to the detection, arrest, or conviction of persons violating the immigration or naturalization laws: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 109), authorizing the Secretary of Labor to draw annually from the appropriations for the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enforce the law excluding contract laborers and induced and assisted immigrants, not to exceed $95,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be expended for such purposes, and such expenditure shall be made in strict compliance with the provisions of the act of July 11, 1919 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 201).

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 97, line 2, strike out the word "transportation"; and in line 5, strike out the word "and"; also in line 5, after the word "transportation", insert the words "and traveling."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 97, line 20, strike out the figures "$9,055,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$9,586,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation under title IV for traveling expenses shall be available in an amount not to exceed $3,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Children's Bureau when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: On page 103, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 3 and insert in lieu thereof a new paragraph, as follows:

"The appropriation under title IV for traveling expenses shall be available for expenses of attendance of cooperating officials and consultants at conferences concerned with the administration of title V, parts 1, 2, and 3, of the Social Security Act when called by the Children's Bureau, with the written approval of the Secretary of Labor, and shall be available also in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings related to the work of the Children's Bureau when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, this, I may say, is merely a clarifying amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to make a brief comment.

Mr. Chairman, some little time ago I stood in this Well and talked about sit-down strikes and quoted the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor has declared, as every one of you probably know, that it had not yet been determined whether the sit-down strike had a legalistic status.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to make the point of order against my friend, but I must make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not confining his remarks to the paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK, on the other side of the aisle, spoke out of order for 7 minutes without a point of order being made against him, it would seem only just that a Member on this side should be allowed to speak for a few minutes out of order.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot overlook the fact that others want to make remarks out of order. I objected in the case of the gentleman from Vermont and gave warning that these remarks would have to be confined to the bill.

Mr. SNELL. That would be all right had the gentleman started out in that way, but as long as he allowed the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK, to talk out of order for 7 minutes, he ought not to object to a few minutes on this side.

Mr. McMILLAN. We are going to have a field day here after this bill is finished, and anyone who wants to talk will have that opportunity this afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is all right, so far as that is concerned, but he should have started it earlier in the afternoon.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be directed properly under the item of traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think everybody understands perfectly well exactly what I meant, as far as I was permitted to proceed. [Laughter.]

I want to speak of these traveling items where they may or may not under this or these paragraphs be used for trips to Europe. In order to overcome our ignorance and broaden our vision, we are to be reconstructed from Europe, although the status of labor is so utterly different there than it is in America. We have been transplanting from Europe many new ideas. The Secretary of Labor went to Europe last summer to study the international problems of labor and perhaps import their ideas to the United States. It is said that someone else also traveled over there last autumn and imported the sit-down strike idea from France. I think everyone knows to whom I have reference.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to comment on these various expenses of travel, and I have done so. I congratulate the Members of the Democratic side of the House on the fact that after a long month, and when the fire seems to be out of control, you have finally waked up and dared to make use of some of the expressions concerning respect for law that you are now making. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 8, after the word "labor", insert "to enable the Division of Labor Standards in the Department of Labor to engage in a program to formulate and promote the furtherance of standards of apprenticeship and apprentice training, $50,000."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] desire to be heard?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I submit this amendment in order to clear up a parliamentary question which, in my judgment, merits the consideration of the House and the Chair. I believe it will be helpful in the further consideration of this bill in the Senate, in conference, and later when the bill returns to the House.

My distinguished colleague from New York makes a point of order. I presume it is based on the assumption that this would be legislation in an appropriation bill and that there may be no authorization in support of an appropriation of this character.

Mr. Chairman, I submit my amendment is merely a direction, coupled with an appropriation, to carry out what is already the intent and purpose of the organic act creating the Department of Labor. In the RECORD my distinguished colleague explains that it also involves a transfer from a temporary agency of Government to a permanent department of Government, and that there is no authorization for a transfer of that kind.

I find there is ample law for this transfer, because it is now a function of the Department of the Interior. There is an appropriation for this work, and it has been agreed upon and approved by this House for a number of years in the past.

I say it is not only justified by the organic law creating the Department of Labor, which was quoted in the RECORD by my colleague from New York, but it is also authorized by the act of February 23, 1917, as amended by Executive Order No. 6166, issued on June 10, 1933. That order transferred the functions of the Vocational Board for Education to the Department of the Interior, and in that there is ample authority for the work involved in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. Chairman, the preface to the organic law creating the Department of Labor reads as follows:

The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States and to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

In addition, section 9 of the same act authorizes the Secretary of Labor to make such special investigations as he may deem necessary.

It is felt that the work of the Division of Labor Standards, as an agency of the Department of Labor, clearly falls within the scope of the statutory provision and is designated to carry out the very purposes herein enumerated. It does not appear that the activity under the appropriation now requested in my amendment is subject to a point of order, not only by reason of the act of February 23, 1917, as amended by the Executive order of June 10, 1933, but by reason of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the Department of the Interior under the law now has the power to cooperate with State boards in carrying out the provisions contained in this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in addition to that, the Interior Department is authorized to cause investigations to be made and to make reports, and so forth. It is further stated in that law:

When the Interior Department deems it advisable, such studies, investigations, and reports for the purposes of trade and industry and industrial education—

That is what this amendment applies to—may be accomplished in cooperation with or through the Department of Labor.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, in that function already in operation, as well as in the law creating the Department of Labor, there is ample authority for what I propose. It is not a new function of government. It is not requesting an appropriation that has not yet been made. It is not delving into a new field of enterprise. My amendment merely gives the Department of Labor that prerogative intended by Congress in passing the special acts to which I have referred.

The point was made in the debate that the statement of the purpose for which the Department is established, as set forth in the organic act creating it, is not to be construed as authorization for appropriations not specifically provided for in succeeding sections of the act, which provided for bureaus and designated these bureaus to carry out the intent and purpose of the Congress. There were cited to the House cases of appropriations to the Secretary of Labor to advance the opportunities for profitable employment of wage earners in the United States and to establish employment services. It was held the general authority of the Department of Labor under its organic act did not permit such appropriations.

These precedents are not applicable to the present circumstances, however. The power and authority contained in the act of February 23, 1917—and this has not been brought out in the debate, or in the precedents, insofar as pertains to this amendment or what it attempts to put into operation—dispose of the objections already made and, in my judgment, make this amendment in order.

In addition, the language in question is not open to the objection that it is legislation which may not appear on an appropriation bill. It is an established precedent of this House that mere directions as to the expenditure of funds, even though they involve the transfer of authority and money from one agency to another, are not contrary to the rules of the House, neither do they come under the prohibition mentioned by my colleague the gentleman from New York.

As I have said, this is not a new function. It is a going concern of the Government. It was recommended by the President of the United States in a letter addressed to the Secretary of Labor on September 19, 1936, in which he said:

MY DEAR MME. SECRETARY: I am much interested in the progress made in apprentice training in recent months, and I firmly believe that the Federal program of promotion should be continued.

It is my thought that the Federal Committee on Apprentice Training should function in an advisory capacity to the National Youth Administration during this fiscal year. In the meantime I wish you would include in your regular budget a request for small funds to support the committee's activities for the year 1937–38.

This is what I am doing.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is in order.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not germane to this paragraph and place in the bill at which he has offered it, and that it is also legislation on an appropriation bill.

As to the first point, the gentleman from New York offers his amendment to the paragraph which has to do with grants to States for child-welfare services. In his argument the gentleman admitted this activity pertained to the Division of Labor Standards, which is on page 92, and which we have already passed. The gentleman also relies for authority for this amendment on the so-called Smith-Hughes Act, which permitted a somewhat similar activity to be conducted by the Office of Education in the Department of the Interior. Again I raise the point of germaneness that, conceding for purposes of argument it may be germane to the Department of Interior bill, it is certainly not germane to the Department of Labor bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman I intended to offer the amendment at the end of the section pertaining to the Division of Labor Standards, but was called from the Chamber. If the amendment is germane, insofar as the main objections offered by the gentleman from New York are concerned, I would be pleased to ask it be considered at the proper point in the bill. However, I understand from the objections made by my colleague the gentleman from New York that he objects on the ground it is legislation in an appropriation bill. I desired to clear this point up if I could.

Mr. BACON. I will pass on to my second point of order.

This activity of apprentice training was started under the National Recovery Act. Lately it has been carried out under the so-called National Youth Administration, to which it was transferred by Executive Order No. 7086. It is now sought to transfer this agency, which has been created under the emergency powers as a temporary proposition, to a permanent department of the Government as a permanent proposition. The Congress has never authorized this activity by law.

I may say, parenthetically, I am sympathetic with the purposes of this activity, and if the Committee on Labor will bring out a bill to authorize this activity, I, as one member of the subcommittee, will gladly lend my aid in seeing that the necessary appropriation is made in the bill. However, there has been growing up a tendency in the last few years, Mr. Chairman, to arbitrarily force new matters into appropriation bills which legislative committees of the House have never discussed and never considered. I think the House has always been very jealous of the authority granted to its committees. When the Committee on Appropriations was created the House specifically decreed that the Committee on Appropriations could not consider legislative matters.

This is legislation in an appropriation bill that has never been considered by one of the legislative committees of the House, has never been passed upon by the House, but has simply resulted from an Executive order of the President under temporary emergency powers. I want to cite a decision rendered by the Honorable John N. Garner, of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on February 28, 1919. At that time the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Gallivan, offered an amendment to the Labor Department appropriation bill which would create the United States Employment Service. The gentleman from New York, Mr. Gould, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, made the point of order that it was legislation on an appropriation bill and that such a bureau of employment had never been authorized by law. The subject was ably discussed by the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. JAMES F. BYRNES, who made the principal argument in favor of the point of order.

After extended debate the Chair ruled:

The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to insert a new section, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Labor to advance the opportunities for profitable employment of the wage earners of the United States there is hereby appropriated out of available moneys in the Treasury $10,023,000."

To that amendment the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from New York make the point of order. Arguing the point of order, gentlemen who have discussed it cited certain language in the organic act which created the Department of Labor. That language is:

"The duties of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

That language is relied upon, as the Chair understands, to make this amendment in order. The House has always been extremely careful in conferring the legislative power upon committees; at least it has been so for 50 years. It has withheld from the Committee on Appropriations any power of legislation, and naturally, having withheld that power, it has provided that no amendment to an appropriation bill if it carried legislation should be in order if offered on the floor of the House. This is very peculiar language as contained in this organic act. If the Committee on Appropriations could have rightfully brought in a proposition such as is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and, of course, if it could not, an amendment from the floor of the House would be subject to the point of order. The Chair is unable to see where the limit on the Committee on Appropriations would end. If this—like the whereas of a resolution—should be held to authorize appropriations by the Committee on Appropriations, there is absolutely no limitation that you could put upon your Committee on Appropriations.

And, of course, if the Appropriations Committee could bring in a proposition, any amendment from the floor would be in order. The Chair thinks this amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts makes new legislation, not authorized by any existing law, and that therefore it is obnoxious to the rule of the House. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Therefore it was definitely decided that an appropriation to enable the Secretary of Labor to advance opportunities for profitable employment of wage earners was not in order on a bill making appropriations for the Department of Labor.

This ruling held that "the general statement of purpose for which a department is established, as set forth in the organic act creating it, is not to be construed as authorization for appropriations not specifically provided for in succeeding sections of the act providing for bureaus designated to carry out the declaration of purpose."

Two years later a similar question arose, and the Honorable Joseph Walsh, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reaffirmed the decision of Mr. Garner and established the principle that statements of purpose embodied in the organic act creating the Department of Labor did not authorize appropriations for establishment of an employment service.

It is interesting to note that after these rulings the proper committee of the House brought in enabling legislation to create the United States Employment Service, and, having made it legal, having authorized it by law, your committee has for some years carried the necessary appropriations in this bill to provide for the Employment Service. The present amendment, now offered, providing for a new activity of apprentice training is in every way similar to the case and decision I have just cited. I think the Secretary of Labor should have gone to the Committee on Labor and requested enabling legislation. If the enabling legislation had been reported from the committee, it seems to me it could easily have passed the House, probably, on the Consent Calendar. In line with previous decisions and precedents special authorizing legislation is necessary to make this proposed amendment in order on an appropriation bill. The general language of the organic act, creating the Department of Labor, is not sufficient authorization.

I make this point of order not because I am opposed to the activity suggested, but because I am completely opposed in principle to an executive department ignoring the regular legislative committees of the House and trying to run in its new projects through the Committee on Appropriations. I believe the Committee on Appropriations has to keep faith with the House and do its best to keep legislative matters out of its appropriation bills. This amendment proposes a new activity in the Labor Department that has never been authorized by law. It has never even been considered by a legislative committee of the House. It is, therefore, clearly new legislation and is not in order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BUCK). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has offered an amendment to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

To enable the Division of Labor Standards in the Department of Labor to engage in a program to formulate and promote the furtherance of standards of apprenticeship and apprentice training, $50,000.

To this amendment the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] has made the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered, and the further point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Unquestionably the amendment is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered, and on that ground the Chair could sustain the point of order. It is the understanding of the Chair, however, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] under these circumstances would desire to return to the appropriate paragraph by unanimous consent of the Committee and again offer the amendment, and for this reason the Chair desires to state that, after an examination of the authorities and the precedents existing and of the act of February 23, 1917, which the gentleman from New York has cited, the Chair feels that the rules and precedents of the House have well established that a general statement of the purpose for which a department is established, as the Department of Labor, as set forth in its organic act, is not to be construed as an authorization for an appropriation which is not definitely and specifically provided for either in that act or in subsequent legislation creating bureaus within such Department. No authority has been cited to the Chair, other than the new suggestion made by the gentleman from New York with reference to the Vocational Education Act, which would take this particular amendment out of the ruling cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] made by Chairman Garner in the Committee of the Whole House some years ago. The Vocational Education Act, insofar as it applies to the point raised by the gentleman from New York, reads as follows:

> When the Interior Department deems it advisable, such studies, investigations, and reports concerning trades and industries for purposes of trade and industrial education may be made in cooperation with or through the Department of Labor.

The act, however, makes such investigations, studies, and so forth, dependent upon the determination of the Department of Interior for which the pending bill does not purport to make any appropriation.

Without desiring to bind any future occupant of the chair who may preside over the Interior Department appropriation bill as to the germaneness of such an amendment as the gentleman from New York offers today, the Chair feels it is entirely beyond the scope of the present bill and that it would be definite legislation on an appropriation bill, transferring from the Interior Department to the Department of Labor these particular activities which would be obnoxious to the rules of the House. For this reason the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, a separate vote is demanded on the so-called Celler amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Celler amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 47, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
> "Salaries of law clerks to district judges: For salaries of law clerks to district judges, as authorized by Public Law No. 449, Seventy-fourth Congress, $78,750."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point, and to include therein a brief quotation from a Government report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, next week the House will take up for consideration the appropriation bill providing for the District of Columbia. I have been very much interested in that particular matter for some time and, in fact, went so far in 1935 as to introduce a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adequately compensate property owners of the District of Columbia because of the handicaps under which they live in the District until such time as we could relieve them by moving the National Capital out to the Middle West, where it should be located. At that particular time many people in the city of Washington were complaining bitterly about a proposal to reduce the appropriation for the District of Columbia. The same people, of course, are now emphasizing the vital necessity of making that appropriation as large as possible.

In my judgment no increases are necessary, and in fact the circumstances would justify not only the reduction but the complete discontinuation of the Federal Government's contributions to the District government. In the light of the above circumstances, I want to point out a few significant things for the consideration of the Congress. I want to remind you that according to the Bureau of the Census of the United States Department of Commerce, gross sales in the District of Columbia in 1935 amounted to $331,000,000. That amount was greater than the gross sales in the entire four States of Wyoming, Nevada, Delaware, and New Mexico. In fact, it was greater than the gross sales in any one of the following 18 States of the Union: Montana ($189,000,000), Idaho ($140,000,000), Wyoming ($83,000,000), Nevada ($44,000,000), Arizona ($121,000,000), New Mexico ($89,000,000), Utah ($132,000,000), Colorado ($303,000,000), North Dakota ($150,000,000), South Dakota ($148,000,000), Mississippi ($178,000,000), Arkansas ($241,000,000), South Carolina ($248,000,000), Delaware ($77,000,000), Rhode Island ($220,000,000), New Hampshire ($153,000,000), Vermont ($99,000,000), and Maine ($233,000,000). Such a condition can mean only one thing; namely, that the businessmen and the property owners of the District of Columbia have one of the greatest, steadiest, and most profitable sources of income of any city in the world. The reason for it is, of course, manifold, not the least of which is the fact that very close to 100,000 Federal employees who, with Army officers, congressional people, and others, draw approximately $200,000,000 yearly in salaries, much of which is spent of necessity for high rents, food, and other commodities, while the people's tax money collected from all over the United States and so paid to such employees flows into the bank accounts of Washington, D. C., businessmen and property owners. This condition is further emphasized by the fact that in 1935 I found the spendable income of Washington, D. C., to be approximately $918 per capita as compared to $680 in Mid-Atlantic States, its nearest competitors in the way of such spendable income, while the national average of spendable income was $486, and that for the State of Iowa, in which I live, $464.

One might readily conclude from the above facts that the District of Columbia could, therefore, very appropriately shoulder the cost of operating this Federal city by virtue of the fact that property owners and businessmen receive the benefit of the pay checks of thousands of Federal employees that come regularly every 30 days and the profits from one of the most extensive tourist trades on the continent, resulting, of course, from the spending of taxpayers' money to erect Federal buildings and attractions that draw the crowds.

The fact of the matter is that the tax rates in the District of Columbia are extremely low. It has been brought to my attention that in 1930 a certain $10,000 property was forced to pay $153 in taxes, think of that, while residents of Jersey City, not so far away, got out with such properties for $303; Cleveland for $231, and in my country are only required to pay twice or three times that amount with a far less comprehensive source of incomes and profits. I understand that the tax rate in Washington is now $1.50 per $100 of actual value, and emphasis is laid upon the fact that the tax is levied against the actual value; but I would suggest that you attempt to buy some of the properties so listed at the taxable valuation given in. For that matter let the Government try to buy them, understand I emphasize the word "try."

It is a most unfortunate thing that rentals in Washington are obviously based upon supposed sale values of property which have been enhanced by the fact that the seat of the Federal Government is located at this point. It is obvious to any thinking citizen that the erection of such buildings as the Federal triangle, the Washington and Lincoln Memorials, the United States Capitol, the Congressional Library, accessible to all citizens for research purposes in the building, the Federal museums and the long lists of other like structures, serve as a tremendous attraction to people of the United States. Whenever they come here to see those sights that have been built with their money they pay the high rents that are being charged, the high costs of food and other expenses of a like character. It should seem a bit unfair to use the expenditures of tax money as justification for enhancing rentals and extracting them from the people who have either paid the taxes or people who have relatives and permanent homes in other sections of the United States to which they would and should be sending their profits. Reasonable salaries of Federal employees are absorbed almost entirely in Washington by virtue of high costs.

When we read some of the articles in Washington newspapers we are almost prompted to think that the existence of the Federal City in the midst of the businessmen of the city of Washington is an actual handicap. As far back as 1892 I find the following statement from a report of a select committee of the House appointed to inquire into the assessment and taxation of real estate in the District of Columbia:

> Already the effect of the growth and improvement of the Federal District has been, by the increase of land values, to give hundreds of millions to the fortunate few but to increase the cost of living to such a degree as to make it a serious question with many of the officers and employees of the National Government who are called on to live here, and if this tendency continues not only will the salaries paid to employees of the United States soon become entirely inadequate to the scale of living for which they were intended but the Capital of the American Republic must ere long present such a contrast between luxurious idleness and poverty-stricken workers as can be exceeded in no capital of confessedly aristocratic countries.

Let us remember that advertisements have appeared in newspapers during the past few years indicating properties for sale with a net income of over 20 percent on investment. Let us remember to take note of the fact that the probate court records indicate a tremendous percentage of estates amounting to $200,000 or more left to heirs in Washington. Let us remember that the other advantages to the average resident are so many and varied that it is practically impossible to list them, including the registration of automobiles at a cost representing a fraction of the cost in your State and mine. True they are taxed as property, but at what percentage of their value, I ask you?

It is high time that the United States Congress take these facts and many others into consideration when passing the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Let us remember that the presence of the Capitol therein is a tremendous financial advantage to business interests that seek to have taxpayers all over the United States contribute to the support of their city from which they receive the profits. I am a citizen of the United States and proud of the United States Capital. I want to see it beautiful, but I do not want to see a few individuals, property owners, and businessmen extract undue profits from Federal employees and from the taxpayers who have developed the real, true foundation for the business. I would remind all people who are on the pay roll of the United States Government that these matters are of importance to them as tenants and as consumers of goods in the District. They should keep those circumstances before them when they read some of the news stories about the manner in which Congress is supposed to impose upon the District.

I continue to be of the opinion that the United States Capital ought to be moved to the center of the United States where it would be safer from a military standpoint and more advantageous from many others; but if it is not moved, then it is the duty of the Congress to see that the employees of the Government receive a square deal and are not abused from the standpoint of having their salaries completely absorbed by high rents and other charges. If that responsibility should carry us to the erection of Federal housing quarters for those said employees, all well and good. Something must be done to see that all the profits from the advantages of the city of Washington are not absorbed by a few but are scattered among those who work for Uncle Sam and returned, as much as possible, to their source all over the United States and retained by those people. We must likewise, for reasons enumerated, keep the District appropriation within bounds.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TEXAS-PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 66, providing for the participation by the United States in the Greater Texas-Pan American Exposition, to be held in the State of Texas during the year 1937.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 66. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Texas be good enough to tell us how much money is involved in this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There is no new money involved. This is simply an authorization for Federal participation in the centennial exposition which was held in Dallas last year and which it is proposed to continue this year under a different name. There is an unexpended balance, and this authorizes the expenditure of such part of that unexpended balance as may be necessary for this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. About $300,000 unexpended.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when this measure was first under consideration 2 years ago they asked for an unusually large amount, namely, $3,000,000. At that time a good many of us objected to the amount, saying it was excessive, and now the proof of that contention is evident.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman that the proof shows that we were economical in the expenditure of those funds. We could have expended it all, but we realized we might want to carry it on for this year, and we conserved the amount and left sufficient to carry it on, and probably a little bit more. We are not going to spend it all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman means that this money is burning in the pockets down there and they do not want to return it to the Treasury?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Oh, the gentleman is correct, as usual.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission) to be composed of the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition in the State of Texas during the year 1937.

SEC. 2. There is hereby created a United States Commissioner General for such exposition, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall serve without compensation The expenses of said Commissioner General and the salary and expenses of such staff as he may require shall be paid out of the funds made available by this joint resolution for a period of time covering the duration of the exposition and not to exceed a 6 months' period following the closing thereof, and for such period prior to the opening of the exposition as the Commission shall determine.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of said Commissioner General and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable, in order that there may be exhibited at such exposition by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments such articles and materials and documents as will best tend to illustrate the functions and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrate the nature of our institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. The Commissioner General is authorized to appoint such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary and to fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, purchase such materials, and contract for such labor and other services as are necessary, and exercise such powers as are delegated to him by the Commission.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with the said Commissioner General in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the Commission such articles, specimens, and exhibits which said Commission shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such exposition, to contract for such labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary, and to designate officials or employees of their departments, independent offices, and establishments to assist said Commissioner General. At the close of the exposition, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner General shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments, independent offices, and establishments from which taken, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions, fairs, and other celebrations, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the funds made available herein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the department, independent office, or establishment from which it was taken, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. The Commission is further authorized to rent such space as it may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; and to provide for the decoration of buildings or structures, for the proper maintenance of buildings or structures, site, and grounds occupied by the United States during the period of the exposition. The funds made available herein may be used for the operation of such building or buildings, structure or structures, including light, heat, water, gas, janitor, and other required services; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arrangement, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibit; for the payment of all necessary expenses of such Commissioner General, and for the compensation of other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, and for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $6 per day: Provided, That no such Government official or employee so designated shall receive a salary in excess of the amount which he has been receiving in the department, independent office, or establishment where employed, plus such reasonable allowance for travel, including travel by air, and subsistence expenses as may be deemed proper by the Commissioner General; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers and all other appropriate publications, and ice and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner General in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished visitors; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions to said Commissioner General, and said Commissioner General, with the consent of the Commission, may subdelegate them: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representative may allot funds made available herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment, for the purpose of defraying any expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by the said Commissioner General, or by such assistants as he may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, or permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized herein: And provided further, That in the construction of exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, shall be paid.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner General, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds made available by this joint resolution. The Commissioner General is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow materials or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the exposition or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner General shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property: Provided, That all disposition of such materials and property shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 8. The rights and liabilities under existing contracts entered into by the United States Texas Centennial Commission under the authority granted to it by Public Resolution No. 69, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved February 11, 1936, shall be transferred to and assumed by the Commission established by this joint resolution. All authority, powers, and duties of the United States Texas Centennial Commission under such Public Resolution No. 69, and all unexpended balances of appropriations available to said Commission, shall be transferred to the United States Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition Commission to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution. Such unexpended balances of appropriations shall remain available until expended. Any monuments, statues, markers, buildings, and other structures erected or constructed, and any lands, historic papers, and paintings purchased, by the United States Texas Centennial Commission directly under contract shall be transferred to the Commission established by this joint resolution, and any such property may be assigned by such latter Commission in the manner prescribed by section 2 of such Public Resolution No. 69. This section shall take effect on the date of the submission to the Congress of the final report of the United States Texas Centennial Commission, as provided by section 9 of Public Resolution No. 37, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 28, 1935.

SEC. 9. All funds allocated by the United States Texas Centennial Commission to the Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations under the provisions of such Public Resolution No. 69 shall be transferred, on the date of enactment of this joint resolution, to said Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations to carry out the purposes for which such funds were so allocated.

SEC. 10. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the exposition, a detailed statement of all expenditures, and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out section 9 and insert:

"SEC. 9. Any funds allocated by the United States Texas Centennial Commission to the Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations under the provisions of such Public Resolution No. 69 may be transferred in the discretion of the Commission upon the enactment of this joint resolution to said Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations to carry out the purposes for which such funds were so allocated."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 110 and proceed with its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, approved June 29, 1936, Joseph P. Kennedy is declared to be eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Virginia tell us the reason why it is necessary to pass this resolution at this time? What are the conditions that Mr. Kennedy cannot comply with?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will recall that in section 201 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act passed here last year there was provision that in the appointment of members to the Maritime Commission no member shall hold office as a member of the Commission who, within 3 years prior to his appointment, shall have had any pecuniary interest in any carrier by water or substantial pecuniary interest in another person who derives a substantial portion of his revenues from any business associated with ships or shipping.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think that is a good provision of law?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; in the main; but I very seriously question as to whether it would apply to a man like Mr. Kennedy. I think it is too general in its terms.

Mr. SNELL. Why does not the gentleman, who is the chairman of that committee, amend the bill and make it more specific?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman knows that when the bill was passed in the last Congress there was no opportunity to go to conference. I do not know whether this particular point would have been in conference or not. In the main the provision is a salutary one, and I do not know that there is any amendment that I would suggest; but I do question, first, whether Mr. Kennedy had any substantial interest; and if he did, owing to the outstanding qualifications of Mr. Kennedy and his ability in the performance of work, I think that the Senate resolution is a salutary one.

I do not know Mr. Kennedy. I never met him. I would not know him if he were to come on this floor; but I do know the character of the service that he rendered as Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Now, let us get at the particular supposedly disqualifying element. He had 1,100 shares of stock in the Todd Shipbuilding Co. He was frank enough and honest enough, when approached by the President to accept this position, which he did not want, to say that he held this stock and it might disqualify him. The matter was put up to the Attorney General, and, as I recall, the Attorney General felt that was not a substantial interest so as to disqualify him.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. If the Attorney General says that does not disqualify him, why is it necessary to pass this legislation, if you have any confidence in your Attorney General?

Mr. BLAND. I had not finished.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I suggest that among his holdings it was found he had a $20,000 mortgage on a small oil tanker which belonged to no fleet but which was operated by Mr. Kennedy's brother-in-law, and that was the disturbing factor.

Mr. SNELL. Was not that matter brought to the attention of the Attorney General?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think that was.

Mr. McCORMACK. Under a literal interpretation of the law, ownership of this mortgage would represent a direct interest in shipping, and that is the real difficulty. I may say that my colleagues on the Republican side know Mr. Kennedy personally as well as I do. He is one of the outstanding men.

Mr. SNELL. This is not a question of Mr. Kennedy's ability in any way. I do not know the gentleman. I imagine he is probably one of the best men you are appointing to that Commission, but I just want to call the attention of the House to the fact that if the Republican organization asked to make a special exemption so some particular man could take one of these jobs, you men would go right through the roof and want to know if he was the only man in the United States who could fill it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think so.

Mr. SNELL. I know you would, from experience.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman does not accuse the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SNELL. My terms are all general. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I was going to say I hoped the gentleman would make it general.

Mr. SNELL. But I have had some experience here, and I know how you people would tear around here if we asked to make a special exemption so some man could take one of these jobs, especially if he had been a large campaign contributor. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Kennedy is all right for the job, but if you actually believed your own Attorney General, who says there is no reason for this law, you would not ask to have it passed at this time.

Mr. BLAND. I am not sure whether this mortgage question was submitted to the Attorney General or not. I think Senator COPELAND said he did bring the matter to the attention of the Attorney General, and the Attorney General said there might be some question by reason of that mortgage.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to say that the Attorney General said it was not necessary.

Mr. BLAND. As to the 1,100 shares. I had not finished.

Mr. SNELL. It is unfortunate that he had the mortgage, is it not?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. I had not finished the statement at the time I was interrupted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], but I will say that every man who spoke in the Senate—and it must be peculiarly gratifying to Mr. Kennedy to read the RECORD—every man who spoke there spoke of his splendid ability for this particular office, and that he, probably of all men who were appointed, would be able to bring order out of chaos in this terrible situation.

So far as a recommendation coming from the Republican side, I believe in dealing with practical questions in a practical way, and if it is necessary to put in an exception it does not make any difference to me which side of the aisle it comes from, if the general good of the American people is accomplished by that exception. I am for it; I do not care where it comes from.

Mr. SNELL. I believe in dealing with practical questions in a practical way, but I have some doubt that you people on the Democratic side always do. I am not going to object to this, because I really think Mr. Kennedy is the best man you have got on your Commission, but I want to call attention to what you are doing to put him on there and how you would have squirmed if we had tried to do that ourselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right to object to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia.

I wish to ask whether or not it was the intention of Mr. Kennedy to divest himself of these interests?

Mr. BLAND. It is my understanding that it was, certainly as to the 1,100 shares. As to the other, I do not know whether he could divest himself of that mortgage or not. That boat is not owned by any shipping company. It is owned by a brother-in-law.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is, I believe, a very salutary rule which the Congress has adopted in this connection. I hold in very high esteem the talents of Mr. Kennedy, although he might come under the designation of an "economic royalist." I believe, however, it would be very healthy if there should be removed any suggestion that his interest was continuing.

Mr. BLAND. The record shows that as to the 1,100 shares he had placed them with some concern with the request that they be sold, and sold before he took the oath of office.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I should like to read an excerpt from a letter from Mr. Kennedy to Senator COPELAND. I read as follows:

The procedure I should like to follow, if agreeable to your committee, is to turn this stock over to Mr. Elisha Walker, senior partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., with instructions to dispose of it within the next 60 days. The reason for my putting a time limit on it is because very rarely, if ever, is any of the stock sold; and, as the newspapers have already given notice that I propose to sell it, I feel there will be a thin market and it will take a little time to dispose of it. I shall put it beyond my control, however, before taking oath of office. I think an understanding of these facts will clear my position much more satisfactorily, at least in my own mind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSECT PESTS AND PLANT DISEASES

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 75, making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be made immediately available and remain available until expended; and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be necessary to replenish the fund to its original amount at the beginning of each fiscal year: Provided, That such appropriations shall"; and the House agree to the same.

MARVIN JONES,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
W. L. NELSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

BURTON K. WHEELER,
GUY M. GILLETTE,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: This amendment strikes out the Senate provisions authorizing the appropriation of a fund of $5,000,000 for the purposes of the resolution and appropriations of such additional sums as may be necessary to replenish such fund to its original amount at the beginning of each fiscal year and inserted provisions authorizing an appropriaton of $100,000 for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, to transfer from the appropriations available to the Secretary such sums as the Secretary deems necessary for the purposes of the resolution. The conference agreement restores the Senate provisions except that the fund authorized to be appropriated is $2,000,000 instead of $5,000,000.

On amendment no. 2: This is a technical amendment made necessary by House amendment no. 1; and in view of the conference agreement in respect thereof the House recedes.

On amendment no. 3: This is a corrective amendment; and the Senate recedes from its disagreement.

MARVIN JONES,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
W. L. NELSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BOEHNE, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4951. An act to amend section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 (49 Stat. L. 2008–2009).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 448. An act for the relief of C. C. Young;

H. R. 3898. An act to amend section 318 of the Communications Act of 1934;

H. R. 4951. An act to amend section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 (49 Stat. L. 2008–2009);

H. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to amend Public Law No. 780, Seventy-fourth Congress, to authorize the acquisition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, for the purpose of making a correction therein; and

H. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution for the payment of certain employees of the United States Government in the District of Columbia and employees of the District of Columbia for January 20, 1937.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, coming as a deeper shock to the Nation than Mr. Roosevelt's original proposal to pack the Supreme Court was his radio assault on the judiciary broadcast on the evening of March 4 from the $100-a-plate victory dinner, held in Washington at the Mayflower Hotel.

The President abandoned the pretense and camouflage which befogged his message to Congress and at last clearly drew the line of his fight to change by his imperious will the form of our Republic.

First. He makes it a purely party issue, and upon that issue predicates the continued prosperity of the Democratic Party.

Second. He dismisses with not a word 18,000,000 Americans who did not vote for him, and calls upon Democrats to put party loyalty above loyalty to the constitutional Government of the United States.

Third. He makes it clear that he is utterly unwilling to permit the citizens of the United States any opportunity to consider the grave potentialities involved in this fundamental question, and insists that the situation which he brands as being as dangerous, or more dangerous, than that of 1933, will not wait beyond this session of Congress.

Fourth. He makes it clear by his alarmist attitude that he intends to frighten both the Congress and the people into a stampede for his proposal if possible.

Fifth. He did not cite a single instance specifically which is so serious that it cannot wait beyond this session of the Congress, but endeavored to dissemble by picking out of our whole history the antislavery amendment to the Constitution and endeavored in his speech to give the impression that it might take 40 years to get a constitutional amendment to secure a proper broadening of organic law, totally ignoring several constitutional amendments which have been approved by the people through their State legislatures, or by State constitutional conventions, in from 9 to 18 months.

Mr. Roosevelt makes it very clear that regardless of the people or the Congress he wants what he wants—and he wants it now.

Mr. Roosevelt made it perfectly apparent that he means to attack, not only the independence of the Supreme Court but by his references to the inferior courts issuing injunctions with relation to the Tennessee Valley project, that he means to destroy the independence of the inferior courts as well.

Mr. Roosevelt did not deign to discuss a single point as to the fundamentals of free government, the preservation of a constitutional republic, the security of the liberties of the people, or the possibilities of future abuse of the power which he is imperiously demanding. He stressed instead party success, the Dust Bowl, floods, strikes, and the "one-third of the population that is ill-fed, ill-clad, and ill-housed."

In consecutive sentences he claimed that his first term had restored prosperity, achieved reforms, improved the moral atmosphere, and yet still leaves the country facing another crisis "fundamentally even more grave than that of 4 years ago." His own statement forces one of two conclusions—either that 4 years of the New Deal have only resulted in intensifying, not eliminating, the problems of 1933, or else that the new crisis is primarily of the President's own making. That the latter is the case Mr. Roosevelt demonstrated in his speech.

One of the most significant points in the President's talk was his statement that—

> As Chief Executive and as head of the Democratic Party, I am unwilling to take these risks to the country and to the party of postponing for one moment beyond absolute necessity the time when we can free from legal doubt these policies which offer a progressive solution of our problems. Floods and droughts and agricultural surpluses, strikes and industrial confusion and disorder cannot be handled forever on a catch-as-catch-can basis.

Leaders of both parties in the Congress are discussing the sinister significance of that statement, as they recall that Mr. Roosevelt himself has time and again told the American people that his policy has been one of experimentation, and that "if one experiment fails, we will try another." These leaders see in that experimental policy exactly what Mr. Roosevelt refers to as a "catch-as-catch-can basis of government, which he now declares he wants to make permanent by depriving the courts of their independence of judgment, rendering them susceptible to coercion by the Executive, and thereby assuring that all legal doubt as to his experimental policies will be removed through his ability to persuade the courts to agree to the constitutionality of anything that he has attempted, or may in the future attempt.

He goes even further in what in Washington is regarded as an unprecedented assault upon the independence of the judiciary when he said, "The Ohio River and the Dust Bowl are not conversant with the habits of the interstate commerce clause; we shall never be safe in our lives nor property, or in the heritage of our soil until we have somehow made the interstate commerce clause conversant with the habits of the Ohio River and the Dust Bowl."

Mr. Roosevelt, of course, was referring directly to the courts by that phrase, "the interstate commerce clause", and his language can mean only that he intends, if possible, to compel the courts to adjust their decisions as to the constitutionality of acts to his desires to experiment, and that government in the future will be, not by laws measured by the Constitution, but by court decisions measured by Mr. Roosevelt's opinions and desires. He completely ignored the fact that for a century the Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of Government control of flood conditions on navigable streams, or streams which could be made navigable. The Boulder Dam decision in the Arizona suit is a case in point.

One of the most alarming and significant inferences Mr. Roosevelt made in his speech was concerning the prevalance of strikes and disorders, which he clearly implied he would end if he were given authority to change the personnel of the courts to suit himself.

Privately, the best friends of labor on both sides of the Congress see clearly what this implies for the future.

The Supreme Court has upheld as a right of labor the use of the instrument of the peaceful strike and of picketing, as a method of achieving collective bargaining for proper hours, wages, and working conditions. That right is now possessed within the hands of organized labor itself. But the friends of labor in the Congress discern very clearly that if Mr. Roosevelt can force the courts to declare constitutional the control by the Government of hours and wages and working conditions, that right of labor of collective bargaining, and of using the instrument of the strike and picketing will vanish, and such collective bargaining, if followed by a strike, would be considered insurrection against the United States Government, and would bring labor face to face with the Regular Army.

Every labor leader knows that the United States Government never has, and does not now, recognize the right of either collective bargaining or strikes on the part of its employees. And the moment Mr. Roosevelt is able to have declared constitutional the control by the Federal Government over working conditions, hours, and wages in the United States, unless this control is very carefully drawn and limited by a constitutional amendment, that moment the independence of workingmen, insofar as their rights to collective bargaining or to striking are concerned, and such control they, as independent and free American citizens, now exercise over their own destinies would vanish, because they would then be directly under the authority and power of the Federal Government.

These are the outstanding phases of the President's declaration, in his first of a series of talks that are being discussed by the leaders of thought in Washington, and these are the phases that will be discussed by the serious-minded citizens all over the United States.

The general consensus of opinion among those who have a deep regard for the American form of government is that Mr. Roosevelt's utterance is that of a potential dictator who desires this power under a promise that he will get out of office in 1940 and turn it over to some, as yet, unknown successor whose policies are, of course, unknown to this country, and whose use of these new and tremendous "instruments of public power" cannot be foretold.

The aspect of this proposal that is most alarming earnest citizens, however, is that every power that the President is asking under this proposal is a two-edged sword, which in the hands of the puppets of a political autocracy can be turned into shackles of our liberties which would bind the farmers, the laboring man, the businessman, flood sufferers, Dust Bowl sufferers, and every other citizen of this country.

The fact that Mr. Roosevelt is now going to do battle—the battle of his political career—to endeavor to whip by every power of patronage, punishment, and propaganda, his measure through this present session of Congress, clearly shows that he does not intend, if he can avoid it, to allow the people time to ponder the portentous possibilities hidden in this measure, and certainly he clearly indicates that he has no desire to follow the constitutional method of submitting this question to the people for their decision. He deliberately closes his mind to the fact that it is their Constitution—not his alone.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert in connection therewith two excerpts from a publication known as the Twentieth Century Fund.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein part of the opinion of the Court in the famous case of Marbury against Madison.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a summary of certain excerpts from publications of the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] is recognized for 50 minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from a certain letter of six paragraphs, extracts from court proceedings and press comments thereon which I shall discuss, including in particular a short extract of a few paragraphs from the hearings of the House Judiciary Subcommittee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask not to be interrupted until I have completed my statement.

TO CONTINUE SELECT COMMITTEE WILL FURTHER RETARD LEGISLATION FOR BONDHOLDERS

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 78 is a resolution to continue the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations. That committee was appointed pursuant to House Resolution 412 of the Seventy-third Congress for the purpose of investigating real-estate organizations and "ordered to report to the Congress as soon as practicable the results of its study, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation."

This investigation was started because of the great number of complaints received by Members of this body that bondholders' committees were serving special interests and not the bondholders in general; that these committees, their lawyers, and accountants were charging exorbitant fees; that the courts were not properly advised with respect to the plans of reorganizations, and as a result bondholders were being defrauded; that 77B of the Bankruptcy Act permitted certain abuses which could only be stopped by an amendment of the act. These were the reasons for the investigation.

All of us were in favor of such an investigation. The country was in the throes of a depression. Real-estate prices had hit bottom and thousands of bond issues were in default. Committees had been appointed and either had prepared their plans of reorganization or were doing so. That was in 1934. Since then those reorganizations have either been completed or soon will be completed. And, so far as the Congress is concerned, the only thing that we have done to aid these bondholders, at least during the past 2 years, is to delay and retard relief legislation for the bondholders by the activities of our select committee.

Almost 2 years ago—August 22, 1935, page 14141, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session—when the chairman of the select committee procured additional funds for this committee, bringing the total up to $110,000, I asked him:

If this money is appropriated, is it the gentleman's opinion he can come in here in January with proper legislation recommended to accomplish the purposes for which the committee was appointed?

To this question the gentleman replied:

We think so.

I asked that question because of my interest in securing such legislation as may be necessary to help the bondholders. I wanted to obtain at least some assurance that we were getting somewhere toward providing that aid. A great many of these bondholders are constituents of mine, and it is my duty to them to do everything I can to see that proper legislation is enacted to aid them.

To provide that aid we need corrective legislation and not needless investigations. For 3 years we have been investigating. If our committee has not developed the facts by this time, I doubt if it ever will. Judging from the results thus far obtained, these bondholders either will be dead or completely beyond any legislative aid. If we are friends of these bondholders and if we really appreciate their predicament, it is our duty to give them aid when they need it—not 5 years after the reorganizations are completed. As a matter of fact, it is virtually too late now to afford them proper assistance. It will certainly be too late next year.

The last hearing that was held on any legislation suggested by the chairman of the select committee was exactly a year ago today—March 26, 1936—before the Judiciary Committee. I do not believe the select committee chairman has done a single thing subsequently toward urging any legislation for the relief of the bondholders before this body or any committee of the House. If anything, the activities of his committee, acting under his direction and responsibility, have served not only to delay legislation but virtually to preclude it. The activities of his committee have really served to prevent this House from arriving at a definite and acceptable legislative program to meet the real-estate bondholders' situations.

The most that has been done by the chairman of the select committee is to secure the passage of resolutions extending the investigation and to secure the passage of resolutions appropriating additional funds for continued investigations.

The responsibility for this situation is not that of the select committee as a whole. I am certain that the members of that committee have been sincere in their efforts as they pursued their work under the committee chairman. The responsibility for this situation rests with the chairman. He has complete charge of the investigation, and he has, as I will shortly point out in some detail, allowed it to become something other than a congressional investigation.

Mr. Speaker, because, as I said, of my interest in the bondholders whom we seek to aid, and because also of my desire to see corrective legislation enacted, I have carefully gone through the hearings held before the Judiciary Committee. Upon reading the testimony presented by the chairman of the select committee before the Judiciary Committee on March 6, 1936, with reference to H. R. 10634, I noted that the question arose with regard to attorneys employed with the select committee intervening in court proceedings. That is an important question to us, and it certainly was not the purpose of the select committee investigation as authorized by this House to have attorneys employed with our committee use that status to intervene in court proceedings as representatives of certain bondholders and then petition the court for large fees for their services.

EXCERPTS FROM TESTIMONY OF MR. SABATH BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ON MARCH 6, 1936

Mr. SABATH, when he appeared before the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee on March 6, 1936, flatly stated that no attorney representing the select committee in Chicago applied to the court for a fee of $25,000. I quote from his testimony:

Mr. SHELL. Might I have permission to ask Judge SABATH a question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. SHELL. Didn't one of the lawyers that your committee appointed in Chicago apply for a fee of $25,000 on behalf of your committee?

Mr. SABATH. No; he did not. I will tell you if you want to know something about that.

Mr. SHELL. I haven't examined the official record.

Mr. SABATH. All right, Mr. Shell.

Mr. SHELL. You must know what it is. It states something like that.

Mr. SABATH. The committee has a body of over forty-two-odd lawyers, without pay, to aid and cooperate with the committee. Naturally, we could not ask them that they should divest themselves of all or such little business that they might have had, because we couldn't pay them.

* * * * * * *

He applied to the appellate division, and in that appeal he filed a claim for $25,000, as he stated that he believed—and he knew in advance that it would not be allowed—that it would give him a chance to appeal that case and to reach the object that he was after, which was to get a reconsideration or retrial of the original case.

He had no authority to do that; and I have stated that this committee does not approve of such methods; that we have gone as far as we could.

* * * * * * *

We don't wish to exceed our authority; and we have held down the lawyers and the investigators and examiners as much as we could. But, nevertheless, sometimes we get some of these attorneys who do desire to go after the people that they believe are guilty of these fraudulent acts; and it is not so easy to succeed in view of the conditions that exist; that I do not wish to mention now. I may bring them to your attention later on.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MICHENER. You say that you had 40 or 50 lawyers who would go into the courts?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Did your committee go to the expense of appearing in lawsuits on behalf of bondholders?

Mr. SABATH. I will tell you what we did do. The resolution that you passed last year gave the committee the right to submit it to the court if we found any fraud or evasion of the law. Shortly after this committee had been created, realizing the tremendous task and the small amount of money that was appropriated, I tried to obtain the cooperation of a number of associations and others. But I learned within a short space of time that that would be impossible.

So I succeeded in obtaining many independent lawyers who felt that these abuses should be eliminated; and they have volunteered their services; and I have assigned them, or the committee has assigned them, to some cases here and there that came in by the complainants or by these unfortunate bondholders where they have shown that fraud is being perpetrated and that they are being wiped out or that their bonds have been obtained from them by fraud, and that the charges against the management of the properties were unjustifiably high, and that their rights were being jeopardized.

Mr. MICHENER. Then, as a matter of fact, your committee has been sort of taking the position as attorney for the people?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MICHENER. And you have been going into court and prosecuting or defending suits——

Mr. SABATH. No. Just calling attention of the court to certain facts.

Mr. MICHENER. With voluntary lawyers.

In other words, some lawyer comes to you, and, as chairman of the committee, you appoint him as your representative to go into court and appear in behalf of certain litigants.

Of course, I have gone along with your committee, and I intend to continue doing so; but I am sure that the House never had any such notion when they granted the money.

Mr. SABATH. Not the litigants.

Mr. MICHENER. I am sure that they didn't intend that you would be general counsel for the people all over the country and furnish counsel in lawsuits.

Mr. SABATH. We have not taken any business away from lawyers.

Mr. MICHENER. It is not a question of business. I thought that your purpose was—and that is what we are trying to do here—to go out and investigate and get the facts and bring those facts back to Congress; and on those facts we would predicate legislation.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I thought that that was your function.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Not to be going about the country trying lawsuits and designating some men who later might take a case into court and later on present a bill for a fee of $25,000, if that is correct. Is that correct?

Mr. SABATH. That was one case, and the committee immediately notified the judge that he had no right to do that as representing the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to understand what they did.

Mr. SABATH. They did appear as friends of the court; and I have letters here from many courts where they thanked the committee.

We have called to the particular attention of the court whenever we did obtain a great deal of information which we thought would help the courts to pass on matters. I have stated to the field men to submit it to the court, so that the court would know it and would obtain the evidence and the information which came to us after weeks and months of investigation.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MICHENER. These attorneys, then, who intervened at the suggestion of the committee, were not receiving any compensation?

Mr. POWERS. No.

Mr. MICHENER. They did it just out of the goodness of their hearts?

Mr. POWERS. Yes. None of us ever received any pay or asked for any fee in court.

Mr. SUMNERS. Is it clear what the relation of these attorneys has been?

Mr. CHANDLER. No.

Mr. SABATH. None of these attorneys could be interested in any of the reorganizations or in any of the matters where they could charge any fees. They agreed to aid the committee gratis, without charging any fees or without receiving any compensation. And in addition to that, they could not be in any way interested in any portion of that particular reorganization. That has been made clear.

Mr. SUMNERS. Did these attorneys who appeared in these cases appear as representatives or as connected with the Sabath committee?

Mr. POWERS. No. They intervened in cases on behalf of a single bondholder.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SABATH. We have lawyers in Boston and other places, Detroit. We have had five or six gentlemen who cooperated with us in Detroit without any compensation whatsoever.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. How was the contract of employment or the agreement with the bondholders with the attorney made?

Mr. SABATH. If you will permit me, I have not been very much in these offices. We have an office in Chicago, one in Detroit, one in Philadelphia, one in New York, one in Boston, one in St. Louis, one in San Francisco, one in——

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. You understand my question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, I do. What I mean is that I am not in there when these people come in.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MICHENER. You understand, Judge, that my position is this: I hope that we can work out a law here which can prevent a repetition of these abuses. But you have said a little while ago that you had 40 or 50 lawyers around the country who were appearing in courts just gratis.

I know something about lawyers; and the gratis lawyer in nine cases out of ten sees over the hill; and when he follows up the case he gets this information from your committee which makes a case for him later on.

This testimony by the chairman of the select committee appeared so contradictory and inconsistent that I was prompted to inquire further into the whole situation in connection with the work of the select committee. At the request of the Judiciary Committee, the chairman of the select committee filed with the Judiciary Committee the names and addresses of attorneys who were employed by our select committee and who, as the select committee chairman alleges, offered their services gratis. Gentlemen, from my study of this matter I find that we need a new definition of the term "gratis."

I am opposed to any extension of this investigation. First, because there certainly can be no further need for it; the need now is for legislation; and, secondly, the public is tired of and disgusted with this investigation.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I decline to yield to the gentleman at the present time. If I have time at the conclusion of my remarks, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Is it part of the parliamentary procedure here that when a Member who has the floor mentions another Member in a derogatory manner and criticizes him, the other gentleman has not the right to interrogate him?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RANDOLPH). The gentleman having the floor may not be interrupted unless he yields.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not the unwritten law and parliamentary courtesy that the gentleman having the floor should yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may be the unwritten law, but the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CHURCH. These hearings and the reports that come to me, and I speak only with reference to Chicago, indicate that the select committee chairman is conducting this committee in such a way that it is no longer proceeding as a fact-finding body, but proceeding by stump speeches and wild harangues, fanning the flames of hatred among bondholders, soliciting them to deposit bonds with the committee, and then farming them out to attorneys who present wild and fantastic charges to the courts, which they cannot and do not support with evidence and facts, and in the end petition the court for exorbitant fees. The reaction of the public to these activities has been so clearly stated in the newspapers that I am going to refer to some of these statements in reviewing the committee's work.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is making derogatory remarks and is indulging in insinuations against a committee of which I have the honor of being chairman. I have not been informed that the gentleman would take the floor today and make these wild, unjustifiable, untrue remarks and insinuations. In view of that fact and in view of the further fact that he refuses to yield for a question, I feel the gentleman should be held down to the rules of the House and not be permitted to vio- gentleman at the end of my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair requests the gentleman to proceed in order.

Mr. CHURCH. I may say I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman at the end of my statement.

SABATH COMMITTEE STIRS HATRED OF BONDHOLDERS BY STUMP SPEECHES

The Detroit (Mich.) News, in an editorial November 27, 1934, described the committee's meeting in Detroit, as follows:

SABATH TALKED TOO MUCH

The Sabath committee is leaving an agent in Detroit to arrange for an audit of the books of various firms figuring in the local real-estate bond situation.

The performance put on by Representative SABATH in his short stay in our midst last week suggests that the audit might better have been made before the committee's arrival. The heat generated by the committee in its 2 days here appears to have been out of proportion to the light it threw on the subject.

It has been common knowledge to everyone who knows his way about that sharp practice has gone into the handling of some realty receiverships by some lawyers. The Sabath committee brought to its local hearing a presumption that every attempt to salvage bonded real estate here was dishonestly conceived and carried out.

In its examination of witnesses, it appeared to know the answers so well that frequently the dialog was between a Congressman putting a question and another Congressman answering for the witness.

Much of the remaining time was given over to oratory by the chairman. The local bench and bar were denounced, and those who read the reports of the hearings might well assume that any party to any receivership or reorganization of bonded realty in Detroit was a fee chiseler.

It is hoped that when the committee returns in the winter to resume the inquiry it can proceed with fewer stump speeches, fewer plays to the gallery, fewer preconceptions that everyone connected with the business under scrutiny is a scoundrel, and a larger disposition to elicit the truth by taking testimony, to the end that the law be strengthened where it is weak and that any criminality turned up in the inquiry can be dealt with on the basis of something stronger than assumption.

The News joined with others in urging a probe of the subject which the Sabath committee is examining. It had in mind an orderly quest for the truth, not one in which a party of politicians arrive at conclusions regarding a Detroit situation before they arrive in Detroit.

I am advised that that is a typical description of the hearings in Chicago. These stump speeches of predictions and promises, based not on facts but bold assumptions, have disgusted bondholders and the public who expected our committee to elicit facts in a dignified, orderly way. Especially is this true in Chicago when the committee chairman is the head of a law firm—Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein—which has been accused publicly of charging bondholders excessive fees, while the chairman at the same time in another part of town was roaring his threats against lawyers in general who charge excessive fees.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is again making an accusation against the firm with which I am connected that it has been openly criticized for doing a wrong act, which I deny, and it is false. There are some newspapers that might have for certain reasons, and representing the very men that were investigated, made insinuations, but there is not a word of truth in anything they said. The firm I am connected with and the committee of which I am chairman have not done a single act which was not honorable, honest, upright, and aboveboard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. CHURCH. Let me read to you part of an editorial on this situation which appeared in the Chicago Tribune on December 9, 1935, entitled:

THE PROFITS OF CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION

Congressman SABATH is chairman of a congressional committee which has been investigating real-estate receiverships. It is a large subject and Mr. SABATH has strutted on every inch of it. His shining armor has gleamed as brightly as the spotlight. His naked sword has cut terrible swaths of air as he swung it now this way and now that. Congressman SABATH, in short, has been acting the role of crusader, rescuing a demoiselle named bondholder from wicked ogres. Among the wickedest is one known as excessive fees. Mr. SABATH is the sworn enemy of that ogre.

A few weeks ago Judge Barnes, of the Federal district court in Chicago, thought he smelled something a trifle dead. The smell arose from a real-estate reorganization which was proceeding in his court. The judge decided to have a look around. He was not frightened by the Congressman's sword nor discouraged by the stoutness of his armor. With a weapon no more powerful than a can opener the judge cut little holes here and there in the crusader's plating with the double purpose of relieving the gas pressure and seeing what was underneath.

When it was again possible to lower the windows the judge peeked beneath the armor. Imagine his amazement when he discovered that under the tin plate was something which assayed as pure ogre. Mr. SABATH's law firm had been paid $6,400 for legal services in connection with the reorganization in question. That is a tidy fee for competent services, but, according to the judge, the services in question were not even fair. For one thing, the papers in the case had not been properly signed. For another—and this is far more important—certain leases had been made to certain persons, which were not the best that might have been made. The bondholders were thereby deprived of income which belonged to them.

Judge Barnes did not specify whether the bondholders were the victims of carelessness on the part of Mr. SABATH and his associates or, alternatively, whether there had been active "skullduggery." He did, however, vacate the fee and invited Mr. SABATH and his partners to appeal.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, that again is a false statement. Judge Barnes enforced an order from which the firm could not appeal having retained jurisdiction, but later did allow fees and approved the work of the firm.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] will proceed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I raise the point of order that the gentleman has no right to state untruths and falsehoods on the floor of this House. Because some newspaper has made a misstatement does not justify the gentleman in making a charge on the floor of the House. It is untrue that the firm has been paid any such amount. It is untrue that the firm has received the money, and it is untrue that I have been in any way connected with that matter, because that matter had been in the firm long before I became a member of the firm and 2 or 3 years before the committee was created.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I submit the gentleman does not state a point of order and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] will proceed in order.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, this editorial continues as follows:

That puts the great crusader in a hot spot. If he doesn't appeal the inference will be unmistakable. If he does appeal he will thereby place a can opener in the hands of each of three appellate judges. His action in the premises, as the lawyers are so fond of saying, will be watched with interest.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I will yield at the end of my remarks. The editorial continues:

Meanwhile the incident is not without its larger significance. Mr. SABATH got himself appointed to the chairmanship of a congressional investigating committee. He used his enormous power to harass and abuse citizens. Some time later he is found at the receiving end of a substantial fee for legal services of questioned value. How many other fees may have been received it is not known.

* * * * * * *

The moral is that the powers which congressional investigators have been permitted to wield cannot safely be entrusted to anyone. The possibility of abuse is too great. Congress might well investigate this subject. It oughtn't to be an expensive inquiry because most of the witnesses will be found right in Washington. As a starter the investigators might find out from Mr. SABATH, under oath, how many real-estate receiverships his firm has handled since his inquiry began and what fees were paid. * * *

These are questions of the highest public importance. The American people ought not be kept permanently in the dark.

I do not know whether the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein was entitled to its fee. The judge decided they were not and disallowed it. The select committee chairman on December 9, 1935, in a public statement said that they were.

The point I am trying to make is that the people of Chicago have had enough of this investigation. The spreading of such affairs across the pages of the newspapers does not have a wholesome effect.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHURCH. Take, for instance, the editorial in the Chicago Daily News of the same date, which reads as follows:

LET NOT THY LEFT HAND KNOW

Federal Judge John P. Barnes has refused to allow payment of a fee of $6,400 to the law firm of Representative ADOLPH SABATH—Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein—in a receivership case involving the Northwest Building Corporation.

Without undertaking to pass upon the merits of this judicial order, one may be permitted to speculate as to whether or not the court took judicial cognizance of the vigorous grilling of other gentlemen involved in receivership proceedings by Representative SABATH, in his capacity as chairman of the congressional committee which has been investigating receivership and bankruptcy proceedings. In that role Representative SABATH has been relentless, both in prediction and in promise. Bad men must have trembled in their boots when he declared over a year ago: "If it is humanly possible, we will get at the brains of the racketeering. I can promise that nothing will call us off the inquiry, despite underground reports to the contrary. We will summon everybody before us, lawyers, bankers, and receivers included."

Cynics and other low persons may be inclined to find inconsistency between that utterance by Mr. SABATH and the summary action of the judge in depriving Mr. SABATH's firm of a fee in a receivership case. But what do such persons know of the canons and ethics of politics? Is it not one of the axioms of politics that no statesman must be held to responsibility for what his law partners do? In rendering public service, the American politician must take for his guide the admonition of the Good Book, which says: "When thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."

But that is not the only and far from the greatest complaint against the committee in Chicago.

SOLICITATIONS OF BONDS, FEES OF COMMITTEE LAWYERS, FEE SPLITTING

All of us who are to the slightest extent acquainted with reorganization procedure and the practices and problems involved know that the greatest curse to the speedy and economical adoption and completion of a plan of reorganization is the so-called shyster lawyer who manages to get a bondholder for a client and then proceeds to harass the bondholders' committee by filing motions and bills containing fantastic charges for the sole purpose of forcing the committee, in order to protect the interests of its depositing bondholders, to settle with him—in other words, to buy him off.

That this practice is freely indulged in is, of course, known to the select committee. All that the shyster lawyer wants is a client. His problem is to find one. I am told that certain of the activities of our select committee chairman has led directly to this practice. I hold before me a photostatic copy of a letter sent out under the name of the chairman of our committee, which to me seems incredible. It reads as follows:

DEAR SIR: During the investigation being made by this congressional committee it has arrived at an assumption that the original owners and holders of bonds on the above-named property may have a valid claim for recovery.

For the benefit of such bondholders it is desirable to place the question of probable recovery into hands of an attorney with view of presentation to proper courts.

To date, we understand, you have been led to believe that this investment is a total loss to you.

If you desire to share in any benefits which may develop, we ask you to sign enclosed authority so that an accredited attorney can be assigned to start proceedings. It is intended that this matter will cost you nothing unless recovery of some sort is obtained for you; in that case the attorney, and necessary accountants, handling the matter will expect to be paid on a contingent basis.

If you have transferred your bonds to someone else, please give us their name and address.

Should you not desire to concur in the above plan of procedure, please advise us. Otherwise, please sign the enclosed paper and return it immediately.

Respectfully yours,

ADOLPH J. SABATH, Chairman,
By J. L. TUPY,
Chicago Office, Room 703,
United States Courthouse, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is reading from a statement that some other individual has prepared, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] object to the gentleman reading the paper?

Mr. LUCAS. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is the custom which has prevailed in the House for many years to permit a Member to read a statement if he wishes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, and I insist on it. If the gentleman has personal knowledge of the facts or if he is reading his own prepared remarks, I am willing to permit him to proceed without interruption.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman was not here when I started my statement. These are facts. They are my statements and I am making them as my own. This is simply a letter I am quoting.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may not read a quotation without the consent of the House.

Mr. CHURCH. But I have received the consent of the House to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did not the gentleman secure such permission before he started?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I have had the unanimous consent of the House to present all of these matters.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentlemen had been here when this started, they would have heard the unanimous consent granted to me. If the Speaker will read the unanimous consent, I will appreciate it.

Mr. LUCAS. I insist on my point of order without any further argument on the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Let us hear what permission was granted before the gentleman started reading.

Mr. CHURCH. Not out of my time. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to have that read for the benefit of the two gentlemen who were not here when it was granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been informed of the parliamentary situation which arose during the temporary absence of the Chair. The question was raised as to what was included in the request of the gentleman who now occupies the floor with reference to the extension of his remarks. The Chair has been furnished with a transcript of the notes upon that request and it reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from a certain letter of six paragraphs, extracts from court proceedings and press comments thereon which I shall discuss, including in particular a short extract of a few paragraphs from the hearings of the House Judiciary Subcommittee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. To speak in an attempt to sustain the point of order that the unanimous-consent request which was granted does not entitle the gentleman to read letters or writings other than his own from the floor without obtaining permission of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand that if the point of order were sustained the gentleman would have, under that grant, the right to extend these remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, may I just state that the letter has been read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion the gentleman would probably have a right to extend his own remarks, but he would not have a right to read them now without the special permission of the House.

Mr. CHURCH. The letter has been read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order the gentleman from New York makes?

Mr. CHURCH. The six paragraphs have been read.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] made the point of order the rules of the House had been violated. The proper procedure, of course, would be to strike from the RECORD what has already been done.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] already has the right to print those in the RECORD. You cannot recall his having read them, because they have already been read.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] made a point of order against the gentleman's reading these matters. They were not his own composition. What has been done has been done, of course, but the gentleman should be cautioned to obey the rules of the House and not proceed further without getting the permission of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states on the point of order raised that rule XXX of the Rules of the House of Representatives provides:

> When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

It seems the gentleman now occupying the floor had obtained unanimous consent to read certain extracts from these letters which he says have already been read.

The gentleman will kindly proceed in order, within the limitations of the unanimous-consent request which has just been read by the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], who now has the floor, was given unanimouse consent to include certain excerpts. If I understand the gentleman's procedure up to this time, he has not included excerpts, but he has included the entire writings of the author of these particular letters or newspaper statements from which he has been quoting. I may be in error on that, but certainly when I made the point of order he read the entire document, and not any excerpts from the same. I still insist on the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order and is violating the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CHURCH. "Respectfully yours, ADOLPH J. SABATH, chairman."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker I make the point of order——

Mr. CHURCH. "By J. L. Tupy, Chicago office, room 703, United States Courthouse, Chicago, Ill."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That the gentleman is still violating the rules of the House by reading.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman is now reading?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I have just completed the sixth paragraph I had unanimous consent to read.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman is now reading?

Mr. CHURCH. I am now going to make a statement, and I shall do my best to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CHURCH. This is my statement.

Mr. SABATH. By whom is it signed there and undersigned? What was the second name, please?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I do not yield. I have tried to make that plain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CHURCH. That is a direct solicitation under the name of a committee of this House for the deposit of bonds. And who are they to be deposited with? The committee? No. They are to be deposited with an attorney who will act for a contingent fee, the amount of which is not stated. What I want to know is this: Did the committee authorize the sending out of such letters as this? How many such letters were sent out? How many bonds were deposited pursuant to these letters? Who were the attorneys that were appointed? What did they do? What fees did they charge, and did our select committee in any way supervise or keep track of the actions of these attorneys?

Ladies and gentlemen, these questions must be answered not by abusing some individual, bondholders' committee, or trustee but specifically, and the facts clearly and concisely set forth.

I demand full disclosure of the facts, my colleagues, because certain factual information which I have in my possession does not square with statements made on the floor of this body by the chairman of the committee.

The last time the continuance of this committee came before us the chairman painted for us a picture, in urging the adoption of his resolution continuing the committee, of attorneys and others donating their time to the committee in order that the Congress might be advised of the facts and the ends of justice served. Let me recount just one of the activities of one of the committee's attorneys whose breast, according to the chairman, was overflowing with the milk of human kindness for the poor bondholders. His name is Newell Mecartney. He intervened in a proceeding before Judge Wilkerson, case no. 57189, in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, as attorney and representative of our committee. That you may have the facts just as he presented them to the court in his sworn petition, and that you may judge of the charitable and magnanimous motives of the lawyers whom the chairman claims have been donating their time to the committee, I want to read the pertinent provisions of the petition which he filed on January 17, 1936. I wonder, in view of the facts which I am about to present to you, if these lawyers were pressed into service by the chairman on the theory that they would be amply repaid for their services to the committee through legal fees which they should expect to receive from the representation of bondholders referred to them by the chairman. It reads:

> In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. In the matter of the petition of Edith F. Reincke, for the reorganization under section 77B of the Federal Bankruptcy Act of trust 17400 created under declaration of trusts of Chicago Title & Trust Co. under date of October 1, 1926. No. 57189.
> PETITION OF NEWELL MECARTNEY FOR FEES
> Your petitioner, Newell Mecartney, respectfully shows unto this honorable court:
> 1. That in April 1935 your petitioner was called to the office of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations and was informed by parties in charge of the said office that your petitioner's services were requested by the Government as a duty to the public and that such activities and duties would probably terminate by the middle of May 1935.

2. That your petitioner agreed to render his services to the best of his ability and executed an oath to that effect and was thereupon assigned to investigate the subject matter of this cause.

3. That due to the pressure of the legislative work in the House of Congress the members of the said committee could not hold any meetings. It became apparent to the petitioner, from examination of the record in this case and the equity suit involving the same subject matter, that a fraud was being perpetrated upon the court and the bondholders of which the court was not aware.

4. That shortly after your petitioner's acceptance of such appointment many bondholders holding bonds involved in the trust in this litigation begged your petitioner to represent them and speak for them and while your petitioner declined to represent them petitioner told them that the full facts would be presented to the court.

5. Your petitioner, therefore, kept track of this cause and when it became apparent that the court might enter a final decree on June 27, 1935, your petitioner felt after consultation with numerous attorneys and others that it would establish a very dangerous condition if, as attorney for the congressional committee, he stood aside and permitted this court to enter orders under certain existing conditions and actions of the parties. He therefore appeared before this court on the said date simply for the purpose of advising the court of the existing conditions and the record so that when the matter was or would be presented to the congressional committee, as a body, the court would have been informed of all the necessary facts.

Now, then, acting, as he states, as attorney for our investigating committee, charged with the duty of advising us how to bring about the elimination of exorbitant and excessive lawyers' fees, and not having accomplished one single thing by his efforts, which I shall later enlarge upon, what do you think he was led to ask the court to approve as his fee to be taken out of these poor bondholders pockets? Let me read it from his petition, for if I merely stated it I know some of you would doubt that it could be true because of the exorbitant fee requested. I read further from his petition itself:

Wherefore, your petitioner prays:

That he be allowed a fee of twenty-five thousand ($25,000.00) dollars for his services in this case.

That in the alternative if the court denies such prayer that your petitioner may, by leave of court, appeal directly to all of the bondholders for such allowance and that your petitioner may have such other and further relief as may be proper.

Think of it, gentlemen. An attorney for our own investigating committee who, according to the chairman—subcommittee of Committee on the Judiciary hearings, March 6, 1936, page 85—was one of those donating his time, asking for a fee of $25,000. Had he accomplished something, anything at all, I would not feel so strongly about it. This is what the special master, Henry P. Chandler, found. I read from his report:

Mr. Newell Mecartney, representing the Select Committee of the United States House of Representatives Investigating Proceedings for Corporate Reorganization, appeared before the court and before the master as a friend of the court. Mr. Mecartney attacked the good faith of the equity suit and the pending case, charging that both were fraudulent. He also attacked the conduct of the Chicago Title & Trust Co., trustee, and of the petitioning creditors, the bondholders committee, and their general counsel. These charges were not concurred in nor supported by any of the parties to the case, although as stated some of the parties vigorously opposed the plan of reorganization. In deference, however, to the legislative branch of the United States Government a committee, which Mr. Mecartney represents in this proceeding, and in recognition of the public interest and the concern of the court that proceedings for the reorganization of business enterprises affecting thousands of investors shall be free from fraud, the master has considered the charges preferred by Mr. Mecartney as fully as if he represented a party in interest. (Special master's report, p. 15.)

* * * * * * *

The charge of a conspiracy is so improbable as to be fantastic, and is utterly unsupported by the facts. (Special master's report, p. 17.)

* * * * * * *

Every opportunity has been given to the friend of the court to substantiate his charges. In the judgment of the master, he has failed to do so. To prolong further the inquiry would be an unwarranted imposition upon all the parties concerned, whose interest lies in the prompt adoption of an equitable plan of liquidation. (Special master's report, p. 56.)

But let it be said to the everlasting credit of our courts that that fee was not approved.

And now as to the humorous side. In such cases as this we certainly need something humorous. What was this attorney doing in this case? Why, as the attorney for the select committee he was charging fraud and criticizing the bondholders' committee. Who do you suppose was supporting the plan he was criticizing? Why, the distinguished chairman's own law firm—Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein. And did they also ask for a fee in the same case? Yes—$5,000. But they likewise did not get it, as they subsequently withdrew that request. I do not think we need to ask why they withdrew that request.

But, gentlemen, what I want to know is this: Did the select committee authorize this man to appear as their attorney? Did they know he was appearing in court as their attorney? If they did so authorize him, by what authority did they presume to act? Certainly this body has never conferred such authority upon that committee. Furthermore, I want to know whether or not other attorneys were also authorized to act in such capacity; and if so, who are they? What did they accomplish, and what fees did they petition for and receive?

On December 3, 1935, there appeared in the Chicago Daily News the following story:

SABATH BOARD LAWYER ACCUSED OF SOLICITING CLIENTS; QUIZ ON

Federal Judge Philip L. Sullivan today ordered an investigation into the activities of Sidney Hollander, an attorney for the Sabath congressional committee which investigated fees and other matters relating to the reorganization of buildings in which bonds were in default.

Roger Block, representing the bondholders' committee of the Churchill Hotel Co., accused Hollander of soliciting clients among bondholders for another attorney, Max Richmond Kargman.

"You mean to tell me", said Judge Sullivan, "that someone from the Sabath committee called the bondholders and asked them to come in so they could get in touch with Mr. Kargman?"

"That's just what I mean to convey", replied Block.

"I want to investigate anyone from the Sabath committee who acted in this manner", said the judge. "That was not the purpose of the Sabath committee. I want to investigate this matter thoroughly, and I want Mr. Hollander in here."

He set December 27 as the date for a hearing.

The matter came up when Attorney Kargman asked for a 77B reorganization of the Churchill property after a plan had been agreed upon in the State courts. Master in Chancery Charles A. McDonald held several hearings and recommended that the 77B petition be dismissed.

And on the 7th of December 1935 the Chicago Examiner carried the following story:

HOLLANDER TO ANSWER BOND-QUIZ CHARGE—SABATH COMMITTEE LAWYER DENIES SOLICITING CLIENTS; MERELY SUGGESTED ATTORNEY

Charged with soliciting clients among bondholders for another attorney, L. L. Hollander, attorney for the Sabath congressional committee investigating real-estate receiverships, yesterday issued a denial.

He said he will reply in court before Federal Judge Barnes, investigating bankruptcy filings, that he merely recommended that "two or three" bondholders get in touch with Attorney Max L. Kargman, 160 North LaSalle Street, after they complained that their interests were not being protected.

EIGHT THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS FEES VACATED

Judge Barnes on Thursday vacated $8,100 in fees allowed the law firm of Congressman Sabath, Attorney Milton M. Adelman and Greenebaum Sons Investment Co., for "improper service."

Kargman admitted paying $2,100 to Attorney Walter B. Fackler, a principal figure in the inquiry, after Alexander Bisno, of the real-estate firm of Bisno & Bisno, introduced him to Fackler, who turned over seven cases to him.

VISITED M'KEOWN'S OFFICE

Attorney Walter Duft, 228 North LaSalle Street, said that in 1934 he visited the Washington office of former Congressman Tom McKeown, one of the authors of the 77B legislation, now active in Chicago in filing petitions under the law. He said that there he met a man named Cunningham, who told him:

"We're going to divide the country into zones, and certain lawyers will handle the 77B cases in each zone."

From these accounts it not only appears that the deposit of bonds has been solicited by either the select committee chairman or those supposedly representing the committee, but these depositing bondholders have been directed to attorneys who represent them for fees. Furthermore, the activities of these attorneys have not been helpful to the courts. As an example of what I mean, let me quote what the Chicago Daily News and the Chicago Tribune had to say regarding the activities of William J. Powers, another one of the attorneys for our committee. On December 3, 1935, there appeared in the Chicago Daily News the following story:

CONGRESS INVESTIGATOR SEIZED FOR CONTEMPT

J. L. Tupy, chief investigator of the Sabath congressional committee which has been investigating fees and other matters relating to reorganization of buildings with bonds in default, was arrested this afternoon in the courtroom of Federal Judge John P. Barnes on charges of contempt.

He was taken into custody by Deputy Marshal John Dippold after he had interrupted Judge Barnes in the questioning of Attorney William P. Powers, an attorney for the Sabath committee. Judge Barnes ordered Tupy taken out of the courtroom.

POWERS REFUSES TO ANSWER

Powers himself refused to answer many of the questions put to him by the court and by Alexander Wolf, counsel for the lessee of the Garfield Arms Hotel, on the ground that the information he possessed was the confidential property of the Sabath committee.

The hotel property is undergoing reorganization under the 77B act.

While Powers was testifying regarding conversations he had with Quentin H. Blewitt, trustee of the property, Tupy entered the courtroom and sat in the empty jury box. He rose to his feet, and was told to sit down. When he did not do so he was ordered into custody.

BROUGHT BACK TO COURT

Later Tupy was brought back into the courtroom still in custody.

"You persisted in interrupting after I had warned you to desist", Judge Barnes told him, "and in so doing you are in contempt of this court. I have prepared an order to that effect."

The investigator, obviously agitated, said that he had not intended to interfere with the proceedings.

"I have no intention to interfere with the activities of the Sabath committee", continued the judge, "but when you come into this court you must act like any other spectator. And one other thing: Why have you been writing me letters?"

Tupy explained that he was seeking or giving information.

"Don't write me any more letters", said Judge Barnes.

He then tore up the contempt order.

And on December 4, 1935, the Chicago Tribune reported:

BARNES REBUKES SABATH AID AS COURT MEDDLER—DENOUNCES INTERFERENCE, BUT ACCEPTS APOLOGY

Federal Judge John P. Barnes voiced his vehement opposition yesterday to interference with court procedure "by any individual, any committee, or any bureaucracy." His outburst came after he had cited J. F. Tupy for contempt of court. Tupy is the chief investigator of Representative A. J. SABATH'S (D., Chicago) congressional committee which is inquiring into receiverships. Later, however, Judge Barnes accepted Tupy's apologies and rescinded the citation.

The alleged contempt grew out of Tupy's interruptions while Judge Barnes was questioning William J. Powers, an attorney for the Sabath committee, who represents some of the bondholders for the Garfield Arms Apartment Hotel.

BACKGROUND OF THE INCIDENT

The hotel now is undergoing reorganization under section 77B of the amended Bankruptcy Act. Two weeks ago Judge Barnes appointed Quentin H. Blewitt, 140 South Dearborn Street, as Government trustee for the building.

Yesterday Blewitt testified that Powers telephoned him on November 27 to inquire about a lease for the building, but was told that a lease already had been negotiated and was substantially ready for Judge Barnes' O. K. According to Blewitt, Powers thereupon mentioned police complaints about objectionable women in front of the hotel and said that "the court should know this before a lease is approved."

TELLS OF AGITATION

"Powers told me that this wouldn't look good in the newspapers", Blewitt testified. "He said he would take it up with his committee. He told me that four or five men in Chicago were controlling receivership leases, and that bondholders were so worked up about the matter that even the judges are being watched."

At this point Judge Barnes took a hand in the questioning. He called Powers to the stand and asked several questions concerning the investigation of the Sabath committee. Powers, plainly in a quandary, pleaded that he had no authority to disclose any of the committee's findings.

Tupy, in a chair in the jury box, rose to his feet.

"I'm an investigator for that committee, Judge", he said. "Maybe I can help out."

ORDERED TO SIT DOWN

"Do you authorize this witness to answer my questions?" the judge asked. Tupy shook his head.

"Then sit down", the judge commanded.

Later Tupy again interrupted. At Judge Barnes' instruction Bailiff John Dippold escorted Tupy from the courtroom.

In about 20 minutes the judge summoned Tupy into court again, accepted his apology that he was just trying to help the court, and tore up a contempt citation that had meanwhile been prepared.

"I will use all my powers", the judge told Tupy, "to prevent interference in this court. I don't wish to interfere with the Sabath committee, but when you are in this court you will act as any other spectator."

TAKES OFFENSE AT LETTERS

Taking the occasion to bring up another grievance against the investigator, Judge Barnes shook his finger at Tupy and demanded, "Why did you repeatedly write me letters?"

"I wrote them only with the intention of helping the court", the crestfallen Tupy replied.

Between enforced digressions Judge Barnes elicited from Powers a denial that it had occurred to him that his remarks to Blewitt about approval of the lease might be interpreted as threats against the court. He declared, however, that if they were threats, he assumed full responsibility.

The judge revealed that when he first heard about Powers' conversation with Blewitt, he ordered an investigation. Judge Barnes took the matter under advisement.

Who is this Tupy, the chief investigator for the committee in Chicago, the man who does most of the testifying before the committee? I have checked up on him, and this is what I have to report:

This same Tupy was a member of a so-called bondholders' protective committee which asked for a $45,000 fee out of $150,000 issue.

Tupy, I am informed, without holding a single bond and not representing any bondholder, formed a protective committee for the bondholders of the Chicago Park Cemetery Co. I also understand, following the appointment of the select committee chairman's law firm as attorneys for the company in place of its former attorney, an agreement was entered into whereby this bondholders' committee formed by Mr. Tupy was to receive $45,000 for their services out of an issue of only $150,000. A clever fellow, this Mr. Tupy. Sure, he has the interests of the bondholders next to his heart, where the fee is to be $45,000, almost one-third of the issue. It would seem to me that the select committee chairman would do well to investigate the activities of his chief investigator, Mr. Tupy, especially his activity as a member of bondholders' protective committees.

For those of you who want to read the detailed story concerning Tupy, here is a résumé of the facts as they appear in the court records:

Chicago Park Cemetery Co.: On August 16, 1932, the Straus National Bank & Trust Co., as successor trustee, by its attorneys Frish & Frish, filed a suit in the superior court of Cook County, no. 563546, to foreclose a lien against the Chicago Park Cemetery Co., under deed of trust amounting to $150,000, dated January 5, 1929 (doc. no. 10251366). Everett M. Swain was the attorney for the Chicago Park Cemetery Co. Judgment by confession was taken against the cemetery company. Mr. Swain moved to set aside the judgment, and while these proceedings were pending, died. On January 24, 1933, Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein were substituted as attorneys for the Chicago Park Cemetery Co. in place of Mr. Swain. I understand the suit is still pending, and no further orders have been issued. On May 31, 1933, the cemetery company entered into an agreement with Francis Karel, Tupy, and Charles Citnik as a committee for the protection of the holders of bonds under the said deed of trust in the amount of $150,000. This agreement was recorded on October 7, 1933, as document no. 11267333, in book 30783, at page 296. This agreement recites that 70 percent of the bondholders deposited their bonds with the committee and that the cemetery company was to set aside all the unsold lots in the Elmwood section of the cemetery, and that these lots were to be sold by the committee. The proceeds under the agreement were to be applied as follows: (1) To the payment of a commission of not to exceed 30 percent of the sale price to the committee; (2) to pay a sum not to exceed $3,000 to the Straus National Bank & Trust Co. and its attorneys for fees and expenses of the foreclosure suit. Thus, under this agreement, the bondholders' committee formed by Mr. Tupy is to receive $45,000 for their services, out of a $150,000 issue.

The Gables Apartment: Tupy, as owner of this apartment building, bonded it far in excess of its value, either defrauded a bank into making him loans or executed a fraudulent trust deed, and then by refusing to release his right of redemption, which he tried to sell, kept the bondholders from reorganizing and, in the meantime, remained in the building, holding two apartments for which he refused to pay rent to the receiver.

For those of you who want to read the facts in detail as they are revealed in the petitions and pleadings in the cases of Peterzelka against Novak, in the Cook County Circuit Court, case no. B–280896, and Cicero Trust & Savings Bank et al. against Joseph L. Tupy et al., in the Superior Court of Cook County, case no. 527679, I submit the following résumé:

The Gables Apartment: This property is located at the northwest corner of Thirty-first and Desplaines Streets in the village of Riverside. It was improved in the winter of 1925–26 with an apartment building containing 37 apartments and 4 stores. At this time Harold E. White was the owner of record. On December 5, 1925, White executed a deed of trust for $165,000 on this property (Doc. 9143309) to obtain a construction loan underwritten by Greenebaum Sons Bank & Trust Co., and on February 26, 1926, a similar deed for $36,000 (Doc. 9190528). The building cost approximately $160,000 and the value of the lot was about $29,000. On August 15, 1927, title being in the Cicero Trust & Savings Bank, that bank conveyed the premises to John L. Novak, as trustee, by deed of trust (Doc. 9766150). On the same day Novak and J. L. Tupy entered into a trust agreement known as trust no. 100, under the terms of which Tupy became the sole beneficiary (this agreement appears as an exhibit in the case of Peterzelka v. Novak, no. B–280896 in the Circuit Court, Cook County). Upon acquiring the property, Tupy executed mortgages on this property amounting to $208,800 (which amount was far in excess of the value of the premises and the cost of construction). The property subsequently sold for between $80,000 and $90,000. In executing these mortgages Mr. Tupy either defrauded the Novak & Steiskal State Bank or executed a fraudulent trust deed. This fraud was worked in the following manner:

On September 10, 1929, Tupy, following the execution of the mortgages on the property, assigned his beneficial interest in the premises under trust no. 100 to Frank L. Peterzelka. (See Peterzelka v. Novak.) On September 15, 1930, Tupy obtained from the Novak & Steiskal State Bank, according to the answer and cross complaint of William L. O'Connell, receiver of the bank, $7,800, and on September 30, 1930, $500, for which he executed his notes. The answer and cross complaint further shows that Tupy is indebted to the bank in the amount of $196.95, which money he received from the bank on a worthless check. Furthermore, the bill shows that at the time these loans were made by Tupy at the Novak & Steiskal State Bank Tupy agreed to transfer the beneficial interest in trust no. 100 to the bank as collateral security. A notation to this effect appears on the bank's records. Thus the fraud was committed by Tupy by holding out to the bank that he was the holder of the beneficial interest in trust no. 100 when he obtained the loans on September 30, whereas he had already assigned that beneficial interest on September 10, 1929, to Frank A. Peterzelka. On September 1, 1933, Peterzelka demanded, as trustee in said trust no. 100, that the premises be conveyed to him in accordance with the assignment from Tupy on September 10, 1929, and on November 16, 1933, commenced suit in the Circuit Court of Cook County to enforce a conveyance (case no. B–280896).

Subsequently, on January 8, 1934, Mr. O'Connell, receiver for the Novak & Steiskal State Bank, filed a petition to intervene, attempting to prevent the enforcement of the assignment of the beneficial interest from Tupy to Peterzelka. Unless he is successful the creditors and depositors of this bank, which is now insolvent, will lose the full amount of their loans to Tupy, which are now in excess of $9,584.88. In the meantime the mortgages executed by Tupy on this property had gone into default, and back taxes in excess of $2,689.95 and special assessments of $597.87 remained unpaid. Suit was brought to foreclose the first mortgage on November 22, 1930, and on December 23, 1930, a receiver was appointed by the superior court in case no. 527679, Cicero Trust & Savings Bank et al. v. Joseph L. Tupy. The receiver immediately took possession and commenced to collect the rents and maintain the property. Two things are of interest in this matter: (1) When the receiver attempted to collect the rent from a Francis Karel, Karel claimed a lease of apartment 206, dated May 18, 1928, on which he claimed to have paid $4,500 in advance to Tupy for said lease from June 1, 1928, to May 31, 1933; (2) on November 7, 1932, the receiver filed a sworn petition in the foreclosure suit, in which he stated that during his absence in September, Tupy and his family moved into apartments 307 and 308 of the building without his knowledge and consent, refused to pay rent, and refused to move from said apartments. Upon the filing of this bill the court ordered Tupy to vacate in 5 days, and if he did not do so a writ of assistance should issue. Tupy refused to move. On November 14, the day on which the receiver was to apply for a writ of assistance, Tupy appeared in court and agreed to vacate the premises at any time they were needed or required by the receiver. On December 4, 1933, the receiver again filed a petition asking for the removal of Tupy, and Tupy was again ordered to vacate within 10 days. On the 14th Tupy filed an unsworn answer, in which he stated that he was interested in the equity of redemption of the property; that he was in possession of the apartments. He denied that he entered without the knowledge, consent, or authority of the receiver, and said that, as he did not interfere with the operation of the apartment and as there were other apartments vacant, he did not increase the expense of operating the apartment and should be permitted to remain. Furthermore, he stated that negotiations were pending to purchase the equity of redemption held by him and his assignees and to create a trusteeship with certificates of beneficial interest in which his assignees would participate by reason of his participation in the reorganization. The case was scheduled to come on for hearing December 21, but a continuance was effected. He has been living in the building since that time (Nov. 7, 1933), occupying two apartments, without paying any rent.

Thus it appears (1) that Tupy mortgaged this property far in excess of its actual cost and of its worth (which sold for between $80,000 and $90,000); (2) in order to obtain loans, he misled the Novak & Steiskal State Bank to believe that he was the holder of the beneficial interest in the property, when he was not; (3) that because of some claimed relationship with the holder of the beneficial interest, he laid claim to the equity of redemption, and as the bondholders' protective committee was unable to obtain the deposit of sufficient bonds to enable them to bid at a foreclosure sale the fair value of the property, succeeded in preventing reorganization for a number of years; (4) that if he was the holder of the equity of redemption, and if he were the type of person he claims to be, and in view of his mouthing as investigator for the select committee, he would have transferred his equity of redemption to the bondholders' protective committee, but instead of doing that he has been scurrying around trying to find someone to whom he might sell his equity of redemption.

Shortly after the select committee was appointed, we in Chicago began to hear a great deal about the Chicago Title & Trust Co. and other outstanding people and institutions in Chicago. We were told and newspapers carried stories to the effect that they were controlling bondholders' committees, that certain things had transpired in the bondholders' committees that would not bear the light of day. Stump speeches were made by the select committee chairman at the hearings in Chicago accusing these persons and institutions of all sorts of abuses and violations of their various trusts.

I hold no brief for these persons and institutions. If they have done wrong I want them properly punished.

But the strange thing to me is this: I have made inquiry and I have never heard of an indictment being returned against a single person in Chicago either as a result of this committee's work or otherwise. I have never heard of a change in the personnel of a committee or of a trustee. Nor have I heard of any change being made in the methods employed in reorganization work or procedure.

But there is one thing that I have heard, and what a revelation that is. I have here before me a photostatic copy of part of the transcript of record in a proceeding, and what do you think it shows? It shows that the law firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein represents the Chicago Title & Trust Co. in some 75 different reorganizations. That is one of the very institutions our select committee chairman so roundly condemned when his committee first met in Chicago. I have the evidence here and present it for the record.

The following true copies of parts of bondholders reorganization court proceedings show that the law firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein, of which our select committee chairman is the senior member, represented the Chicago Title & Trust Co. for foreclosing bondholders, charging the round sum of $2,000 for their fees in one case, and on October 21, 1935, the same firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein was then representing the Chicago Title & Trust Co. in from 50 to 75 cases.

Before Special Master Charles A. McDonald, October 19, 1935, at 11 a. m. In the matter of 1748–1766 East Seventy-first Street Building Corporation, debtor. No. 59128.

Court reconvened in the above-entitled cause, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., October 19, 1935, pursuant to adjournment heretofore taken.

Present: Mr. David Snyder, representing petitioning creditors; Messrs. Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein, by Mr. Morton C. Chesler, representing the Chicago Title & Trust Co.; Messrs. Nash, Ahern, McDermott, McNally & Kiley, by Mr. Kennelly, representing Joseph P. Lavin, trustee; Mr. Robert L. Huttner, representing the debtor.

Mr. CHESLER. I will ask to be sworn.

Morton C. Chesler, produced as a witness on behalf of the Chicago Title & Trust Co., being first duly sworn, testified in narrative form, as follows:

Narrative by Mr. Chesler:

My name is Morton C. Chesler. I reside at 6753 Oglesby Avenue and am associated with the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein, attorneys for the Chicago Title & Trust Co., as trustee, under trust deed recorded as document no. 9622078, and which is the trust deed conveying the property described in the debtor's petition for reorganization filed herein in June of 1934, upon the demand of a holder of bonds in excess of $10,000.

We were employed by the Chicago Title & Trust Co. as trustee under that document to institute foreclosure proceedings in the State court. Default having been made in the said interest payments and said principal payment covenant to be paid by the mortgagor. In that connection it was necessary to file the usual pleadings in the State court and with the trustee and the supervision of the obligations that may arise to the trustee under the plan.

* * * * * * *

In and about the foreclosure proceedings and the proceedings had before the district court and before this master, the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein has rendered services aggregating and including the estimate of 15 hours for services to be rendered, the total hours 117½.

I am admitted to the practice in the State of Illinois and to the practice of the Federal court of this district, and I have an opinion as to the fair, usual, reasonable, and customary charge for the services rendered and to be rendered by Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein as attorneys for the trustee, and in my opinion that charge would be the sum of $2,000.

* * * * * * *

The MASTER. What is the amount of hours?

Mr. CHESLER. Approximately 117½.

Mrs. DODGE. Do you think, Mr. Chesler, it was necessary to start that foreclosure suit so early after the maturity of those bonds? They matured May 1, 1934, and the foreclosure was started in June?

Answer. June 14.

Mrs. DODGE. Now, I know we were asked to sign an extension, just the number of years I cannot recall, I think it was 4, and a reduction on the interest which we signed, and I understood quite a number of others signed. I have always felt and still feel that that foreclosure was started rather hastily and perhaps I expected just a little bit too much from your firm because Congressman SABATH is very interested in these foreclosed bondholders and so forth, and I felt it was not quite the thing for his office to start foreclosure so hastily. In fact, I expected a little partiality.

Mr. CHESLER. I object to any statement of Mrs. Dodge; it is perhaps made with sincere feeling.

Mrs. DODGE. And kindly.

Mr. CHESLER. It is no part of the cause. Our client is the Chicago Title & Trust Co., trustee, and we act solely under their discretion. I am sure that our firm would not be a party to the fomenting of litigation.

The MASTER. Mr. SABATH is very much interested in keeping down these expenses.

Mr. CHESLER. Yes.

The MASTER. And you are asking here more than the maximum that is being allowed.

Mr. CHESLER. I am asking for an allowance based solely on the work performed, the actual services and the amount involved and the responsibility involved.

Before Special Master Charles A. McDonald, October 21, 1935, at 1:15 p. m. In the matter of 1748–1766 East Seventy-first Street Building Corporation, debtor. No. 59128

Court reconvened in the above-entitled cause at the hour of 1:15 p. m., October 21, 1935, pursuant to adjournment heretofore taken.

Present: Mr. David Snyder, representing petitioning creditors; Mr. Robert L. Huttner, representing the debtor; Mr. A. Edmund Peterson, representing the Chicago Title & Trust Co.

The MASTER. You may proceed.

Mr. PETERSON. I will ask to be sworn.

(Witness duly sworn.)

A. Edmund Peterson, produced as a witness on behalf of the Chicago Title & Trust Co., being first duly sworn, testified in narrative form as follows:

Narrative by Mr. Peterson:

My name is A. Edmund Peterson. I am employed by the Chicago Title & Trust Co., the trustee under the trust deed recorded in the recorder's office of Cook County, Ill., as document no. 9822078, which trust deed was executed April 15, 1927, by Patrick W. Barrett and wife, securing an issue of bonds in the principal amount of $150,000.

The nature of my employment with the Chicago Title & Trust Co. is such that I am generally in charge of matters pertaining to trust deeds of the character of the trust deed involved in this case, wherein the Chicago Title & Trust Co. is acting as trustee.

I state that pursuant to the terms of the trust deed above referred to, the Chicago Title & Trust Co. is claiming a fee for services rendered by it as such trustee. The nature of these services being briefly as follows:

* * * * * * *

Q. Now, when the proceedings in the State court were instituted you received a demand from one of the bondholders, isn't that right, who represented a certain amount of bonds?—A. Yes.

Q. And you retained that law firm who represented that bondholder?—A. We retained Mr. Sabath's firm.

Q. On what basis did you figure this?—A. On the time we spent and the responsibility involved and the amount involved in the issue.

Q. You haven't testified as to what time you spent?—A. I have taken it into consideration.

Q. Can you give us any idea of the time you spent?—A. No; I couldn't tell you offhand.

Q. You had nothing to do with the preparing of any papers, of course?—A. I don't think we prepared them; we examined all of them before they were filed, in order to see that they were accurate as to the statements of fact.

Mr. HUTTNER. That is all.

The MASTER. Just one question.

Q. Have you any idea in how many cases the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein represent the Chicago Title & Trust Co.?—A. I would say somewhere between 50 or 75 cases. I wouldn't know more accurately than that.

* * * * * * *

No wonder the Chicago Tribune, in its editorial, referred to "the profits of congressional investigation."

Continue this investigation? This committee? Of course, its chairman wants it continued. Why would he not?

What I should like to know is, When was the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein employed to represent this company? In how many cases does his law firm represent either directly or indirectly the Chicago Title & Trust Co.? When did they get those cases? What fees have they received?

Speaking of fees, let me read just one statement of the master with respect to the fees requested by the law firm of the select committee chairman in the case which I have just referred to. He said:

The MASTER. Mr. Sabath is very much interested in keeping down these expenses.

Mr. CHESLER. Yes.

The MASTER. And you are asking here more than the maximum that is being allowed.

I should like to know about the fees which were requested in these other cases. That ought to be interesting information.

But that is not all. I have heard that lawyers representing bondholders' committees, lawyers representing receivers for closed banks, and lawyers representing trustees in foreclosure proceedings have been summarily dismissed since the present chairman of this committee was designated and his law firm appointed.

For example, I am told that the firm of Glenn, Schwartz, Reid & Browning was ousted as attorneys for the receiver of the Hyde Park-Kenwood National Bank and the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein appointed; that the same thing happened with respect to the Ridgeway State Bank; that the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein now represents a number of the committees reorganizing the H. O. Stone properties, another concern that was loudly condemned by the chairman when his committee first met in Chicago; that the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein now represents a number of the committees for issues underwritten by the Cody Trust Co. and also the Leight Holzer Co., which we have read so much about in the hearings of the select committee.

These are things that should be investigated by our Rules Committee. If they are true we ought to know about them. And if they are, this investigating committee certainly should not be continued.

What I said in the beginning I now repeat, viz, no one is more anxious to aid these bondholders than I am; no one is more jealous of their rights and interests. I want to help them and in my opinion the only way that we can help them is by corrective legislation; legislation that plugs the loopholes in section 77B; legislation that becomes effective before the bondholder, whom we are trying to aid, has lost everything.

There is no use legislating to cure a dead man, and it is just as futile to legislate for the purpose of aiding a bondholder after everything that he had has been swept away. Continue this investigation, continue this committee, and delay legislative action until the next session of Congress and you will do the bondholder no good. By then, it will be too late.

I say to my colleague from Illinois, chairman of the committee, make your report; give us your recommendations; do not deprive these bondholders of even the slightest bit of aid by pressing for the continuance of this investigation. For 3 years you have been investigating. What we want now are the facts and your recommendations—not more investigating.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I have been able to present only some of the high spots in the history of this select committee in Chicago. I am sure you will feel, as we do in Chicago, that the committee has outlived its usefulness. We are not only tired of these endless investigations, but we are disgusted with them. That is the sentiment of the bondholders who have heard nothing but a great deal of talk about their need for assistance and have seen nothing tangible done.

This House should require the select committee to make its final report so that we can immediately consider what corrective legislation, if any, is needed. We should begin to take concrete steps to help the bondholders and not just toy with their interests.

The select commitee should be well informed on the problems and should be able to propose appropriate remedial legislation. In that particular, the committee is more informed as to what can and should be done than any of us here. Nevertheless, unless something is done very soon by way of obtaining remedial legislation for the bondholders, I propose to introduce a bill on my own initiative and press for its early enactment.

As I view the situation in connection with bondholders' reorganizations we have, among other things, two difficulties that have arisen, whether they be in the State courts or under 77B of the Bankruptcy Act. One is the failure of so-called protective committees to keep the bondholders themselves advised as to the work being done as it progresses, their problems and reasons why a particular plan of reorganization was adopted.

What has been happening is simply this: A committee representing bondholders is established and after 2 or 3 years it produces its reorganization plan. The bondholders themselves know nothing about what has transpired during the 2 or 3 years. They do not have any idea as to why such and such a reorganization was adopted. Naturally they are skeptical and wonder where money represented in the bonds they hold has gone.

This difficulty can be met if these committees were required to report at reasonable intervals to their bondholders, advising each as to the status of the reorganization work, the problems to be solved, the decisions made, and the reasons for the decisions. By such reports the bondholders would be apprised of the developments, be in a position to protect their interests, and understand the final reorganization plan the committee adopts. Such procedure not only helps the bondholder but it also saves the committee from criticism which may not always be justified.

The second difficulty which should be met in connection with bondholders' reorganizations is the burden that is on the judge in each case. Under 77B of the Bankruptcy Act the judge is not able to refer the complete details of the case to a master. He is required to keep strict supervision of the case, even to the smallest detail.

If all the details in the reorganizations could be delegated to a master, who in turn would report to the judge, the courts would be relieved of a great burden of work which they now have. The courts would thus be able to give adequate study to immediate problems that arise rather than struggle with a great amount of detail.

That, in brief, is something that could be done to meet the bondholders' reorganization problems. I suggest it here only to indicate that the problem is not above solution.

These continued investigations constitute nothing more than dilatory tactics. In my judgment they have been tending to complicate and aggravate the situation. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Select Committee on Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations be required to make its final report, that no further investigations be authorized, and that we give immediate attention to the legislation needed to help the bondholders.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CHURCH. The last time the continuance of this committee came before us——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The gentleman has refused to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. When I finish my statement, please.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I demand the gentleman be protected in his rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. No business can be conducted in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SABATH. I should like to answer these despicable statements.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHURCH. I will yield to the gentleman. I want to be fair.

The SPEAKER. No business of any character can be transacted during the absence of a quorum. It raises a constitutional question. A quorum is not present. The gentleman from Texas has moved that the House do now adjourn, which is not a debatable motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, the House adjourned until Monday, March 29, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

1381. Also, petition of the Council of the City of Milwaukee, requesting consideration of their Milwaukee's Federal housing projects in bill known as House bill 40; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O light that earthly shadows cannot darken, O love enduring through all change, make us glad at this holy Eastertide with the knowledge that, through our risen Lord, life and immortality are brought to light and love's redeeming work is done.

We bless Thee for this rich brotherhood of kindred life, with its strange, mysterious power to quicken and uplift, for all who share our higher thoughts, the comrades of our better self with whom we break the mystic bread of life and feel the glow Thy presence doth create.

O Thou Christ of God, cleanse our lives to receive Thee, our hearts to know Thee, and our ways that we may walk with Thee till traveling days are done, and at last dwell with Thee in glory with the Father and spirit ever, world without end. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 25, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 66) providing for the participation by the United States in the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition to be held in the State of Texas during the year 1937, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. The demands of many committees are holding Members of the Senate, and so, in order to assure the presence of a quorum, I ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I repeat the announcement as to the absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—NOTICE OF RADIO ADDRESS BY SENATOR GLASS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, following the innovation in the practice of the Senate begun a few days ago by my friend, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the majority leader of this body, of giving timely notice in the Senate of forthcoming radio programs which may be of interest to United States Senators, I desire to announce that this evening at 10 o'clock p. m., on the Columbia broadcasting chain, from local station WJSV, there will be broadcast an address by the distinguished and beloved senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] on the subject of the proposed change in the Supreme Court.

In this connection, I may say that the Senator from Virginia is one of the most renowned radio orators in America. On the one previous occasion in his career on which he indulged in a radio speech, he was overwhelmed with congratulations from all parts of the United States, from the present President of the United States down through every walk of life. I can assure the Senate that this address will be both interesting and instructive, and in all probability will be eloquent, inspiring, and memorable.

PAPAGO INDIAN LANDS, ARIZONA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), relating to Papago Indian lands in Arizona, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SHOSHONE OR WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS, WYOMING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the acquisition by the United States of certain tribally owned lands of the Indians of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo., for the Wind River Indian irrigation project, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COSTS OF BUILDING CONSTRUCTION IN NATIONAL PARKS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 460), as amended, with regard to the limitation of cost upon the construction of buildings in national parks, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REPORT ON TRAFFIC CONDITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a preliminary report of the results of a study and research of traffic conditions and measures for their improvement, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

RELIEF OF FORMER DISBURSING OFFICERS (VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of certain former disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration and of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

COURT ORDERS RESTRAINING ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission (with an accompanying statement, S. Doc. No. 43), and the Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority (with an accompanying report, S. Doc. No. 44), transmitting the information requested by Senate Resolution 82 (agreed to Feb. 17, 1937), calling for certain information concerning injunctions or judgments issued or rendered by Federal courts since March 4, 1933, in cases involving acts of Congress, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN NATIONAL THEATER AND ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from J. Howard Reber, Esq., attorney at law (second vice president), Philadelphia, Pa., transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the proceedings of the American National Theater and Academy for the year 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas, upon the dawn of a new year, 1937, the heavy rainfall within the Ohio Valley resulted in a most unprecedented catastrophe to this Nation, bringing a most disastrous floodwater, bringing an international sympathetic activity of relief to the sufferers within the stricken area; and

Whereas a similar rainfall almost simultaneously within the Tennessee River Basin the rainfall being greater in the upper and lower Tennessee with scarcely any serious flood results, the floodwater being substantially held and impounded by the Norris Dam in the upper region; and

Whereas a great national program of flood control, as well as other activities, has proven one of the great achievements of national conservation: Be it

Resolved by the house of representatives now in session, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States that further aid be given that part of the watershed located in north Georgia counties, namely, Dade, Walker, Catoosa, Chattooga, Murray, Whitfield, Gordon, Bartow, and Floyd: Be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Tennessee Valley Authority, Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress, and the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Washington, D. C., also the Board of Conservation, and Hon. E. D. Rivers, Governor, Atlanta, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Joint memorial of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of New Mexico to the Congress of the United States of America, requesting not to pass any measure now pending before said Congress which seeks additional lands in the State of New Mexico for use by the Indians

Whereas there have been introduced in the Congress of the United States certain bills which have for their purpose the increasing, or extending, of the Navajo Indian Reservation in the State of New Mexico by some three and one-half million acres; and

Whereas the Federal Government for several years has been purchasing large tracts of lands in the State of New Mexico, and particularly has been purchasing large tracts of lands in old Spanish land grants, to be designated for the use of the Indians; and

Whereas the continuation of the policy of the Federal Government in acquiring large tracts of land and in the extension of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico by three and a half million acres is detrimental to the economic and social welfare of the citizens of the State of New Mexico and would work a hardship upon stock raisers and upon those industries closely associated and connected with the stock-raising industry; and

Whereas the continuation of the policy of the Federal Government in obtaining large tracts of land in New Mexico necessarily takes all of said lands off the tax rolls of New Mexico, and the revenue derived therefrom as taxes is lost to the citizens of New Mexico: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of New Mexico respectfully and earnestly memorialize and request the Congress of the United States of America not to pass any measures now before said Congress which seek additional lands for the use of the Indians in the State of New Mexico; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the respective Senators and Representative of New Mexico in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States of America a bill (H. R. 3629) introduced therein on January 25, 1937, being a bill for the establishment of engineering experiment stations at the land-grant colleges; and

Whereas the said bill is, in the opinion of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, superior to any other similar bill heretofore introduced and is in form and substance a desirable and wise measure; and

Whereas the grant of Federal aid each year to each land-grant college for research work in engineering would be of very definite advantage to this Territory, which is included in said bill and is governed by its provisions, and under which the University of Hawaii will directly benefit: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested, through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, to enact the said bill for the establishment of engineering experiment stations at the land-grant colleges substantially in the form of the bill known as H. R. 3629, as introduced in the Federal Congress by Representative GREEN on January 25, 1937; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution shall, upon its adoption, be forwarded to the President of the United States; the President of the Senate of the United States; the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; to Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives; and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to include in the rivers and harbors bill for 1937 authorization for a survey of Hilo Harbor, in the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1935 of the Congress of the United States authorized a survey of Hilo Harbor, in the Territory of Hawaii, and provided an appropriation therefor; and

Whereas pursuant to said act a survey of said harbor was made by Maj. Ralph Barrows, district engineer of the United States Army in Hawaii; and

Whereas said Major Barrows, upon the completion of the said survey, expressed the opinion that the necessity for an addition to the Hilo breakwater and for additional dredging in Hilo Harbor was obvious; and

Whereas Col. T. H. Jackson, division engineer of the United States Army, disapproved of any further improvement at Hilo Harbor; and

Whereas recent violent storms which occurred in the vicinity of Hilo Harbor have demonstrated beyond doubt that additional breakwater protection and additional dredging are absolutely necessary for proper protection of shipping therein and for the proper protection of the harbor front; and

Whereas the log of Harbormaster Capt. James Reid covering the past 18 months' period offers additional evidence of the necessity for such additional protection for the shipping in said harbor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to include in the rivers and harbors bill for the year 1937 authority and direction to the United States Army engineers in Hawaii to make a survey of said Hilo Harbor for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the necessity and extent of additional breakwater and dredging requirements therein; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the Secretary of War of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress, the President of the Senate of the Congress, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the honorable Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that:

Whereas the city of Anchorage is an important aviation center in the Territory of Alaska; and

Whereas aircraft operations must in part be carried on with pontoon ships; and

Whereas the waters of Knik Arm, upon which the city of Anchorage borders, are unsuitable for the operation of pontoon ships; and

Whereas the present seaplane base at Lake Spenard does not afford a sufficiently long runway for loaded planes to take off; and

Whereas a preliminary survey discloses that by the construction of a waterway 1,600 feet in length by 200 feet in width, with a maximum cutting of 10 feet, the waters of Lake Spenard could be connected with the waters of Lake Hood, thereby providing a runway 6,000 feet in length; and

Whereas the volume of material to be removed in the construction of said waterway is estimated to be approximately 90,542 cubic yards and said material is believed to consist entirely of gravel which could be removed at an estimated cost of $45,000 or less; and

Whereas the Alaska Road Commission, a Federal road-building agency, does not use any of its appropriated funds in the construction of aviation fields in the Territory of Alaska, that the fields are built entirely by the Territory, and that the Territory has supported such work to the limit of its financial ability.

Wherefore your memorialist respectfully petitions and prays that the appropriation for the Alaska Road Commission be increased to enable it to construct said waterway.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable A. J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in thirteenth regular session assembled, most respectfully represents:

Whereas that portion of southeastern Alaska commonly known as the west coast of Prince of Wales Island has a population of several thousand persons, the large majority of whom are native born; and

Whereas throughout this entire district there are no hospitals or medical facilities for the care of such native-born people who become sick, injured, or diseased; and

Whereas transportation from said district to the nearest hospital or doctor at Ketchikan or Wrangell is extremely hazardous and uncertain throughout a great portion of the year, thus making it impossible in many cases for sick or injured persons to receive medical attention or hospitalization when required; and

Whereas the town of Craig, Alaska, situated on the west coast of Prince of Wales Island, is the geographic center of said area and is accessible at all seasons of the year to the inhabitants of the entire district; and

Whereas the maintenance of hospital and medical facilities of Craig would serve in a large degree to alleviate the suffering and distress among the residents of the west coast of Prince of Wales Island on account of their present lack of such facilities:

Now, therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, petitions the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to appropriate and provide sufficient funds for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to construct, operate, and maintain hospital and medical facilities in the town of Craig, Alaska, sufficient to meet the needs of the residents of that district.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; to the honorable President of the Senate; and to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and to Hon. Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate from Alaska:

Whereas the Honorable ANTHONY J. DIMOND, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, has introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States now in session H. R. 1565, amending the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska and for other purposes", and providing particularly against seizure of boats or paraphernalia used in fishing until the owner or operator shall have been convicted of illegal fishing; and

Whereas we believe that this bill fairly reflects the views of a large majority of the people of this Territory upon the subject covered: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the thirteenth session of the Legislature of Alaska, That we heartily approve the provisions of said bill and respectfully request that the same be enacted into law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be mailed to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; to the honorable President of the Senate; to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and to the Honorable ANTHONY J. DIMOND, Delegate from Alaska.

To His Excellency the President of the United States, to the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and to the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent:

That the city of Nome is the principal seaport in northwestern Alaska, where the commerce and business of that large part of the Territory of Alaska centers;

That the city of Nome is the receiving and distributing port of the second division of Alaska, where freight and passenger steamers and other vessels load and unload their passengers and cargo;

That it is an unprotected open roadstead subject to much bad weather and severe storms;

That for more than 29 years the United States Government has maintained at Nome a Coast Guard station efficiently manned and equipped, which has been of great service in saving life and property; and

Whereas said Coast Guard station and a portion of its equipment was destroyed by fire on September 17, 1934:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialists, respectfully pray that said Coast Guard station be rebuilt at Nome, Alaska, without delay and be adequately equipped and manned for service; that an amphibian plane be assigned to said station to render invaluable service in the spring of the year to pilot ships through the ice to open leads or keep captains of said ships informed as to ice conditions.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

To the President of the United States, the Senate and House of Representatives, and to the Delegate from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in thirteenth regular session assembled, most respectfully represents:

Whereas the Honorable ANTHONY J. DIMOND, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, did on January 5, 1937, introduce in the Congress of the United States H. R. 1562, providing for "Transferring the jurisdiction, supervision, administration, and control over the salmon and other fisheries of Alaska, except the fur-seal and sea-otter fisheries, from the Department of Commerce to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the people of the Territory of Alaska have the welfare of their country at heart and are capable of administering their own affairs, and of administering the fisheries of Alaska by virtue of their connection therewith:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialist, do most earnestly pray that said H. R. 1562 be speedily enacted into law.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and to the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

Whereas fishing is the major industry in the coastal regions of Alaska and furnishes employment and subsistence to a very large percentage of the inhabitants of the coastal regions; and

Whereas said industry pays in excess of 70 percent of the present tax revenues of the Territorial government; and

Whereas the attention of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce has, by its Alaska committee, been called to the most serious threat which has ever occurred to the fishing industry of the Pacific coast and the many thousands of fishermen, cannery workers, and others who are dependent upon this industry, by the invasion of the coastal fisheries of the Pacific coast of North America, by the nationals and ships of foreign countries; and

Whereas such proposed invasion is imminent and would not only threaten the employees and members of the fishing industry but would also wipe out the results of many years of carefully developed conservation policies of the several States and of the United States, including the work of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, which has built up the salmon run in Alaska to the largest point in history, and the work of the International Fisheries Commission, which by joint action of Canada and the United States has blocked the depletion and gone far to restore the supply of halibut upon the banks adjacent to the two countries:

Now, therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully requests and urges the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and the Congress of the United States to take such action as may be necessary to preserve the fisheries resources of Alaska to and for the benefit of the people thereof.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the honorable Congress of the United States and to the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents that—

Whereas Alaska is devoloping a large industry in the packing and preparation of salmon, herring, clams, and crabs for the markets of the United States; and

Whereas the United States, including Alaska, packed in 1936, 10,834,750 cases of salmon of 48 pounds each, 45,740 barrels of herring of 250 pounds each, 62,407 cases of clams of 46 pounds each, and 5,631 cases of crab meat of 48 pounds each; and

Whereas there are also imported into the United States large quantities of salmon, herring, clams, and crabs in competition with the product of the United States, salmon being imported from Canada and Japan, crabs from Russia and Japan, clams from China, Japan, and Canada, and herring from Scotland, Iceland, and other countries; and

Whereas the duty on herring is now $2.50 per barrel, and that on salmon, clams, and crabs is 25 percent ad valorem; and

Whereas Alaska produces many times the amount of salmon required for the markets of the entire United States, and can produce sufficient herring to supply the market demands of the United States, and can greatly increase its production of canned crab meat and canned clams, and produces a superior quality of salmon, clams, and crabs to that of those produced in other countries from which they are imported; and

Whereas the United States, on account of economic conditions and the advancement and development of its population, has a different and higher standard of living than that of any other country in the world, which standard of living makes higher production costs of the products herein mentioned, and consequently gives the products of foreign countries a great advantage over those of the United States, and especially those of Alaska; and

Whereas the present duty on such products is not sufficient to make up the increased cost of production: Now, therefore,

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, prays that the duty on herring imported into the United States be increased from $2.50 per barrel of 250 pounds to $5 per barrel, and that the duty on canned salmon, crabs, and clams be increased from 25 percent ad valorem to 40 percent ad valorem.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

To the honorable Congress and the honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that—

Whereas tin is an essential valuable metal that the United States must obtain by importation; and

Whereas the value of the tin consumed in the United States in the year 1934 was $45,000, while the total value of primary tin produced in American territory was less than $10,000; and

Whereas Alaska produces practically all of the tin mined in American territory and produced 98 percent of the total in 1934; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, through its Committee on Foreign Affairs, carried on hearings to determine possible methods of protecting the United States against exorbitant prices of tin in time of peace and shortage of the metal in time of war; and

Whereas it was brought out in such hearings that, among other things, Government aid should be extended to develop particular properties in American territory; and

Whereas important deposits of tin are known to exist on the Seward Peninsula and in the Hot Springs district of Alaska; and

Whereas great transportation difficulties confronting operations at either of the above-named localities result in a great handicap to the successful mining and marketing of tin ore; and

Whereas it is believed that Federal aid to tin mining in Alaska would offset the freight differential and other obstacles confronting such operations; and

Whereas the Government of the United States did at one time offer a bonus for the development of any legitimate tin mine within the territory of the United States: Now, therefore

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully petitions and urges such Federal aid to the tin-mining industry in Alaska as will encourage its development and insure to the United States a possible source of tin in the time of need.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas mining is one of the chief industries of Alaska and it is desirable to encourage the development of mining in Alaska: Now, therefore,

Your memorialists pray that the mining laws relating to Alaska be so amended that survey work done by United States mineral surveyors upon a mining claim for the purpose of establishing its boundaries, or for any other purpose in connection with the location of the claim or protecting the title thereto, whether in connection with patent surveys or otherwise, be credited as assessment work for the year during which such survey work was done.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the honorable Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

Whereas on the 11th day of January 1937 there was introduced by Delegate A. J. DIMOND, of Alaska, in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, a bill designated as H. R. 2520, and entitled, "A bill to authorize the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas your memorialist desires to express its approval of said bill, H. R. 2520, and desires that the Territory of Alaska shall be in a position to expend funds for immediate necessary public-works projects, which the said Territory is not now able to finance; and

Whereas your memorialist desires that the Territory of Alaska shall be in a position to take its place among the several States and Territories on an equality basis and in every respect perform a full measure of service to effect national recovery and maintain the economic stability of our Government; and

Whereas by virtue of an inhibition in its organic act the Territory of Alaska is precluded from incurring bonded indebtedness and has not been permitted to participate proportionately in the allotments of Federal grants to the extent enjoyed by the States and other Territories; and

Whereas your memorialist proposes to enact supplementary legislation in keeping with the provisions of H. R. 2520, so that funds becoming available for public works shall be expended for the following designated classes of public works, according to the following percentages of the whole:

	Percent
Air fields and air navigation aids and facilities	30
Highways, roads, trails, bridges, harbor improvements and navigation aids, and unforeseen contingencies and emergencies	40
Public institutions, including hospitals, schools, and other appurtenant structures and facilities	30

Now, therefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to give favorable consideration to H. R. 2520, in order that, pursuant to the purposes thereof, it do pass.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, does most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the organic act of the Territory of Alaska provides as follows: "No divorce shall be granted by the legislature nor shall any divorce granted by the courts of the Territory unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for 2 years next preceding the application"; and

Whereas the people of Alaska, through their legislature, are qualified to govern their own affairs and have from time to time requested from the Federal Government removal of restrictions of the legislative power imposed by said organic act, and when additional power has been granted have demonstrated their ability to govern themselves; and

Whereas the subject of divorce laws is a matter of local concern; and

Whereas the 2 years' residence requirement now imposed by the organic act is an unreasonable one on account of the transitory nature of residence in the Territory and much greater than most of the States:

Now, therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, most respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to so amend the organic act of Congress to enable the Legislature of Alaska to prescribe the length of residence for applicants in divorce proceedings in the courts of Alaska.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the honorable Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully presents that—

Whereas under the organic act of this Territory, its legislature is denied authority to alter, amend, modify, or repeal the laws in force at the time of the approval of said act (Aug. 24, 1912) providing for taxes on business, occupation, and trades, and that on account of such inhibition the territorial legislature is unable to correct manifest injustice suffered by many who, under said laws, are required to pay license taxes disproportionate to the amount of volume of business transacted by them:

Now, therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully prays that the organic act of Alaska be amended by repealing that portion thereof in section 24, title 48, U. S. C., which denies authority to the territorial legislature to alter, amend, modify, or repeal the law heretofore and now in force fixing the amount of license taxes on business, trades, and occupations.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the honorable Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully presents that—

Whereas many small areas on the mainland of Alaska and on adjacent islands are occupied by bona-fide industrious fur farmers under that is known as use permits issued by the Forest Service; and

Whereas the permanent improvements on these fur farms are similar in character to those found on lands occupied by homestead settlers; and

Whereas the fur-farming industry bids fair to become of great and perpetual importance:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully prays that adequate legislation be enacted to make it possible for bona-fide fur farmers to acquire title to lands actually occupied and used by them in the conduct of their business.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the honorable Congress of the United States and to the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents: That there was passed by the Congress of the United States and approved on March 27, 1934, an act contained in bill H. R. 5745, entitled "An act granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes"; and that said act was passed for the purpose of transferring from the United States to the Territory of Alaska title to a certain tract of land at Sitka, Alaska, to be used by the Territory as a home of aged, sick, and infirm pioneers and residents thereof, a portion of which said tract was formerly owned and occupied by the United States as a marine and military reserve;

That when said act was passed it described and included, in addition to the marine and military reserve intended to be transferred to the Territory, a tract partly of tidelands which had been occupied, claimed, possessed, and used by the Sitka Cold Storage Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Alaska, and its predecessors in interest continuously since the year 1913, and which tract is still occupied, possessed, and claimed by the Sitka Cold Storage Co., with a large cold-storage plant and facilities for the marketing and freezing of fresh fish, and which plant was erected more than 20 years ago, and upon which the Sitka Cold Storage Co. and its predecessor have expended upward of $150,000; and

Whereas the portion of the tract described in H. R. 5745 and the act aforesaid approved March 27, 1934, which is claimed, occupied, used, and possessed by the Sitka Cold Storage plant, is not necessary for the Territory of Alaska, and has never been claimed nor occupied by it; and

Whereas the Sitka Cold Storage Co. is the main industry in Sitka, and of great importance to the people of Sitka and vicinity in the marketing of fish, which is the chief resource of the Territory; and

Whereas the portion of said tract of land described in H. R. 5745 which is not occupied nor used by the Territory of Alaska and will not be occupied nor used by it, but is occupied, used, possessed, and claimed by the Sitka Cold Storage Co., is described as follows:

"Beginning at Corner No. 1, identical with Corner No. 1, 'U. S. Forest Service Reserve', and also with Corner No. 4, 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common', as shown on the 'Plat of Sitka Town site, Alaska, U. S. Survey No. 1474, Tract "A" ', from which point USRLM No. 1, established in connection with the Sitka Town site, U. S. Survey No. 1474, marked by a cross 'X' and 'USRLM No. 1' chiseled on a large bedrock face in the Indian schoolyard, bears N. 11°02' E. 293.8 ft. distant, and the S. E. Corner of the Sitka Cold Storage Company building 'A' bears N. 29°35' W. 3.5 ft., thence N. 1°04' W. 4.2 ft. to Corner No. 2 on the west side line of an unnamed street called hereinafter 'Waterfront Street', from which cor. the S. E. Cor. of said Sitka Cold Storage Company building 'A' bears S. 60°00' W. 1.5 ft., thence N. 29°35' W. 90.0 ft. along the west side line of said 'Waterfront Street' and parallel to and 1.5 ft. E. therefrom the east end of said Sitka Cold Storage Company building 'A' to Cor. No. 3 from which cor. the N. E. Cor. of said building bears S. 60°00' W. 1.5 ft. dist., thence N. 38°51' W. 50.22 ft., along the west side line of said 'Waterfront Street' to Cor. No. 4, a point on the N. W. boundary line of said U. S. Sur. No. 1474, Tract 'A', identical with the N. W. boundary line of said 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common' and the N. W. boundary line of said 'Pioneers Home Tract'; from which cor. the N. E. cor. of the 'Harbor Store' building, same being property of the Sitka Cold Storage Company; bears S. 31°06' E. 16.5 ft. dist., thence S. 35°00' W. 36.50 ft., along and identical with said N. W. boundary (13–14) line of said U. S. Sur. No. 1474, Tract 'A'; N. W. boundary (7–6) line, 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common', and N. W. boundary line 'Pioneers Home Tract' to Cor. No. 5; meander cor. at line of mean high tide on east shore of Sitka Harbor, identical with Cor. No. 14 M. C. said 'U. S. Survey No. 1474, Tract 'A', and Cor. No. 6 M. C. said 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common' and with a meander cor. of said 'Pioneers Home Tract', thence with meanders, along the east shore of Sitka Harbor, identical with the meander line of said U. S. Sur. No. 1474, Tract 'A', of said 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common', and of said 'Pioneers Home Tract', under the said 'Harbor Store' building, and the Sitka Cold Storage Company building 'A'; S. 37°19' E. 57.09 ft., S. 20°23' W. 43.43 ft., S. 82°56' W. 31.56 ft., S. 70°07' W. 29.00 ft., S. 15°51' E. 19.37 ft., S. 2°51' E. 36.17 ft., S. 76°51' E. 14.59 ft., to Cor. No. 6, meander cor., identical with Cor. No. 5 M. C. of said 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common', and with Cor. No. 5 M. C. of said 'U. S. Forest Service Reserve', and with cor. of the said 'Pioneers Home Tract'; thence N. 60°00' E. 132.44 ft. along the 5–1 boundary line of the said 'U. S. Forest Service Reserve', identical with the 5–4 boundary line of the said 'U. S. Reserve for Public Common', and a boundary of the said 'Pioneers Home Tract', and parallel to, and 3.5 ft. south of the south side of the Sitka Cold Storage Company building 'A' to Cor. No. 1, the place of beginning, containing 0.472 acres"; and

Whereas the whole of said tract is included in the description contained in said H. R. 5745 approved March 27, 1934, which said act contains a provision in section 2 prohibiting the Territory of Alaska from selling or otherwise disposing of any part of said property, including the portion which has been for over 23 years claimed, occupied, possessed, and used by the Sitka Cold Storage Co. and its predecessor, and the title to which said tract should be confirmed in the Sitka Cold Storage Co.;

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully prays that H. R. 5745, approved March 27, 1934, be amended so as to permit the Territory of Alaska to transfer, deed, and convey to the Sitka Cold Storage Co., a corporation, that portion of the land described in H. R. 5745, which is hereinabove described, and which is claimed, occupied, possessed, and used by the Sitka Cold Storage Co.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska in the thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that:

Whereas the city of Nome is situated on the immediate shore of northern Bering Sea and constantly subjected to the menace and destruction of the terrific storms and excessive surf so prevalent during the open season of navigation; and

Whereas numerous times during the past 36 years high seas and heavy surf have caused severe damage and loss of life and property; and

Whereas the citizens of the rebuilt city of Nome believe they are entitled to peace of mind and adequate protection of life and property: Now, therefore,

Your memorialist respectfully urges that the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the thirteenth regular session assembled, petition Congress to enact the necessary legislation with which to provide the city of Nome with an adequate steel revetment extending along the Bering Sea shore line from the present east revetment at Snake River about 3,000 feet easterly to a point known as the oil dock.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the honorable Congress of the United States, to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and to the honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in thirteenth regular session assembled, respectfully represents that—

Whereas Benjamin B. Mozee has been a resident of Alaska for over 30 years and has faithfully served in the capacity of teacher and superintendent of Government schools from 1909 to 1929; and

Whereas Benjamin B. Mozee was appointed General Supervisor of the Alaska Reindeer Service in 1929 and fulfilled his duties to the utmost; and

Whereas Benjamin B. Mozee has worked hard and diligently for the benefit of the natives and the Reindeer Service: Now, therefore,

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully urges that Benjamin B. Mozee be reinstated as General Supervisor of the Alaska Reindeer Service.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

To the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; to the honorable President of the Senate and to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and to Hon. Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate from Alaska:

Whereas there is now before the Congress of the United States a bill known as the Harrison-Black-Fletcher bill for Federal aid to education, which would, if passed, aid the Territory of Alaska materially in educating the children of the Territorial public schools; and

Whereas the Federal Government owns and controls most of the resources of the Territory of Alaska, limiting the Territory in securing funds for its rapidly increasing school expenses: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the thirteenth session of the Legislature of Alaska, That we heartily approve the provisions of said bill and respectfully request that the same be enacted into law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be mailed to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; to the honorable President of the Senate and to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and to Hon. ANTHONY J. DIMOND, Delegate from Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Common Council of the City of Detroit, Mich., and the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1879, to extend to political subdivisions of States the same treatment accorded to States which borrowed for relief purposes under the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, by eliminating discrimination in the case of certain loans made to cities and counties under that act, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Allegheny County (Pa.) Bar Association, protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the monthly meeting of the Jackson Democratic League of Salt Lake City, Utah, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by unanimous rising vote of citizens in open meeting assemble at Spring Valley, Rockland County, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate letters from the Governors of Arkansas and Indiana, transmitting signed copies of resolutions adopted by the Governors of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Missouri at a recent Governors' conference on flood damage held in St. Louis, Mo., requesting Congress to provide funds for the cost of rehabilitation of damaged highways and bridges caused by floods in the Ohio and Mississippi River Valleys, which with the accompanying resolutions were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of more stringent alien and immigration restriction legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by St. Petersburg Council, No. 8, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of St. Petersburg, Fla., favoring the enactment of the so-called Reynolds-Starnes bills, providing restriction of immigration and certain regulations relative to aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Council of the City of Toledo, and the Toledo Chapter, American Association of Social Workers, of Toledo, in the State of Ohio; the mayor and General Council of the City of Atlanta, Ga.; the Council of the City of Wyandotte, Mich.; the Council of the City of Casper, Wyo., and the Councils of the Cities of Pittsburgh, Bethlehem, and New Kensington, in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the enactment of legislation providing low-cost housing, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell and several other citizens, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the actions of representatives of certain labor organizations holding possession of property in so-called sit-down strikes, and praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress such sit-down strike methods, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams from A. F. Whitney, president, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Cleveland, Ohio; Charles H. Bryson, chairman, Republicans for Roosevelt League, Columbus, Ohio; and Thomas F. Burns, chairman, and Powers Hapgood, secretary, of the New England Committee for Industrial Organization, Boston, Mass., relative to the telegram above noted from Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell and other citizens of Boston, Mass., and the attitude of the workers toward so-called sit-down strikes, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GIBSON presented a resolution adopted by voters of the town of Pomfret, Vt., protesting against the enactment of legislation to change the personnel of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING presented a resolution adopted by the Passaic County (N. J.) Bar Association, protesting against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented various memorials, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Utah, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the membership of the Supreme Court and to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2257) to provide old-age compensation for the citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Furman L. Templeton, president of Delta Lambda Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DUFFY and Mr. LA FOLLETTE each submitted an identical joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin urging Federal and State officials charged with administration under the Works Progress Administration to take immediate action to make funds available for the drought-stricken rural areas of Wisconsin, and to put into effect a work program under the Works Progress Administration, or other Federal agency, to meet the emergency, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See joint resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 25th instant, p. 2733, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. CLARK presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas Federal Coordinator of Transportation Joseph B. Eastman has submitted a report recommending certain consolidations and unifications of railroads and terminals by the 149 class I railroads operating in this Nation and abandonment of a great many miles of rail lines, terminals, and facilities of such railroads; and

Whereas such consolidation and unification, if carried out, will result in a great loss of income, running into millions of dollars in the various communities of this State, and also will result in placing many now usefully employed persons on relief, and a great loss of tax revenue, not only to the State of Missouri but to all political subdivisions wherein such unifications result in abandonment of lines and reduction in force; and

Whereas the full burden and effect of such contemplated consolidations fall upon the general public in curtailed service, loss of business and tax revenue; and

Whereas this Nation is just recovering from a long period of unemployment and depression, and the proposed mergers and consolidations as contemplated would adversely effect the return to prosperous conditions and be contrary to the present effort of our Federal administration to increase employment; and

Whereas any State legislation adopted for the purpose of making such consolidations illegal could be of little effect, because such consolidations would necessarily be of an interstate nature, and under the jurisdiction of the National Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission, therefore, the necessary relief measures to avert such consolidations and unifications must of necessity come from our National Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Missouri, the house of representatives concurring therein, hereby memorialize and request the Congress of the United States, and our Missouri delegation in such Congress, to use any and all means available and necessary to prevent the carrying forward of the plans for the unification and consolidation as set out in the report of Coordinator Eastman, wherever such plans and proposals will result adversely to the general welfare of this State, or the people of this State; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby instructed to mail each Member of the Missouri delegation in the House and each Missouri Member of the National Senate a certified copy of these resolutions, and a copy to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the chairman of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PITTMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress to enact a noxious weed eradication law

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, respectfully represents that—

Whereas noxious weeds have been and now are a serious menace to agriculture in the various States of the Union, including Nevada; and

Whereas such weeds cost the people of the United States large sums of money annually through the loss of valuable agricultural crops, by reason of the choking out of such crops by noxious weeds and the resultant loss thereof to the farmers of the Nation; and

Whereas the several States of the Union, individually, cannot successfully finance weed-eradication programs; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill providing Federal aid to and participation with the the several States for the purpose of eradicating noxious weeds therein: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States be most earnestly urged and besought to enact into a law the bill for Federal aid to and participation with the respective States in the eradication of noxious weeds now pending in the Congress and known as H. R. 4009; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada be, and he hereby is, directed to forward a certificated copy of this memorial to Senator KEY PITTMAN, Senator P. A. MCCARRAN, and Congressman JAMES G. SCRUGHAM, representing the State of Nevada in the Congress, and to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, with the request that this memorial be brought to the attention of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress to the end that a Federal noxious weed law be enacted.

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress relative to the transfer of water rights within Federal projects in certain States from marginal and submarginal lands to good lands, and other matters properly connected therewith

Whereas it is sound material policy that revenues accruing to the Bureau of Reclamation and the respective States as the result of the exhaustion of a limited natural resource should be devoted to the development of permanent natural resources, the most important of which in the Western States is water; and

Whereas on all irrigation projects the use of irrigation water has caused many changes in the character of the soil and will continue to cause such changes, thereby making many original classifications obsolete: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of Nevada, That Congress pass legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer water rights within Federal projects, in States where the State law will permit, from marginal and submarginal lands to good lands, either private or public domain, and that all payments on construction charges on such marginal or submarginal lands be credited to the new water rights allowed; and be it further,

Resolved, That our Senators in the United States Senate and our Representative in Congress be requested to use all proper efforts to bring about the passage of the laws covering the matters above referred to; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit properly certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House in Congress, and to each of our Senators and our Representative in Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to pass that certain act entitled "A bill to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal aid to the States for the purpose of enabling them to provide adequate institutional treatment of prisoners and provide improved methods of supervision and administration of probation, parole, and conditional release of offenders"

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a measure providing for the institutional treatment of prisoners and for the provision of supervising prisoners under probation on parole; and

Whereas the said bill is intended for the purpose of rehabilitating those who have been offenders of the law in an effort to better their conditions and protect society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States be urged to bring about the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators in Washington, D. C., and our Representative in Congress be urged to lend their efforts to the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators, and to our Representative in Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Assembly joint resolution urging Congress to enact the Harrison-Fletcher bill

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, hereby respectfully represents that

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States that certain bill known as the Harrison-Fletcher bill, being S. 4793 and H. R. 13021; and

Whereas this bill is based on the principle of large-unit support for schools with local control; and

Whereas the principle of large-unit support for schools is recognized in Nevada to be the best means of equalizing educational opportunity; and

Whereas equalization of educational opportunity is the cornerstone of our democratic form of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of Nevada, That the Congress be most earnestly urged and beseeched to enact the Harrison-Fletcher bill at its earliest convenience.

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada be, and hereby is, directed to transmit a duly certified copy of this resolution, under the seal of the State of Nevada, to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; to each of our Senators in the United States Senate; to our Representatives in Congress; to the Honorable PAT HARRISON, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee; and to the Honorable BROOKS FLETCHER, a member of the House Committee on Education.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 847) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 256) thereon.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 257) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 978) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 259) thereon.

He also (for Mr. AUSTIN), from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1226) to amend the act of May 3, 1935, relating to promotion of safety on the highways of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 260) thereon.

He also (for Mr. REYNOLDS), from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 261) thereon.

He also (for Mr. CAPPER), from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 157) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 801, 70th Cong.), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 262) thereon.

CREATION OF THE SENATE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I report an original resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 105) was considered and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Creation of the Senate", prepared by Dr. George J. Schulz, Director of the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, be printed as a Senate document.

By Mr. DAVIS (by request):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 119) suspending action by Navy selection boards; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

VALIDATION THROUGH REENACTMENT OF LAWS HELD UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference, and I ask unanimous consent at this time to have it read, and thereafter to make a short statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi that the joint resolution introduced by him be read? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 118) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the validation through reenactment by Congress of any law adjudged unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and requiring, in certain cases, that the Supreme Court render an opinion upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Congress shall have the power to reenact, by a two-thirds majority of each House, any Federal law, the whole or any provision of which is hereafter declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. In case the Supreme Court renders any judgment holding any act of Congress or any provision of any such act unconstitutional, the question with respect to the constitutionality of such act or provision shall be promptly submitted by the President to the Congress at the earliest practicable date following the date upon which such judgment is rendered. If such act is reenacted by two-thirds of each House of the Congress before the expiration of the next regular session following the regular or special session during which such question is submitted, such act and all provisions thereof shall be deemed to be constitutional and effective from the date of such reenactment.

"SEC. 2. Any act of Congress containing a provision providing for the submission of such act to the Supreme Court for an opinion as to its constitutionality shall be so submitted by the President immediately following its enactment, and it shall be the duty of the Supreme Court to render a written opinion with respect to its constitutionality to the President within 60 days after the date of such submission. If, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, the act or any provision thereof is unconstitutional, the President shall promptly submit such act to the Congress for its reconsideration, and if such act is reenacted by two-thirds of each House of Congress before the expiration of the next regular session following the regular or special session during which such act is submitted for reconsideration, such act and all provisions thereof shall be deemed to be constitutional from the date of such reenactment, and shall be effective from such date unless a later effective date is provided in such act. If, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, the act is constitutional, such act and all provisions thereof shall be deemed to be constitutional from the date the Supreme Court renders its opinion to the President, and shall be effective from such date unless a later effective date is provided in such act."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, on the 18th of June last, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, I addressed the Senate on this question, and announced at that time that at this session I would have such a measure ready for presentation to the Senate. At that time I made a statement which I wish now to read into the RECORD.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BILBO. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to be most courteous to the Senator. I was willing that the joint resolution should be read during routine morning business, but I must object to a statement being made in respect thereto. Such a statement would properly come when the unfinished business is before the Senate. If the Senator will defer his statement until routine morning business is closed, I shall make no objection.

Mr. BILBO. Very well.

Mr. BILBO subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to read from my address delivered on June 18 of last year in the Seventy-fourth Congress:

To the end that some further curb or check or restraint may be exercised upon the growing power and despotism of a paramount judiciary * * * I propose to submit to the next Congress an amendment to the Constitution very similar in its aim and purpose to the proposal submitted by James Madison and James Wilson to the Federal Convention that adopted the Constitution in its original form.

My proposed amendment to the Constitution will embody the following provisions:

First, that Congress shall have the power to reenact by a two-thirds majority of each House any law, or part thereof, hereafter declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and the law thus reenacted shall be in full force and effect as though never held unconstitutional.

The second part of my proposed constitutional amendment is that any act of Congress carrying the provision that the same shall be submitted to the Supreme Court for determination as to its constitutionality shall be so submitted to the Court by the Congress, and it shall be the duty of the Court to report said act, with its findings thereon, back to the Congress within 60 days from the receipt of same. If the act thus reviewed and construed by the Supreme Court is thought to be by it unconstitutional, then the Congress may either reconstruct the act in conformity to the Court's opinion and pass it as a new bill or the Congress may reenact in its original form the law or any part thereof declared unconstitutional and thereafter, and not before, the same shall be in full force and effect as though never held unconstitutional.

In conformity to that declaration of last year, I have prepared a proposed constitutional amendment covering these two provisions, and have introduced it, to be referred to the proper committee.

In this connection I wish to say that I do not want the introduction of this proposed amendment, carrying out my purpose announced at the last session, to be construed in any sense as a substitute for or an attempt at compromise of the President's proposal to reorganize the Supreme Court, which is now pending before the Judiciary Committee. Neither do I want it to be construed that I am taking the position that the Supreme Court has not, in proper cases, the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. To make myself clear in this connection I desire to state that I am one of the Senators who endorsed the President's proposal 100 percent; but my amendment is necessary as a permanent measure of relief from any usurpation on the part of the Supreme Court, even if we had 25 Judges on the Supreme Bench. It has no relationship to the efforts of the President in his present proposal.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRODUCTS OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY—AMENDMENT

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 278) to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADVISORY OPINIONS TO CONGRESS BY SUPREME COURT

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH (for himself and Mr. MINTON) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 103), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Supreme Court of the United States is requested to adopt such amendments to its rules and procedure as to enable the Congress of the United States, on a majority vote of both Houses of the Congress, to request and receive from the Supreme Court of the United States advisory opinions as to the constitutionality of legislation pending before, and being considered by, the Congress of the United States.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS

Mr. CLARK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 104), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals hereby is authorized to employ during the Seventy-fifth Congress an assistant clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

GREATER TEXAS AND PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION, TEXAS, 1937

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 66) providing for the participation by the United States in the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition to be held in the State of Texas during the year 1937, which was, on page 9, to strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 9. Any funds allocated by the United States Texas Centennial Commission to the Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations under the provisions of such Public Resolution No. 66 may be transferred in the discretion of the Commission upon the enactment of this joint resolution to said Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations to carry out the purposes for which such funds were so allocated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY ADDRESS BY HON. BRIEN M'MAHON

[Mr. LONERGAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. Brien McMahon, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, at the banquet of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick at Washington, D. C., on Mar. 17, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY NONPARTISAN SOCIAL SECURITY COMMISSION

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the Nonpartisan Social Security Commission relative to the Social Security Act, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer and Associated Papers in West Virginia relating to the proposal to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which appears in the Appendix.]

JUNK AND JOKERS IN ELECTRIC RATES—ADDRESS BY FRANK R. M'NINCH

[Mr. BONE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Hon. Frank R. McNinch, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, on Wednesday, Mar. 24, 1937, on the subject Junk and Jokers in Electric Rates, which appears in the Appendix.]

EMBARGOES AGAINST NATIONS AIDING OTHER NATIONS IN CIVIL STRIFE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 100) submitted by Mr. NYE on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise the Senate through its Committee on Foreign Relations whether the existing neutrality laws of the United States are sufficient to provide an embargo against nations whose armed forces are engaged in active warfare in a nation where a state of civil war exists, which state of civil war has caused our Government to declare embargoes against exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to that nation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, as the author of the resolution, I desire that it may go over for the day without prejudice. Tomorrow I may be quite ready to join with the Senator from Nevada in asking that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. However, I wish that that question may not be taken up today.

Mr. PITTMAN. If there is to be no discussion of the resolution today I shall be glad to withdraw my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the resolution go over without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS ON CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we have repeatedly called the calendar recently, and there is comparatively little business now on it. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar at this time be dispensed with and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, during the last call of the calendar I objected to the consideration of a measure relating to the coinage of silver 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the Battle of Antietam. I did so for the reason that I thought a plan should be formulated in regard to the authorization for tokens and coins for commemorative purposes. I stated to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that I had no objection to the measure and should be glad to have it brought up today. For the reason that I think the bill should be considered today in conformity with that suggestion, and because there are other bills on the calendar which should be considered today, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the request. I understand there is at least one other bill on the calendar which it is desired shall be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none. The clerk will state the first order of business on the calendar.

RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 548) for the relief of Dorothy White, Mrs. Carol M. White, and Charles A. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with respect to this bill, it will be recalled that on previous occasions recently when the calendar was called the author of the bill, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], requested that it should go over in order that he might receive certain information. I ask that the bill go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. POPE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 48) to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROGRAMS OF PUBLIC EDUCATION

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the fact that this bill involves an authorization for an appropriation of $100,000,000. It occurs to me that it might be well to refer the bill to the Finance Committee for fiscal study.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the bill go over for the present, as no member of the Finance Committee is prepared to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SAFETY OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service, and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIETERICH. Over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I say a word with reference to the bill?

Mr. DIETERICH. I withhold my objection for the moment.

Mr. WHEELER. An identical bill was passed by the Senate at the last session. The bill would add in no way to the expense of the Commission because of the fact that they already have men who can do the work. Unless the Commission find that it is necessary for the safety of the people to add further inspectors, there will be no increase whatsoever in the expense involved. As I said, an identical bill was reported at the last session and passed by the Senate.

Mr. DIETERICH. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission are very anxious that the bill should be passed. It is identical with a bill reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce at the last session, and passed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have previously asked that the bill go over and stated by way of explanation that in the committee I had offered an amendment to the bill which I understood had been adopted by the committee. However, it was not incorporated in the print of the bill as it was reported to the Senate. If I may offer that amendment at this time, I shall have no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, in section 1, on page 2, at the end of line 24, to strike out the period and add the following: "and Communications Act of 1934 and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes", approved September 26, 1914, as amended, constituting section 44 of chapter 2, title 15, of the Code of Laws of the United States of America, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this act, to wit:

" 'Commerce' means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory or foreign nation.

" 'Corporation' shall be deemed to include any company, trust, so-called Massachusetts trust, or association, incorporated or unincorporated, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members, and has shares of capital or capital stock or certificates of interest, and any company, trust, so-called Massachusetts trust, or association, incorporated or unincorporated, without shares of capital or capital stock or certificates of interest, except partnerships, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members.

" 'Documentary evidence' includes all documents, papers, correspondence, books of account, and financial and corporate records.

" 'Acts to regulate commerce' means the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce', approved February 14, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and the Communications Act of 1934, and all acts amendatory thereof, and supplementary thereto.

" 'Antitrust Acts' means the act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies', approved July 2, 1890; also sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes', approved August 27, 1894; also the act entitled 'An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes" ', approved February 12, 1913; and also the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914."

SEC. 2. That section 5 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful.

"The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks, and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce.

"Whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that any such person, partnership, or corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition or unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce, and if it shall appear to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public, it shall issue and serve upon such person, partnership, or corporation a complaint stating its charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing upon a day and at a place therein fixed at least 30 days after the service of said complaint. The person, partnership, or corporation so complained of shall have the right to appear at the place and time so fixed and show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission requiring such person, partnership, or corporation to cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint. Any person, partnership, or corporation may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the Commission to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission. If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that the method of competition or the act or practice in question is prohibited by this act, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such person, partnership, or corporation an order requiring such person, partnership, or corporation to cease and desist from using such method of competition or such act or practice. Until a transcript of the record in such hearings shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the Commission may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section.

"Whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that such person, partnership, or corporation has failed or neglected to obey, or intends or is about to disobey, such order of the Commission while the same is in effect, the Commission may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit where the method of competition or the act or practice in question was used or where such person, partnership, or corporation resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its order, and shall certify and file with its application a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all the evidence taken and the report and order of the Commission. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, partnership, or corporation and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, evidence, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission, and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed, and to issue such writs as are ancillary to its jurisdiction or are necessary in its judgment to prevent injury to the public or to competitors pendente lite. The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. To the extent that the order of the Commission is affirmed, the court shall thereupon issue its own order commanding obedience to the terms of such order of the Commission. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

"Any party required by such order of the Commission to cease and desist from using such method of competition or such act or practice may obtain a review of such order in said circuit court of appeals by filing in the court, within 60 days from the date of the service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record as hereinbefore provided. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have the same jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the Commission and to enforce same and to issue such writs as in the case of an application by the Commission for the enforcement of its order, and the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. In no case shall it be necessary to establish a violation of the order of the Commission as a condition precedent to the affirmance, modification, or setting aside of the same or entering an order enforcing it.

"At the end of 60 days from the date of service of any order to cease and desist of the Commission, such order shall become final and conclusive against any person, partnership, or corporation subject thereto failing or neglecting during such 60-day period to seek court review of such order as provided in this act as amended; and in case any such person, partnership, or corporation shall fail or neglect to obey such order after the same shall have become final and conclusive and while the same is in effect, such person, partnership, or corporation shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each such offense and of $25 for each day it continues, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to affirm, enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the Commission shall be exclusive.

"Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited. No order of the Commission or judgment of court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person, partnership, or corporation from any liability under the antitrust acts.

"Complaints, orders, and other processes of the Commission under this section may be served by anyone duly authorized by the Commission, either (a) by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served, or to a member of the partnership to be served, or to the president, secretary, or other executive officer or a director of the corporation to be served; or (b) by leaving a copy thereof at the residence or the principal office or place of business of such person, partnership, or corporation; or (c) by registering and mailing a copy thereof addressed to such person, partnership, or corporation at his or its residence or principal office or place of business. The verified return by the person so serving said complaint, order, or other process setting forth the manner of said service shall be proof of the same, and the return post-office receipt for said complaint, order, or other process registered and mailed as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same."

SEC. 3. That section 6 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Commission shall have power—

"(a) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress, or upon its own initiative, to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business conduct, business practices, and business management of any person, partnership, or corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and the relation of such person, partnership, or corporation to other individuals, partnerships, and corporations.

"(b) To require, by general or special orders, persons, partnerships, or corporations engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the Commission in such form as the Commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the Commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective persons, partnerships, and corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the Commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the Commission within such reasonable period as the Commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the Commission.

"(c) To investigate, from time to time, trade conditions in and with foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of manufacturers, merchants, or traders, or other conditions, may affect the foreign trade of the United States, and to report to Congress thereon, with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

"(d) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress, to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the Antitrust Acts by any person, partnership, or corporation.

"(e) Upon the application of the Attorney General, to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any person, partnership, or corporation alleged to be violating the Antitrust Acts, in order that the corporation may thereafter maintain his or its organization, management, and conduct of business in accordance with law.

"(f) Whenever a final decree has been entered against any defendant person, partnership, or corporation in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the Antitrust Acts, to make investigations, upon its own initiative, of the manner in which the decree has been or is being carried out, and upon the application of the Attorney General it shall be its duty to make such investigation. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings and recommendations as a result of any such investigation, and the report shall be made public, in the discretion of the Commission.

"(g) To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, except trade secrets and names of customers, as it shall deem expedient in the public interest; and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation; and to provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use.

"(h) From time to time to classify persons, partnerships, or corporations, and to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

SEC. 4. That section 9 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That for the purposes of this act the Commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy, any documentary evidence of any person, partnership, or corporation being investigated pursuant to the authority conferred upon the Commission by section 6 hereof or being proceeded against; and the Commission shall have power to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter or any person, partnership, or corporation being investigated by it under section 6 hereof, or relating to any matter which is the subject of a proceeding under section 5 hereof. Any member of the Commission may sign subpenas, and members and examiners of the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence, may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpena the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

"In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person or corporation, any of the district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on or in which the corporation or person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey resides or carries on business or is found, may issue an order requiring such corporation or person to appear before the Commission, or before one of its designated examiners, and to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey any such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

"Upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Commission, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person or corporation to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

"The Commission may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending under this act at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the Commission and having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and to produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission as hereinbefore provided.

"Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence before the Commission or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination prior to so testifying or actually producing such evidence shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the Commission in obedience to a subpena issued by it: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying."

SEC. 5. That section 1 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting immediately after the words "unexpired term of the Commissioner whom he shall succeed", a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That upon the expiration of his term of office a Commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified."

SEC. 6. That if any part of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such part to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 29) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair, and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, highway grade-crossing protective devices, automatic train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices, and other appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIETERICH (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF CHEROKEE AND OTHER INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 64) defining the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the act approved April 25, 1932 (47 Stat. L. 137), and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the act approved March 19, 1924 (43 Stat. 27), and the act approved April 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 137), authorizing the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe and the Eastern or Emigrant Cherokees and the Western or Old Settler Cherokees, respectively, to sue the United States in the Court of Claims, are hereby construed and shall be deemed to authorize and direct the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and render judgment on the merits of the claims of said plaintiffs as heretofore filed in said court for alleged indebtedness, after the application of all payments in the manner provided in section 3 of the act approved April 25, 1932, aforesaid, and to give the said court full jurisdiction of the causes of action set forth in said petitions regardless of any alleged claim of previous adjudication in relation to the subject matter thereof; and to entitle the United States to be allowed and to receive full credit for all sums paid such Indians on account of any of such claims, including such gratuities only in money or property, if any, which heretofore have been paid per capita to the parties plaintiff.

The Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to reinstate the said cases heretofore dismissed and to hear and determine the same on their merits notwithstanding any former proceedings had with relation thereto.

Either party in any of the cases herein referred to shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, rather than by certiorari.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution defining the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the acts approved March 19, 1924 (43 Stat. 27), and April 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 137), and for other purposes."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1621) to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is suggested that an explanation of this bill is in order. What is the amount which it is contemplated shall be expended under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE BATTLE OF ANTIETAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 102) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam there shall be coined at a mint of the United States to be designated by the Director of the Mint not to exceed 50,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition and of a special appropriate single design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. The coins herein authorized shall bear the date 1937, irrespective of the year in which they are minted or issued, shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value, and shall be issued only upon the request of the Washington County Historical Society of Hagerstown, Md., upon payment by it of the par value of such coins, but not less than 25,000 such coins shall be issued to it at any one time and no such coins shall be issued after the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by such Washington County Historical Society of Hagerstown, Md., and the net proceeds shall be used by it in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event.

SEC. 3. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for the security of the coins, or for any other purposes, whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry with reference to this bill.

I understood last year that the committee had determined upon the policy of not recommending the passage of any more bills of this character. After hearing the reason for that policy I agreed with the committee and did not press a bill which passed the House with reference to the commemoration of an important event in my own State. It is my understanding that this bill comes outside of the category because of the fact that a similar measure had previously passed, and through some error it is necessary to have a new bill passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The favorable report upon this bill does not indicate any new policy upon the part of the committee to permit other bills of this kind to be passed?

Mr. TYDINGS. The chairman of the committee the other day stated that the committee had not formulated any policy, though they were working on one; but in view of the fact that a similar measure passed at the last session of Congress, no objection was made to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS OF PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS

The bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, is hereby repealed.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN SENATE RECORDS TO CUSTODY OF ARCHIVIST

The resolution (S. Res. 99) authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to transfer certain records to the custody of the Archivist of the United States, submitted by Mr. BARKLEY on the 24th instant, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed, upon the requisition of the Archivist of the United States, in accordance with sections 3 and 6 of the National Archives Act (48 Stat. 1122–24), to transfer to his custody for storage and preservation in the National Archives Building, any and all archives and records of the United States Senate which the Secretary of the Senate may deem not necessary for use in the current business of the Senate or which he may consider to be in such physical condition that they cannot be used without danger of damage to them, and for which, in his opinion, he is unable to provide adequate or safe storage.

H. G. CARRIERE AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1081) for the relief of H. G. Carriere, Charles E. Livingston, and John Latham, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75 to H. G. Carriere, the sum of $40 to Charles E. Livingston, and the sum of $125 to John Latham, all of Camp Crook, S. Dak., in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for damages arising out of the loss by each of them of a horse, which horses were killed in 1934 while being worked, under contract with the owners, by employees of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, in connection with emergency conservation work: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. T. DICKINSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 673) for the relief of S. T. Dickinson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$357.30" and insert "$312.30", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to S. T. Dickinson, the sum of $312.30, said sum to be in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government for medical care, hospitalization, and incidental expenses incurred as a result of injuries received on June 3, 1931, while in the performance of his official duties as an employee of the Naval Supply Depot, Brooklyn, N. Y.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACK WADE AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 893) for the relief of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor, respectively, for damages they received caused by and as a result of injuries sustained by a collision with a Civilian Conservation Corps truck on the public highway on the crest of Navajo Hill, in Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., on January 7, 1935: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 6 months of the date of the passage of this act.

FARLEY J. HOLLOMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 451) for the relief of Farley J. Holloman, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to consider the claim of Farley J. Holloman, of Ada, Okla., a former employee of the Civil Works Administration, for injuries received on or about March 3, 1934, while working on a C. W. A. project at the Smith gravel pit, located about 8 miles east of Ada, Okla., under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes", approved February 15, 1934, notwithstanding the lapse of more than 1 year in filing such claim: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. P. CONROY AND GRAHAM CONROY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 812) for the relief of E. P. Conroy and Graham Conroy, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the name "Conroy", to strike out "and Graham Conroy, of Salem, Oreg., the sum of $2,490" and insert "of Salem, Oreg., the sum of $1,490, and to the regularly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of Graham Conroy, a minor, of Salem, Oreg., the sum of $500"; and in line 11, after the word "their", to strike out "claim" and insert "respective claims", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to E. P. Conroy, of Salem, Oreg., the sum of $1,490, and to the regularly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of Graham Conroy, a minor, of Salem, Oreg., the sum of $500, in full satisfaction of their respective claims against the United States for damages for personal injuries suffered on September 8, 1935, at the intersection of Freemont Street and Thirty-third Avenue northeast, Portland, Oreg., when the automobile in which said E. P. Conroy and Graham Conroy were riding was struck by a Government ambulance, U. S. CCC, no. 7538, operated by L. C. Skinner, CC 9–164255, an employee of the Civilian Conservation Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar is now completed.

CROP INSURANCE

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1397) to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—LETTER OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am about to discuss, for approximately 25 minutes, the recent letter written by Chief Justice Hughes to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]; and I shall now make a request which I think I have never heretofore made. In order that what I have to say may be said consecutively, I ask Senators not to interrupt until I shall have finished, when I shall be glad to answer, if I can, any questions in regard to the remarks I am about to make.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a point of order. I request that the Chair suggest to the occupants of the galleries that their conversation, no doubt unintentionally, is annoying to Senators on the floor who are trying to address the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to amend the suggestion by including those on the floor who are indulging in conversation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken on both sides. The Chair may state to the visitors in the galleries that they are guests of the United States Senate and that they must preserve order. They must understand that talking in the galleries, although the conversation is not particularly audible, does annoy those on the floor who are trying to conduct business. On a previous occasion the doorkeepers have been requested by the present occupant of the chair to preserve order in the galleries, and the Chair stated that if order was not preserved the galleries would be cleared. That statement still stands so far as the present occupant of the chair is concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have read Mr. Chief Justice Hughes' letter to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], published in the papers March 23, 1937, which letter I assume is the reply of the Court to the President's Supreme Court proposal made several weeks ago. Why the letter was addressed to the Senator from Montana, a leading opponent of the President's plan, rather than to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who had so cordially invited the members of the Court to testify, the learned Chief Justice does not disclose.

In his letter the learned Chief Justice shows that during the last 6 years the Court has had before it between 1,000 and 1,100 cases each year, and has disposed of most of these cases each year, there remaining a little more than 100 cases on the docket undisposed of at the end of the year.

Taking the year 1935 as an example, there was a total of 1,092 cases, 990 disposed of and 102 remaining on the docket. Of these, 4 were cases of original jurisdiction, 269 of appellate jurisdiction, and 803 were petitions for certiorari, which, as we all know, is a form of appeal to the Supreme Court. There were 187 written opinions in the appellate cases, 72 opinions by the Court in certiorari cases, and 731, or nearly three-fourths of all the cases appealed to the Court, were certiorari cases in which there was no hearing at all. It will thus be seen that the Supreme Court hears about 270 cases, all told, during the year, and dismisses about 731 certiorari cases without a hearing.

As to how the records of these 731 dismissed cases are examined or passed upon or decided is not disclosed, though, of course, the learned Chief Justice knows exactly what the method of disposition is.

In his letter he gives no information whatsoever concerning the method of disposition of these cases. The process is still as much of a mystery as it has always been. The President does not know the method. The Congress does not know the method. The lawyers do not know the method. The Court only knows the method, and does not disclose it.

THE PRESIDENT'S CHALLENGE

The President's challenge was as to the seven-hundred-odd cases dismissed yearly. He was very specific in the challenge. I quote him:

> Even at the present time the Supreme Court is laboring under a heavy burden. Its difficulties in this respect were superficially lightened some years ago by authorizing the Court, in its discretion, to refuse to hear appeals in many classes of cases. This discretion was so freely exercised that in the last fiscal year, although 867 petitions for review were presented to the Supreme Court, it declined to hear 717 cases. If petitions in behalf of the Government are excluded, it appears that the Court permitted private litigants to prosecute appeals in only 108 cases out of 803 applications. Many of the refusals were doubtless warranted. But can it be said that full justice is achieved when a court is forced by the sheer necessity of keeping up with its business to decline, without even an explanation, to hear 87 percent of the cases presented to it by private litigants? It seems clear, therefore, that the necessity of relieving present congestion extends to the enlargement of the capacity of all the Federal courts.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator not to interrupt me at this time, but I will yield to him as soon as I conclude.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the Senator to express some curiosity to know why the letter of the Chief Justice was written to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator immediately on the conclusion of my remarks.

In his statement it is seen that the President makes the issue perfectly plain. It is that the Court does not and apparently cannot give about 87 percent of the certiorari cases the attention that such cases are entitled to receive; that 87 percent of the cases presented by private litigants by petitions for certiorari are denied without even an explanation. What examination is accorded these cases nowhere appears. Who actually passes on them is not disclosed. The President thought this was not right, and I believe the fair-thinking people of America agree that it is not right.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S CHALLENGE

In the hearing before the Judiciary Committee, Attorney General Cummings said on this subject:

> Let us look at the actual operation of this system during the 1935 term. The Judges during that year were called upon to decide appeals and original proceedings in which the briefs totaled 15,862 pages and the records 35,833 pages, or 51,695 pages in all. In addition, there were 869 petitions for writs of certiorari. These involved 53,868 pages of briefs and 290,364 pages of record, a total of 344,232 pages.

It will thus be seen that the records and briefs in the certiorari cases are nearly six times longer than the records and briefs in the regular appellate cases. The regular appellate cases show for themselves. They are largely found in 3 volumes of official reports; 170 opinions.

From these facts it is perfectly clear that the Court has little time to give to certiorari cases, although in number they far more than double the regular appellate cases, and in records and briefs are nearly six times longer than the regular appellate cases. It was upon these facts, and upon this situation regarding certiorari cases, that the President issued his challenge.

THE HUGHES LETTER

Does the Hughes letter meet that challenge? Mr. President, I submit that it does not. The letter purports to be the reply of the Court to the President's challenge. No one except the members of the Court knows exactly how these certiorari cases are considered. Their proper disposition being challenged by the President of the United States, and the Court deeming it proper to make reply thereto, why did not the learned Chief Justice give the exact method of the Court in dealing with these cases? It was within his knowledge, and, therefore, if he had desired to do so, he could have disclosed the system or the method of the Court in disposing of these cases. For some reason he does not choose to do so.

EXCUSES

Instead of advising the President and the Congress and the country how the Court disposed of these cases, his letter is filled with excuses. Some of the more important of these excuses of the learned Chief Justice are as follows:

First. The act of Congress of 1925 vastly limited the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Second. The Supreme Court's own rules further permitted the Court to dismiss many certiorari cases.

Third. The granting of certiorari was a matter of judicial discretion and not of right.

Fourth. And, remarkable to tell, the learned Chief Justice stated that in the opinion of the Court the litigants in these cases had no interest which the Court should consider. Over 800 cases were brought by private litigants, by their own paid attorneys, but they presented no interest which the Supreme Court should consider!

Fifth. He admitted that the facts were not all examined and that the briefs were not all examined, because the records contained facts that were not necessary for the Court in its discretion to examine, notwithstanding the fact that the Constitution gives the Court appellate jurisdiction "both as to law and fact"!

Sixth. That by simply reading the applications—

Think of it, those of you who are lawyers in this body—

That by simply reading the applications, which showed no ground for such application, the Court dismissed the cases without going further!

Seventh. That the questions involved were of no immediate concern to the parties to the suit!

The cases were dismissed because they were of no immediate concern to the parties to the suit!

Eighth. That an increase of members of the Court would not aid the Court in considering these cases, as the Court acts as a unit.

Ninth. The straw-man excuse.

He sets up a straw man, to which I will refer later.

Tenth. That out of an abundance of precaution the Court had adopted a rule under which a minority sometimes of two or three, and always a minority of four members of the Court could grant the petition for certiorari.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall have to ask the Senator to wait.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator is giving a false impression by——

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am not. [Laughter.]

Eleventh. That the only purpose of the Court in having certiorari cases heard was to harmonize and make consistent with one another Federal decisions!

Twelfth. The learned Chief Justice further states that questions on certiorari are questions of law only and also controversies on contracts and documents are cause of concern only to the immediate parties, and that parties to the litigation have no right to be heard in certiorari cases. These are excuses that the learned Chief Justice offers for dismissing some 87 percent of the certiorari cases.

It is true that the learned Chief Justice does say: "The Court is fully abreast of its work. * * * There is no congestion of cases upon our calendar." But, Mr. President, this is only true because the Court does not try some 700 certiorari cases which should be examined, heard, and tried by the Court. Three-fourth of the cases coming before the Court are dismissed without proper examination and consideration.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that with all these excuses, with all these purported explanations which do not explain, the learned Chief Justice does not say what the Court's method of procedure is in disposing of these certiorari cases. Not a word.

The secret is still with the Court. The plan of action is still in the breast of the Court. It is seemingly carefully guarded from the rude gaze of the President and of the Congress and of the public. Why this secrecy in a court of justice? Why cannot the facts be given? Why cannot the method of dealing with dismissed certiorari cases be frankly imparted to the public?

THE COURT'S OWN RULES

I here quote the rules of the Court as stated by the learned Chief Justice in his letter:

A review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but of sound judicial discretion and will be granted only where there are special and important reasons therefor. The following, while neither controlling nor fully measuring the Court's discretion, indicate the character of reasons which will be considered:

(a) Where a State court has decided a Federal question of substance not theretofore determined by this Court, or has decided it in a way probably not in accord with applicable decisions of this Court.

(b) Where a circuit court of appeals has rendered a decision in conflict with the decision of another circuit court of appeals on the same matter, or has decided an important question of local law in a way probably in conflict with the applicable local decisions, or has decided an important question of general law in a way probably untenable or in conflict with the weight of authority, or has decided an important question of Federal law which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or has decided a Federal question in a way probably in conflict with applicable decisions of this Court, or has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings, or so far sanctioned such a departure by a lower court, as to call for an exercise of this Court's power of supervision.

Under these rules, Mr. President, we learn that on applications for writs of certiorari in the Supreme Court the Court assumes that the litigants themselves have no interest and, therefore, their rights are not given any consideration by the Court. Keep in mind that the learned Chief Justice says that the questions they decide in certiorari cases are only questions of law. If the application for certiorari arises out of a decision of the State court, the petition must show two things: That the question is of substance and has not been hitherto determined by the Supreme Court, or that it was decided in a way not in accord with the applicable decisions of the Supreme Court.

In other words, Mr. President, whether the application is granted or not does not depend upon the litigant's rights, but only upon the desire of the Court to harmonize Federal court opinions generally and to keep Federal court decisions generally consistent with one another.

If it is a case arising from the circuit court of appeals, the litigant can only hope that somewhere in his case the Supreme Court will find something out of line in the decision of the court below with a decision of the Supreme Court.

The same course is practically true where the appeal is from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

With these rules, Mr. President, the astonishing thing to me is that the Supreme Court considers even 13 percent of the certiorari cases, and the most remarkable thing about this letter is that apparently the learned Chief Justice feels injured and feels that his Court is injured when applicants for certiorari apply to his Court for relief in matters of interest only to themselves!

LITIGANTS IN CERTIORARI CASES HAVE NO RIGHT IN THE SUPREME COURT

The learned Chief Justice, on this subject and as an additional excuse for dismissing so many of these certiorari cases, said:

Where the parties have been fully heard in the courts below * * * they have no right to burden the Supreme Court with the dispute which interests no one but themselves.

And again:

This is also true of controversies over contracts and documents of all sorts which involve only questions of concern to the immediate parties.

Mr. President, I think these astounding statements of the Chief Justice will indeed furnish information to lawyers and litigants throughout the Nation. Some 800 litigants and some 800 or more lawyers each year file application in the Supreme Court for writs of certiorari. These lawyers and litigants are not concerned with the lack of harmony in the decisions of the various Federal courts. The lawyers are only concerned with what they deem to be the rights of their clients. It is private litigation, not public litigation, that they have been employed to prosecute.

THE EXPENSE

Then, too, Mr. President, certiorari litigation in the Supreme Court is extremely expensive. The litigants have to pay for the printing of their briefs. They have to pay for the printing of the records. They frequently have to pay the expenses of their lawyers going to Washington, perhaps from distant States. They have to pay large lawyers' fees. Is it possible that these litigants would go to this vast expense if they knew that the Court was not going to consider their rights in the litigation at all? I am sure they would not do so, yet we have here the statement of the learned Chief Justice of the Court that litigants have no right to burden his Court with disputes that interest no one but themselves, and that the only way they can have the cases looked into at all is when they can show that there has been some inconsistency in the various Federal court decisions.

In other words, the purpose of certiorari cases, according to the letter of the learned Chief Justice, is not to enable the Court to settle questions in dispute between litigants in his Court, but such applications are only made and allowed by the Supreme Court so that it can adjust its decisions with one another and adjust its decisions with those of the lower Federal courts and adjust lower Federal court decisions with one another.

Mr. President, in my judgment this is the most remarkable judicial expression that ever fell from the lips of any Supreme Court Justice, namely, that a litigant in his Court has no right to burden the Court with a dispute that interests no one but the litigant!

AN ASSISTANT COURT

Mr. President, in view of this remarkable letter of the learned Chief Justice; in view of the great diversity of opinion among the Supreme Court Judges themselves, so frequently dissenting with one another as to what the law is and what the Constitution means; the Court's decisions so often depending upon which side has the majority of one; in view of the great diversity of Federal judicial opinion in circuit courts of appeal and in district courts, I am going to suggest to the Congress that, instead of the system of the Supreme Court attempting to harmonize Federal court opinions in certiorari cases, at the expense of private litigants and when the Supreme Court will not consider their rights, the Congress set up an assistant court, the duty of which will be to adjust, harmonize, synchronize, stabilize, and make consistent Federal court decisions. In view of the fact that we sometimes find district judges overruling circuit courts of appeal and even overruling Supreme Court decisions, as in the Ashwander case, in their zeal to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional, an inferior court with such jurisdiction would be of great value. I do not think the entire cost and burden should be visited upon some 800 litigants a year in certiorari cases. Nor do I think, with the existence of so great a diversity of opinion among members of the Court as to what the law is and what the Constitution means, that the Supreme Court is suited for the task of settling these delicate niceties of the law and subtle intricacies of the Constitution as between the courts.

INCREASING RESPECT FOR MINORITY OPINIONS

I call further attention to this marvelous letter.

Listen to this, Senators:

Mr. President, in the learned Chief Justice's attempt to meet the challenge of the President and of the Attorney General that the enormous number of certiorari cases dismissed have not and do not receive proper consideration by the Court, he gives many excuses. He confesses much and avoids much, and among these excuses he undertakes to show to what length the majority goes to uphold the minority in granting petitions for certiorari. This liberal rule, according to the learned Chief Justice—and I am quoting from his letter, which I am going to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, so that there cannot be any confounding of it—

Applies to the grant or refusal of petitions for certiorari, which are granted if four Justices think they should be. A vote by a majority is not required in such cases. Even if two or three of the Justices are strongly of the opinion that certiorari should be allowed, frequently the other Justices will acquiesce in their view, but the petition is always granted if four so vote.

He gives that as a liberal rule. Evidently this statement is made by the learned Chief Justice to show the Court's liberal way of dissolving any doubts in favor of the applicant. He evidently lays great stress on this method of dealing with the subject. How considerate in this matter is the majority toward the minority!

But, Mr. President, this is like another rule of the Court, and that rule is the one dealing with cases where it is sought to invalidate acts of Congress. In the celebrated case, the Butler case, known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act decision, the Court said:

When such a contention comes—

That is, when the validity of an act of Congress is attacked—

here we naturally require a showing that by no reasonable possibility can the challenged legislation fall within the wide range of discretion permitted to the Congress.

Having stated this rule that an act will not be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court if there is a reasonable possibility that it is constitutional, the Court then immediately violates that rule!

Ah, Mr. President, how much force is given the opinions of the minority in these certiorari cases? The learned Chief Justice would have us believe that the minority virtually controls the granting or refusal to grant certiorari petitions.

But, Mr. President, when it comes to the Supreme Court striking down a solemn act of Congress, they give the opinion of the minority not one iota of force. A minority, according to the learned Chief Justice, may raise a doubt as to the granting of a certiorari petition, and this doubt may bring about its granting; but when it comes to declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional, the minority opinion of two of their own judges, or three of their own judges, or even four of their own judges, raises not a "reasonable possibility" of the act of Congress being good.

It is a poor rule that does not work both ways.

In certiorari cases the learned Chief Justice says that the Court is controlled by minority views, but when it comes to striking down acts of Congress minority views have no influence whatsoever, and that, too, Mr. President, even though the minority views are upheld by a majority of the House of Representatives and a majority of the Senate and the President of the United States, every one of whom took the same oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States as that taken by the majority of the Court.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not interrupt right now, and that he will defer his question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. The letter of the learned Chief Justice is indeed enlightening. Here we find the nine most learned judges in all the world at one moment often allowing the opinion of two or three minority Justices to cause the hearing of a certiorari case, and, says the learned Justice, "Whenever a majority of four Judges say so it is made obligatory that the case shall be heard", in the very next moment applying the same sort of rule and holding that the dissent of two of their own Judges or three of their own Judges, or even four of their own Judges, does not even raise a "reasonable possibility" that the act is constitutional.

In these circumstances, Mr. President, who can wonder that men say all over this country that the Judges of our Supreme Court are not infallible?

THE STRAW MAN

I told the Senate I was going to tell them about the straw man set up in this letter. Again in confession and in avoidance, and in excuse for the Court's method of dealing with these certiorari cases, the learned Chief Justice says:

No single court of last resort, whatever the number of judges, could dispose of all the cases which arise in this vast country, and which litigants would seek to bring up if the right of appeal were unrestricted. Hosts of litigants will take appeals so long as there is a tribunal accessible. In protracted litigation the advantage is with those who command the long purse. Unmeritorious appeals cause intolerable delays. Such appeals clog the calendar and get in the way of those that have merit.

Thus, Mr. President, the learned Chief Justice sets up a straw man and knocks him down in an effort to defend the Court's method of dealing with the certiorari cases, whatever that method may be, and which method he carefully avoids disclosing.

The President, in his message, did not declare in favor of unrestricted appeals to the Supreme Court. There is not a suggestion of such a recommendation. The Attorney General did not declare for an unrestricted appeal to the Supreme Court. So far as I know, no one has declared for unrestricted appeals to the Supreme Court. The President's plea was for a proper disposition of certiorari cases to be made by the Supreme Court. The learned Chief Justice does not say a word as to how the Court now disposes of its certiorari cases, but by this straw man he seeks to make it appear that the President favored the scheme of unrestricted appeals.

I submit that the foregoing statement of the Chief Justice is not an answer at all to the President's contention, namely that 108 cases out of 803 applications in certiorari cases were actually heard by the Court in a judicial way.

How does the Court pass on these certiorari cases?

METHOD OF DISPOSING OF CERTIORARI CASES

Mr. President, the challenge of the President in his message went specifically to the method of the Supreme Court in passing upon petitions for certiorari. As has been seen, the letter of the Chief Justice does not disclose the Court's method of disposing of such cases. It is true that Mr. Justice Hughes does say in his letter:

I should add that petitions for certiorari are not apportioned among the Justices.

He further states that "all the Justices participate in the decision."

Mr. President, this much information is not very enlightening. It is interesting, but it does not inform us how the certiorari cases are disposed of by the Court.

Does the learned Chief Justice mean that these 803 cases are each and every one passed to each and every one of the Justices and they examine the law and the facts, if there are facts to be considered, and then the case is brought up in conference and decided?

Or, does the learned Chief Justice mean that some law clerk examines the record and briefs and makes report to the full bench either in writing or verbally, and the Court passes on the particular case in that way?

The learned Chief Justice knows the answer. The learned Chief Justice is familiar with the method by which these cases are decided. Why not take the public into his confidence? It was concerning the 731 cases per year dismissed by the Court without opinion that President Roosevelt was solicitous, but the learned Chief Justice does not answer the question.

The President's idea is, and it is my contention also, that if the law allows a litigant to come to the Supreme Court by petition for certiorari, that litigant has the right to have his case heard in open court like other cases are heard, and after argument he should have a decision upon the merits of his case. Otherwise, what is the use of certiorari?

It is fair to say that it would seem to be physically impossible for each one of the nine Judges to read some 800 pages of applications, 53,000 pages of briefs, and 290,000 pages of record in these cases and then pass on them.

It is almost as impossible to conceive how the several law clerks of the Court, and there are very few, could read 800 applications, 53,000 pages of briefs, and 290,000 pages of record and submit their conclusions to the Court.

Why the mystery? Why the failure to disclose facts that are within the knowledge only of the members of the Court? Why are not the President and the Congress and the lawyers of the Court and the litigants of the country and the people of the country entitled to know how this branch of the Government's business is transacted?

There are emblazoned on the magnificent and palatial Supreme Court Building, of which we are all so proud, the words:

Equal justice under law.

Is it possible that anyone can believe that equal justice under the law can be obtained for these litigants under the explanation set out by the learned Chief Justice? I do not think anyone would contend that equal justice is meted out to these litigants, and it cannot be unless these records and briefs are examined by the members of the Court.

NO SECRECY IN DISPOSING OF THE COURT'S BUSINESS

Mr. President, the rules of the Court in disposing of petitions for certiorari are like the old rule of the Senate by which nominations to office were considered in secret session by the Senate. They are un-American. Under the old secret proceedings of the Senate a man nominated for office and rejected did not know why he was rejected, and it gave rise to endless trouble and was absolutely unfair to the nominee. It took a long time, but the Senate finally freed itself from these secret sessions and now all nominations are considered in public, and that is as it should be.

Certiorari cases should be considered like other cases. Star-chamber proceedings have been done away with in every enlightened country. Secrecy of method in presenting facts is un-American and antiquated and should be done away with.

The Constitution provides for only one Supreme Court, and if the Court is not large enough to examine and pass upon the cases that come to it under the severely limited restrictions of its jurisdiction already made by the Congress, then we should add enough members to do the work in a proper, fair, just, and impartial manner.

I say this notwithstanding that in the letter of the learned Chief Justice he emphasizes—

That litigants have no right to burden the Supreme Court with a dispute which interests no one but themselves—

And that they have no right to come to the Supreme Court—with controversies over contracts and documents of all sorts which involve only questions of concern to the immediate parties.

I repeat, Mr. President, these litigants have a right to go before the Supreme Court by way of certiorari. They have a right to have their interests in the suit passed upon after a careful examination of their cases as shown by the record, and after a careful examination of the briefs of counsel.

THE CONSTITUTION

I know it is antiquated to talk about the Constitution, but I am going to refer to the Constitution just for a moment in connection with this subject and at this point. Certiorari is just another form of appeal. It is one of three methods of appeal. When law cases are to be reviewed one method is pursued; when equity cases are to be reviewed another method is pursued; and so the remainder of the cases are carried, or attempted to be carried, to the Supreme Court by certiorari.

The Constitution thus provides:

In all other cases before-mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact.

The learned Chief Justice's letter shows that in the consideration of appeals by certiorari the Court does not consider any great portion of the facts. All that he claims they consider is sufficient facts to pass on the questions of law. This is not in accordance with the spirit or letter or intent of the Constitution. Perhaps he had such questions of the Constitution in mind when he is alleged to have said long ago:

We have a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is.

The Constitution is what the judges say it is! I digress long enough to say that the Constitution requires that the facts as well as the law involved in cases appealed by litigants shall be examined by the Court, and yet the Court overrules the Constitution or holds that it is not important and disregards it.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS

The learned Chief Justice makes an argument about additional members of the Supreme Court not expediting business, which argument I cannot understand. If his argument is correct, then we should have but one member of the Supreme Court. If 9 can act as expeditiously and as thoroughly as 15, then surely 5 could act as thoroughly and as expeditiously as 9. Just why the ideal number should be fixed at nine by the Chief Justice is difficult to see. If the number of Judges has nothing to do with the proper hearing and decision of cases and nothing to do with the expediting of the business of the Court, a Court of 3 members would be just as serviceable as one of 9 or 15.

I do not agree with the Chief Justice. I believe the President is right. I believe if there were 15 Justices, that the 87 percent of certiorari cases which now seem even under the Chief Justice's explanation to receive short shrift at the hands of the Court would receive greater consideration and more accurate decisions.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. President, in thus analyzing the letter of the Chief Justice and his arguments, I very much hope that neither the Chief Justice nor any member of the present Court will think I am criticizing the Chief Justice or the Court personally. As I have said, I know each member of the Court and respect each member very highly. When Chief Justice Hughes' name came before the Senate for confirmation for Chief Justice, I voted against him for reasons then stated to the Senate, but principally because of the Chief Justice's attitude toward the American Navy when he was Secretary of State. There was nothing personal in my action then, nor is there in my position at the present time. I think Chief Justice Hughes makes one of the most admirable presiding officers of the Court. He is always courteous and considerate. I admire him for his ability, learning, and courtesy, and have nothing but the kindliest feelings toward him. However, I am opposed to the method in which the Court deals with certiorari cases coming before it, whatever that system may be, and hence my criticism of his letter.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I hope the learned Chief Justice will write another letter, either to my good friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], or to my good friend the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the learned and splendid chairman of the Judiciary Committee, so that the committee and the Senate and the House may be informed of the exact practice of the Court in its examination of the records, their consideration, and their method of disposition of certiorari cases. It would be extremely pertinent for him to add whether the Court or any member of it reads the petition, the printed record, and the printed briefs in each case, or if only part thereof, what part, or if they read only the petitions themselves, and how many of the records are read and considered in their entirety. A statement of such facts would be highly beneficial to the Congress in disposing of the President's proposal, and highly beneficial to the lawyers and to the litigants of the country, and to the administration of justice generally.

Mr. President, in order that there may be no misunderstanding either of the letter of the learned Chief Justice or of my criticism, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his letter to the Senator from Montana be inserted at this point in my remarks and taken as a part of this address, so that the men and women of the country may read for themselves this letter—evidently an attempt to show the position of the Court in this controversy—and see what a remarkable document it really is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Mar. 23, 1937]

CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES' LETTER

(Text of Chief Justice Hughes' letter to Senator WHEELER expressing his opposition to the President's Court plan)

MY DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: In response to your inquiries, I have the honor to present the following statement with respect to the work of the Supreme Court:

1. The Supreme Court is fully abreast of its work. When we rose on March 15 (for the present recess) we had heard argument in cases in which certiorari had been granted only 4 weeks before—February 15.

During the present term, which began last October and which we call October term, 1936, we have heard argument on the merits of 150 cases (180 numbers), and we have 28 cases (30 numbers) awaiting argument. We shall be able to hear all these cases, and such others as may come up for argument, before our adjournment for the term. There is no congestion of cases upon our calendar.

GRATIFYING CONDITION

This gratifying condition has obtained for several years. We have been able for several terms to adjourn after disposing of all cases which are ready to be heard.

2. The cases on our docket are classified as original and appellate. Our original jurisdiction is defined by the Constitution, and embraces cases to which States are parties. There are not many of these. At the present time they number 13 and are in various stages of progress to submission for determination.

Our appellate jurisdiction covers those cases in which appeal is allowed by statute as a matter of right and cases which come to us on writs of certiorari.

The following is a comparative statement of the cases on the dockets for the six terms preceding the current term:

For terms 1930–32

	1930	1931	1932
Total cases on dockets	1,039	1,023	1,037
Disposed of during term	900	884	910
Cases remaining on dockets	139	139	127
Distribution of cases—cases disposed of:
Original cases	8	1	4
Appellate—on merits	326	282	257
Petitions for certiorari	566	601	649
Remaining on dockets:
Original cases	16	19	17
Appellate—on merits	76	60	56
Petitions for certiorari	47	60	54

For terms 1933–35

	1933	1934	1935
Total cases on dockets	1,132	1,040	1,092
Disposed of during term	1,029	931	990
Cases remaining on dockets	103	109	102
Distribution of cases—cases disposed of:
Original cases	4	5	4
Appellate—on merits	293	256	269
Petitions for certiorari	732	670	717
Remaining on dockets:
Original cases	15	13	12
Appellate—on merits	43	51	56
Petitions for certiorari	45	45	34

Further statistics for these terms and those for earlier terms are available if you desire them.

During the present term we have thus far disposed of 666 cases which include petitions for certiorari and cases which have been argued on the merits and already decided.

3. The statute relating to our appellate jurisdiction is the act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 936). That act limits to certain cases the appeals which come to the Supreme Court as a matter of right. Review in other cases is made to depend upon the allowance by the Supreme Court of a writ of certiorari.

Where the appeal purports to lie as a matter of right the rules of the Supreme Court (rule 12) require the appellant to submit a jurisdictional statement showing that the case falls within that class of appeals and that a substantial question is involved. We examine that statement and the supporting and opposing briefs and decide whether the Court has jurisdiction. As a result, many frivolous appeals are forthwith dismissed and the way is open for appeals which disclose substantial questions.

4. The act of 1925, limiting appeals as a matter of right and enlarging the provisions for review only through certiorari was most carefully considered by Congress. I call attention to the reports of the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session. That legislation was deemed to be essential to enable the Supreme Court to perform its proper function. No single court of last resort, whatever the number of judges, could dispose of all the cases which arise in this vast country and which litigants would seek to bring up if the right of appeal were unrestricted. Hosts of litigants will take appeals so long as there is a tribunal accessible. In protracted litigation, the advantage is with those who command a long purse. Unmeritorious appeals cause intolerable delays. Such appeals clog the calendar and get in the way of those that have merit.

PROCEDURE OUTLINED FOR COURT LITIGANTS

Under our Federal system, when litigants have had their cases heard in the court of first instance and the trier of the facts, jury or judge, as the case may require, has spoken and the case on the facts and law has been decided, and when the dissatisfied party has been accorded an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, the litigants so far as mere private interests are concerned, have had their day in court. If further review is to be had by the Supreme Court, it must be because of the public interest in the questions involved. That review, for example, should be for the purpose of resolving conflicts in judicial decisions between different circuit courts of appeals or between circuit court of appeals and State courts where the question is one of State law; or for the purpose of determining constitutional questions or settling the interpretation of statutes; or because of the importance of the questions of law that are involved. Review by the Supreme Court is thus in the interest of the law, its appropriate exposition and enforcement, not in the mere interest of the litigants.

It is obvious that if appeal as a matter of right is restricted to certain described cases, the question whether review should be allowed in other cases must necessarily be confided to some tribunal for determination, and, of course, with respect to review by the Supreme Court, that Court should decide.

5. Granting certiorari is not a matter of favor but of sound judicial discretion. It is not the importance of the parties or the amount of money involved that is in any sense controlling. The action of the court is governed by its rules, from which I quote the following (rule 38, par. 5):

WRIT OF CERTIORARI ACTION IS EXPLAINED

"6. A review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right but of sound judicial discretion, and will be granted only where there are special and important reasons therefor. The following, while neither controlling or fully measuring the Court's discretion, indicate the character of reasons which will be considered:

"(a) Where a State court has decided a Federal question of substance not theretofore determined by this Court, or has decided it in a way probably not in accord with applicable decisions of this Court.

"(b) Where a circuit court of appeals has rendered a decision in conflict with the decision of another circuit court of appeals on the same matter, or has decided an important question of local law in a way probably in conflict with applicable local decisions, or has decided an important question of general law in a way probably untenable or in conflict with the weight of authority, or has decided an important question of Federal law which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or has decided a Federal question in a way probably in conflict with applicable decisions of this Court, or has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings, or so far sanctioned such a departure by a lower court, as to call for an exercise of this Court's power of supervision.

WORK OF PASSING ON WRIT IS CALLED LABORIOUS

"(c) Where the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has decided a question of general importance, or a question of substance relating to the construction or application of the Constitution or a treaty or statute of the United States which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or where that court has not given proper effect to an applicable decision of this Court."

These rules are impartially applied, as it is most important that they should be.

I should add that petitions for certiorari are not apportioned among the Justices. In all matters before the Court, except in the mere routine of administration, all the Justices—unless for some reason a Justice is disqualified or unable to act in a particular case—participate in the decision. This applies to the grant or refusal of petitions for certiorari, which are granted if four Justices think they should be. A vote by a majority is not required in such cases. Even if two or three of the Justices are strongly of the opinion that certiorari should be allowed, frequently the other Justices will acquiesce in their view, but the petition is always granted if four so vote.

The work of passing upon these applications of certiorari is laborious, but the Court is able to perform it adequately. Observations have been made as to the vast number of pages of records and briefs that are submitted in the course of a term. The total is imposing, but the suggested conclusion is hasty and rests on an illusory basis. Records are replete with testimony and evidence of facts. But the questions on certiorari are questions of law. So many cases turn on the facts, principles of law not being in controversy. It is only when the facts are so interwoven with the questions of law which we should review that the evidence must be examined and then only to the extent that it is necessary to decide the questions of law.

MANY OF APPLICATIONS HELD WITHOUT MERIT

This at once disposes of a vast number of factual controversies where the parties have been fully heard in the courts below and have no right to burden the Supreme Court with the dispute which interests no one but themselves. This is also true of controversies over contracts and documents of all sorts which involve only questions of concern to the immediate parties. The applicant for certiorari is required to state in his petition the grounds for his application and in a host of cases that disclosure itself disposes of his request. So that the number of pages of records and briefs afford no satisfactory criterion of the actual work involved. It must also be remembered that Justices who have been dealing with such matters for years have the aid of a long and varied experience in separating the chaff from the wheat.

I think that it is safe to say that about 60 percent of the applications for certiorari are wholly without merit and ought never to have been made. There are probably about 20 percent or so in addition which have a fair degree of plausibility, but which fail to survive a critical examination. The remainder, falling short, I believe, of 20 percent, show substantial grounds and are granted. I think that is the view of the members of the Court that if any error is made in dealing with these applications it is on the side of liberality.

8. An increase in the number of Justices of the Supreme Court, apart from any question of policy, which I do not discuss, would not promote the efficiency of the Court. It is believed that it would impair that efficiency so long as the Court acts as a unit. There would be more Judges to hear, more Judges to confer, more Judges to discuss, more Judges to be convinced and to decide. The present number of Judges is thought to be large enough so far as the present adequate and efficient conduct of the work of the Court is concerned. As I have said, I do not speak of any other consideration in view of the appropriate attitude of the Court in relation to question of policy.

LARGER COURT PLAN CALLED IMPRACTICABLE

I understand that it has been suggested that with more Justices the Court could hear cases in divisions. It is believed that such a plan would be impracticable. A large proportion of the cases we hear are important, and a decision by a part of the Court would be unsatisfactory.

I may also call attention to the provision of article III, section 1, of the Constitution that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested "in the Supreme Court" and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Constitution does not appear to authorize two or more Supreme Courts or two or more parts of a Supreme Court functioning in effect as separate courts.

On account of the shortness of time I have not been able to consult with the members of the Court generally with respect to the foregoing statement, but I am confident that it is in accord with the views of the Justices. I should say, however, that I have been able to consult with Mr. Justice Van Devanter and Mr. Justice Brandeis, and I am at liberty to say that the statement is approved by them.

I have the honor to remain,
Respectfully yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Chief Justice of the United States.

CONTROL OF INSECT PESTS OR PLANT DISEASES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER (for Mr. GILLETTE) submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 75) making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be made immediately available and remain available until expended; and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be necessary to replenish the fund to its original amount at the beginning of each fiscal year: Provided, That such appropriations shall"; and the House agree to the same.

B. K. WHEELER,
G. M. GILLETTE,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MARVIN JONES,
W. L. NELSON,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with reference to what has been said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

First of all, it should be borne in mind that, although the members of the Supreme Court may have differed on a great many things, they are unanimous with reference to the letter of the Chief Justice; at least, that is my understanding of the matter. It should also be borne in mind that not only did Chief Justice Hughes write the letter but it was approved in every detail by one of the greatest liberals, and, in my judgment, one of the greatest living Americans today, Mr. Justice Brandeis. In almost every speech that has been made by the administration forces criticizing the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Stone, Mr. Justice Cardozo, and even Chief Justice Hughes have been held up as the men upon the Supreme Court who were pure and whose opinions should have been followed by the majority of the Court.

I am one of those who have believed that the interpretation placed upon the Constitution by the minority of the Supreme Court was the correct one; but now, in this instance, when we find that the Court is unanimous, and the minority members agree with the majority members, they are immediately condemned because of that fact.

Let us analyze some of the statements which have been made by the Senator from Tennessee with reference to certiorari. It is not simply the members of this Court who have denied petitions for certiorari. Why does Chief Justice Hughes say they should be denied? Let us be fair about the matter.

I appreciate that when a lawyer tries a lawsuit and loses it, the easy thing to do, the pleasant thing to do, is, first, if the case was tried by a judge, to condemn the judge and say he was wrong; if it was tried by a jury, to condemn the jury and say the jury was wrong. I am not astonished that the present Attorney General of the United States should assume the attitude of some pettifogging lawyer when he condemns the Supreme Court because he loses cases before it. Who ever heard of an Attorney General of the United States standing before the Supreme Court of the United States, as the present Attorney General stood before it in the gold cases, and making a political argument to that Court or any other court? I should like to ask the Members of this body who knew and loved and who revere the memory of my late colleague, Senator Walsh, of Montana—a great lawyer, a great statesman, and a great liberal—whether they suppose he ever would have stultified himself by going before the Supreme Court of the United States and making a cheap political argument to that Court?

The Senator from Tennessee speaks about certiorari. Let us see. As a matter of fact, I have had some petitions for certiorari taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. I am amazed to hear the Senator condemn the Court because they have not granted all the petitions for certiorari, or a great portion of them. Let me call attention to one particular instance.

The Senator speaks about clients having to pay the expenses of their attorneys for coming to Washington and presenting their applications for certiorari to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Sometimes, I said; not always.

Mr. WHEELER. They do not do it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Not always; I so stated.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well; but I say the Senator is mistaken. Attorneys come here and present arguments only when the Court takes jurisdiction.

Some years ago, when I began to practice law in Montana, the first case I ever had that came to the Supreme Court of the United States was one that I tried against the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining Co. in behalf of a man who was injured in the mine. We received in the lower court a verdict of $12,000, as I recall. Then the judge granted a verdict non obstante veredicto in favor of the defendant. We appealed the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and the circuit court of appeals decided in our favor and ordered the district court to enter judgment for $12,000 against the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining Co.

The Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining Co. then applied to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari. My client had no money, but I very foolishly came to Washington, thinking I was going to have to appear before the Supreme Court of the United States. I reached here and went into the courtroom, and the Court denied the petition for certiorari, and I did not even have an opportunity to appear before the Court. That is what takes place in such cases.

Of course, a man may go out and appeal to the mob, if he wishes to do so, and say that the Supreme Court has denied eight-hundred-and-some-odd applications; but it is not correct, nor is it the honest thing to do, in my judgment, for a Member of the United States Senate to appeal to the prejudices of the masses of the people and say that these applications for certiorari are wrongfully denied.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not mean that statement to apply to me, because I did not make any such statement.

Mr. WHEELER. No; but every inference from what was said by the Senator was to that effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Wait a moment. I did not interrupt the Senator from Tennessee. I shall be glad to have the Senator answer me later.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not wish to interfere with the continuity of his remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. I would rather not yield at this time.

Of course it is possible to appeal to the mob, and make statements from which the inference will be drawn that the Supreme Court of the United States is not doing its duty. I submit, however, that if men have no respect for Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, if they have no respect for his integrity or his honesty, or anything else—and I have; I say he is one of the most efficient and one of the ablest men who ever sat upon the Supreme Court of the United States of America, and in my opinion he is one of the best Americans in this country today—I submit that if men do not believe in him, they must believe in Mr. Justice Brandeis if they are liberals and progressives, because no man has ever sat upon the Supreme Bench who has been a greater friend of the masses of the people of the country and who has gone along with the present President of the United States on New Deal legislation more than has Mr. Justice Brandeis. Is he to be condemned, is he to be ridiculed, is he to be laughed at because he now says that what Mr. Justice Hughes states in this letter is correct? Is that the reward to be received by men who have been fighting the battles of the liberal cause all these years, because now they dare to disagree with the present Attorney General and to correct the misinformation which he has furnished to the President of the United States?

It is not necessary for us to take Mr. Justice Hughes' opinion with reference to the matter. We may take the opinion of the Solicitor General, Mr. Stanley Reed, who is in the Department of Justice, and see what he says about certiorari. He agrees with Mr. Justice Brandeis, and he agrees with Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, and he agrees with the whole Court, because in his report to the Congress of the United States he finds no fault with the handling of these cases by the Supreme Court of the United States.

What does Chief Justice Hughes say? The typical case is the case I cited, about the blind man who was burned in a blast in the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mine. He had no money; he was "broke." He was denied any relief. There was a trial in a lower court. The case was taken to the circuit court of appeals and then to the Supreme Court of the United States, because the defendants had the money, and they tied up the $12,000 awarded by the jury for 2 or 3 years, pending action on a writ of certiorari, which any lawyer of any intelligence must have known could not have been granted by the Supreme Court of the United States under the various decisions.

Of course, many petitions for certiorari are filed with the Supreme Court of the United States, but they are filed by the great corporations that desire to delay and delay and delay the right of the private litigant, the poor man, to get the money which is due him as a result of a trial before a jury in the lower court.

Chief Justice Hughes pointed out in his letter that it is the men with the long purses who seek certiorari. They get a trial in the lower court, they have a trial by jury before a district judge, and then they have a right to go to the circuit court of appeals, and, as the Chief Justice points out, if every man who has a long purse is permitted to go to the Supreme Court of the United States, if we say that under the Constitution he has a right to go there, it will take more than 15 judges, it will take more than one Supreme Court, as established by the Constitution, to handle all of the private litigation that occurs. It is not generally the poor man who goes to the Supreme Court and asks for certiorari. It is the rich corporations, it is the "economic royalists", who go to the Supreme Court with petitions for certiorari, not the poor, lowly man who is working on the railroad, who is working in the mine, who may have been burned by gas or injured by electricity, who may be injured upon the railroad tracks, nor is it his widow or his orphans, if he should be killed; they do not petition the Supreme Court of the United States for certiorari. Generally they take their medicine in a lower court. They usually do not have sufficient money to appeal to the circuit court of appeals, to say nothing of the Supreme Court of the United States. They are lucky to have money enough to employ lawyers to go before a Federal district court or a State court, and if they are defeated there, that is the end of their litigation.

Who are the poor, unfortunate litigants about whom there is so much weeping, the poor unfortunate people who are denied their rights? Who are they? They are the "economic royalists", the great corporations, with their "defeatist" lawyers, who seek to get before the Supreme Court on writs of certiorari. They do not mind a little extra expense. They are not bothered by paying for a few briefs. They are looking for time, because time always plays an important part on their side. Let us be fair with the Supreme Court with reference to this matter.

I wish to call attention to something Chief Justice Hughes said. The Senator from Tennessee has made much of it. The Senator says, "Think of it! It takes only four members of the Supreme Court to pass upon the question of whether or not certiorari shall be granted." Would the Senator like to have a majority of the Court required to pass upon the question? Would he like to have the full Court required to do so?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me a question. If he had heard what I said, he would know that I approved that rule of the Court very strongly. What I disapproved was the Court following a different rule in declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to have that explanation from the Senator, because when a petition for a writ of certiorari is presented to the Court, what is it? It is nothing more than a petition asking the Court if it will finally pass upon the merits of the case. In ruling on the petition the Court is not passing upon the merits of the case; it is merely saying whether or not it is a case which should even be taken up for consideration by the Court under the acts of the Congress, as was pointed out, and under the practice well known by every lawyer who has had any experience in practicing before the Supreme Court.

Let me call attention to the fact that another person of high standing has said the same thing Chief Justice Hughes said about increasing the number of the Justices on the Supreme Court, and about the efficiency of the Court. Does the Senator from Tennessee know who that was? One man who made that statement is the Honorable James M. Landis. He so stated in a book which he wrote in connection with Mr. Felix Frankfurter, one of the close advisers of the President of the United States, and a student of the Supreme Court. Perhaps there is no more thorough student of the Supreme Court in this country than is Felix Frankfurter. Both these distinguished gentlemen in that book said that increasing the number on the Court would tend to lessen the efficiency of the Court.

Again, as I pointed out, the President of the United States, in his book Looking Forward, stated that to increase the number of Judges on the Court would only add to the ravages of the disease.

The Senator from Tennessee made some reference, I believe, to why the Chief Justice wrote the letter to me. I did not hear the Senator's statement, but someone told me he had referred to that.

The reason why the Chief Justice wrote to me was that I asked him what the facts were with reference to the matters under consideration. As I stated in my testimony before the committee, I had read the statement made by the Attorney General of the United States to the President, and I had, with amazement, read the statement contained in the President's letter with reference to certiorari. Then I got the report of Stanley Reed, the Solicitor General, upon the subject, and found that Stanley Reed in his report did not agree with either the Attorney General of the United States or with the President of the United States with reference to the Supreme Court refusing to entertain petitions for writs of certiorari.

After the Attorney General had in substance repeated the same statement before the Committee on the Judiciary, I went to the one source of information which I knew would be correct, to the Chief Justice of the United States; and that is why he wrote me the letter. Probably he made a mistake in writing it to me; perhaps he should have written it to the Senator from Tennessee, and I am sure he would have done so if the Senator from Tennessee had made the request of him. But I asked him for the information, and he very courteously and graciously addressed the letter to me.

The Senator says he wants to know why and how the Supreme Court decides certiorari cases. I suppose the Chief Justice thought that if we read his letter we would learn from the letter, in view of our experience as lawyers, how they reach decisions with reference to certiorari.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator state whether or not the Chief Justice knew the Senator was going to read the letter publicly, or whether he wrote the letter with the object of having it read to the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. I asked the Chief Justice for the information, and stated I desired to make the letter public. I do not know that he knew I was going to read the letter to the committee, but he knew I was going to make the letter public; otherwise I should never have made the letter public. He knew likewise that I was going to appear before the Committee on the Judiciary to testify the following Monday.

In the letter the Chief Justice said:

> The act of 1925, limiting appeals as a matter of right—

The Supreme Court was not entirely to blame—

> The act of 1925, limiting appeals as a matter of right and enlarging the provisions for review only through certiorari, was most carefully considered by Congress. I call attention to the reports of the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session. That legislation was deemed to be essential—

Deemed to be essential by whom? By the Congress of the United States—> to enable the Supreme Court to perform its proper function. No single court of last resort, whatever the number of judges, could dispose of all the cases which arise in this vast country and which litigants would seek to bring up if the right of appeal were unrestricted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with all this demand that the Supreme Court act on every application for writ of certiorari, I may ask the Senator if it is not true that the purpose for which the circuit courts of appeal were established was to keep these cases from coming to the Supreme Court and to settle as many as possible in the circuit courts of appeal. A litigant has not any vested right in having two appeals, and the purpose of establishing the circuit courts of appeal is to settle as many cases as possible in those courts, and allow only those cases of national interest and involving Federal questions to go finally to the Supreme Court. What is the use of having a circuit court of appeals if every case decided by that court has to be redecided by the Supreme Court? Why not let the litigants go directly to the Supreme Court and not come to the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly. That was why Congress enacted the law creating the circuit courts of appeal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator would not yield to me when I first requested him to yield, but I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator had come to that point in his speech where he was ready to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. No; but I yield to the Senator. The Senator yielded to me after he had concluded his speech, but not before.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Montana voted against the confirmation of Mr. Hughes as Chief Justice of the United States, just as I did.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard what the Senator from Montana said a moment ago, and I ask him if this is not a statement made by him on February 12, 1930, when the confirmation of Mr. Hughes was being considered by the Senate:

> Mr. President, Democrats upon this side are going to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes upon what basis, upon what theory? Upon the theory that the responsibility is upon the Republican President? O Mr. President, they cannot hide behind that. Are they going to vote for him upon the theory that he is a great lawyer? Ah, Mr. President, as I shall point out in a moment, they cannot hide behind that cloak.
>
> Upon the theory that he is an honest man? Oh, no; the Members of this body on this side cannot hide behind that, because we have already set a precedent. We said, when Charles Beecher Warren's name came in here, that we would not vote for him; and why would we not vote for him? Not because he was not an honest man. We did not refuse to vote for him because he was not an able lawyer. We did not refuse to vote for him because of the fact that he was not practically everything that has been said about Mr. Hughes; but the Members on this side voted against him because we said it was contrary to the traditions of the Democratic Party, and we refused to put into the office of Attorney General of the United States a man who had been attorney for the Sugar Trust of this country.
> Ah, my friends, think of it! We would not vote for him because of the fact that he was attorney for the Sugar Trust.

Mr. WHEELER. Is the Senator making a speech?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President, I am merely reading the statement made by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. I continue reading:

> We did not want to place him in the Attorney General's office; and yet we take a man whose economic views upon the trusts, who represents the Oil Trusts, and the Radio Trust, and whose every view upon the economic questions has been diametrically opposed to the Democratic position. Are we going to vote to place him in the highest office in the United States save that of the President of the United States?

I take it that the Senator recalls that statement and other statements which he made at that time?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator seems to have changed his mind. I am glad he has. I did not hold that view of Mr. Hughes, but I criticized him then, and I criticize him now.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Tennessee voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Hughes, just as I did.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I voted against the confirmation of his nomination.

Mr. WHEELER. And I wish to say now publicly that when I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Justice Hughes I made a mistake, just as the Senator from Tennessee made a mistake when voting to confirm other nominations. I think the Senator from Tennessee will agree that he made a mistake when he voted for the confirmation of some of the reactionaries; for instance, when he voted to confirm to the Supreme Court the nomination of Mr. McReynolds, of Tennessee. Again I say publicly that I made a mistake when I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Hughes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a frank statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. When we are talking about liberals, let us consider Mr. Justice Stone. I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Stone, and I made a mistake. I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Chief Justice Hughes, and I owe him an apology for voting against him. I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Stone, and I owe him an apology for voting against him, and I am glad to make that public apology now with reference to Mr. Justice Stone.

The Senate, however, will recall that when Woodrow Wilson nominated Mr. McReynolds to be a Justice of the Supreme Court he did so, in my judgment, because he believed Mr. McReynolds was a liberal. As a matter of fact, he is one of the most conservative men on the Supreme Court Bench.

Practically every liberal in this body voted in favor of Mr. Justice Roberts, thinking he was a liberal. The fact that Mr. Hughes at that time was, as I thought, too conservative and that he has turned out to be a liberal, is not to his discredit. It is to his credit that, notwithstanding the fact that he had represented some of the great corporations, when he went on the Supreme Court bench he put all that aside, and has decided the law in accordance with his honest, conscientious dictates. I think he is to be congratulated for the attitude he has assumed; and I think he is to be praised for it. That is why I said a moment ago that I think he is a great statesman, a great lawyer, and a great American citizen.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that I think he has made a manly confession.

Mr. WHEELER. Indeed, I am very happy to do it.

We talk about the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives and seem to feel that every law we pass here should be upheld by the Supreme Court. Some of the administration leaders are patting us on the back now because we are passing everything that they want us to pass. But how many of us have had time in the last 4 years to give any consideration to the question of the constitutionality of some of the bills which have been pending before this body? We have passed them because we were told to pass them. We passed the N. R. A. bill. With respect to much of the legislation which has been passed we voted on it because many persons said, "Well, the Supreme Court is up there to pass upon it, and if it is not constitutional they will declare it unconstitutional."

Let us now be honest with ourselves and let us be honest with the Supreme Court. Let us not blame the Supreme Court when some of the blame rests, and should rest, upon our own shoulders.

The Senator from Tennessee has criticized the Supreme Court and Mr. Justice Hughes, and has quoted a provision of the Constitution saying that the Supreme Court ought to pass upon all questions of fact and all questions of law.

The Senator, as a lawyer, knows that in every appellate court in the United States, when a case comes up on appeal, except in equity cases, the court does not decide the questions of fact that have been decided by a jury. If the appellate courts and the Supreme Court decided questions of fact and reversed the cases which had already been decided by juries, the Senator from Tennessee and every liberal Senator in this body would be on his toes denouncing the Supreme Court and the appellate courts for reversing verdicts of juries and examining the facts. They would contend that the courts had no right to do it; that they did not see the witnesses; that they did not hear them testify; that they did not know what their demeanor was; that they could not pass upon the credibility of the witnesses. And now my friend the Senator from Tennessee denounces those courts because Mr. Hughes says they cannot pass upon questions of fact. Of course they cannot, and they ought not to pass upon questions of fact. I am surprised that the Senator, as a great lawyer, should for one minute entertain the notion and make the statement that the Supreme Court was refusing to do its duty under the Constitution because it did not pass upon questions of fact.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator recalls, I have no doubt, that in passing recent legislation, such, for instance, as the bill we passed this morning—the Federal Trade Commission bill—we have expressly provided by statute that findings of fact by the lower body should be binding upon the appellate court.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. As a matter of fact, in my State attorneys representing poor people, widows and orphans and those who have been injured, and who have sued some rich corporation, a railroad company, a mining company, or some person, have criticized the Supreme Court or the appellate court for passing upon the facts and cutting down the verdict and holding that under the facts the plaintiff was not entitled to so much money, or under the facts the case ought to go back for retrial. All liberals have denounced appellate courts for passing upon facts, and have said that such courts ought not to do so and that they had no right to do so either as a matter of statute law or under the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator, whether in the course of his practice in the trial courts it has not been his experience frequently that a jury would decide a case for the side upon which perhaps 2 or 3 witnesses testified, as against 25 or 30 witnesses on the other side?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. A court which did not know the witnesses, and did not see them and pass on their conduct and their demeanor, might say, "Why, here are 25 witnesses testifying under oath one way and 2 or 3 witnesses testifying the other way", and the court might be inclined to overturn a decision by a jury which had seen the witnesses and had concluded that the 25 or 30 were lying whereas the 2 or 3 witnesses were telling the truth.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator from Texas. I wish to call attention to a case I tried a few years ago involving a little Greek. I brought suit for him against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. The only witness I had as to the facts was the employee himself, the little Greek. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Co. brought on their engineer, their fireman, and about 15 other witnesses who testified that my client did not tell the truth. The jury went out and shortly returned giving my client a verdict of $10,000. The defendant appealed the case to the supreme court of the State, and the lawyers argued that that court ought to set aside the verdict because the testimony was numerically overwhelmingly in favor of the defendant. But the supreme court said in effect that while it did not agree with the verdict of the jury because it thought the great preponderance of the evidence was on the other side, yet inasmuch as the jury had passed upon the facts and were the final judges of the facts, and that the trial court had upheld the verdict and refused to grant a new trial, it felt compelled to uphold the verdict, and my Greek client got $10,000, less his attorney's fees.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator recall the recent opinion of the Supreme Court in the St. Joe stockyards case, in which the Supreme Court claimed the right to weigh evidence in utility-rate cases?

Mr. WHEELER. I am not familiar with that particular case. I think they possibly have that right; but the Senator from Tennessee is denouncing the Supreme Court because they have not reviewed the facts in all these cases.

Mr. MINTON. As I understood the Senator from Montana, he said that he, as a liberal, and all other liberals, would denounce the Supreme Court if they assumed to review facts and to pass upon and weigh the evidence. They did that in the St. Joe stockyards case.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not familiar with that particular case; I do not know anything about it; but perhaps if I read it I might disagree with the Supreme Court in that case. However, our friend the Senator from Tennessee has been quoting the Constitution and denouncing the Supreme Court because they do not pass upon the facts in every case that is brought before them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator would not say, would he, that under the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to pass upon the facts if it wants to pass on them? When justice can be done, and the Court has jurisdiction under the plain terms of the Constitution, why should it not use its jurisdiction in the interest of what is right and fair and just in its decision of cases?

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, the Senator is entirely wrong about it, because, as is known to every Member of this body who has tried lawsuits to any extent, in trying a lawsuit against some great corporation by reason of the fact that the corporation has great financial resources it can produce 10 witnesses or 20 witnesses in many instances to every 1 that some poor injured employee can produce; but when that employee goes on the stand and testifies to his version of what took place the jury passes upon the credibility of the witness. That is what the jury is for, to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses and to say upon all the surrounding circumstances whether or not the plaintiff has made out a case not beyond a reasonable doubt but by a preponderance of evidence.

Then, when the case goes to the Supreme Court and the Justices there have that evidence, they do not know anything about the surrounding circumstances. Should they set aside the verdict on merely reading the cold print, never having seen the witness upon the witness stand, never having observed his demeanor, never having seen the expression upon his face, and not being able to tell whether he was perjuring himself or not as well as a jury can tell and as the trial court can tell? They certainly should not set aside a verdict under such circumstances.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. But even if we were to concede that all these imperfections exist, no one seriously says that the proposal now being considered by the Judiciary Committee is any guaranty that the conditions are going to be eliminated?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not.

Mr. TYDINGS. So what is being done is to argue for something and at the same time refuse to adopt a remedy which will cure the situation of which complaint is made.

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, the criticism of the Court is what? The criticism of the Supreme Court at the present time is that they have been usurping the powers of the Congress of the United States, and it is proposed to put six more Justices upon the Supreme Court. For what? Those six Justices may usurp the powers of the Supreme Court just as much as may the nine Justices who are now upon the Court; there will be nothing to prevent their doing so. So, to cure something, it is proposed to put six more Justices on the Court. While I am on that subject let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I know of no great corporation lawyer in this country but would say amen to what the Senator from Tennessee suggests that the supreme appellate court should pass upon the facts. Never have I appeared in a personal injury case in the supreme court of my State or in any of the States in my section of the country but that the attorneys for railroads and the attorneys for the copper interests have always appealed to the courts and said, "You should set aside this verdict because the jury was prejudiced against us and the lower court was prejudiced against us; you ought to set the verdict aside in the interest of justice to the great corporations of the country."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says that my position is in favor of the great corporations of the country?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator misconstrues my statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that numerous letters from corporation attorneys in my State——

Mr. WHEELER. Wait a moment. I yielded to the Senator for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indicate that they are to a large extent on the side of the Senator's contention and not on my side.

Mr. WHEELER. That may be true in the Senator's State, but it is not of my State. Let me say to the Senator, to the other Senators here, and to the leader on this side, that I knew about this proposal to increase the Supreme Court by six members a year ago last January. At that time a bill was brought to my office and I was asked to introduce it. No corporation had seen me, but I said then to those who brought it to me, "If you take this issue into the campaign, from a political standpoint it will ruin you." I said further, "You will have every church leader in the United States against you on it." I was approached again later in the spring, and I told them the same thing. The bill then brought to my attention was not the identical bill now pending but one to increase the Supreme Court permanently to 15. So do not make a mistake about it; I knew of this proposal before any other man on this floor knew about it; and I denounced it then as I am denouncing it now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure I never learned about it until after the President expressed himself on it; and so the Senator had a great advantage in point of time.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that I had a great advantage in point of time.

My friend, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], has just called my attention to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, this great reactionary tribunal, has only this afternoon upheld the Railroad Labor Act by a unanimous opinion, and it has also upheld the Frazier-Lemke Act with reference to loans to farmers throughout the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not pretty generally known that if they did not uphold the Railroad Labor Act they would have to reverse the decision in the case involving the Employers' Liability Act?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to know the Supreme Court has upheld the acts referred to by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought the Senator would be glad, and so am I. I think everybody is glad.

Let me say this in all fairness to the Supreme Court, that if much of our legislation had not been so hastily drafted, but had been drafted and presented to the Court properly, in my judgment, much of it would have been upheld by the Supreme Court. I think that we can do at the present time many of the things which the administration favors and many of the things that many of us upon this side of the Chamber favor if we will take a little time and prepare the proposed laws in accordance with the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What act of Congress does the Senator have in mind that was hastily drawn and badly presented to the Court which would have been upheld if a different situation had prevailed?

Mr. WHEELER. I have in mind, among other things, the Gold Act, which was hastily prepared. It was finally upheld, but it was very poorly presented to the Supreme Court.

Every lawyer who heard the Attorney General's argument before the Supreme Court in that case could not help but feel sorry to think that we had an Attorney General who would make a political speech to the Supreme Court upon an issue of that kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall whether I heard the Attorney General's speech or not, but evidently it was sufficiently convincing to win the case.

Mr. WHEELER. It was won in spite of the argument.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator say that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was hastily drawn and badly presented?

Mr. WHEELER. I would say that the N. R. A., coming back to that, was hastily drawn.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not refer to that act.

Mr. WHEELER. Wait a moment. I am now talking about the N. R. A., and I say that many lawyers on this side of the Chamber felt that the N. R. A. was unconstitutional. That act was hastily drafted; it was hastily put through the Congress of the United States; and, in my judgment, it was poorly presented to the Supreme Court. As a matter of fact, it is impossible for me to understand how any lawyer on this side of the Chamber or on the other side of the Chamber could denounce the Supreme Court for holding other than they did in the Schechter case, for any 10-year-old boy who had studied commercial law in the schools of the country would say that the N. R. A. in the case which was brought known as the Schechter case should be held unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield first to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had not finished my question.

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky in just a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Montana will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. I have yielded to everybody, but when the Senator himself was speaking he refused to yield to anybody.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and I gave my reason for it. It was because I wanted my speech to appear as a whole.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has not made a speech for so long that he cannot remember having refused to yield to any Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I was referring to the Senator from Tennessee; not the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am perfectly willing to defer to the Senator from Kentucky if he desires to interrogate the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I will wait.

Mr. CONNALLY. The reason I interrupted at the time was that what I wished to say had reference to the N. R. A. Let me ask the Senator from Montana if the N. R. A. had been restricted to interstate transactions, and had eliminated the palpable violation of the Constitution in delegating power to make codes, would it not probably have been upheld?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the delegation of power was so plain that many of us voted against the act because we thought it was unconstitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention to the fact—I have not the paper with me at the moment—that Donald Richberg has said that, in his judgment, an N. R. A. can be drafted now and be constitutional. I, for one, voted against the N. R. A., not entirely because of the doubt as to its constitutionality, but I voted against it because I thought it was economically unsound, and that it was going to permit price fixing and monopolies in this country. In addition to that, let me say that, in my judgment, the people of this country would have demanded that the N. R. A. be repealed, even though the Supreme Court had not held it to be unconstitutional.

The man who first came to see me and asked me to vote for the N. R. A. was the head of one of the greatest industrial corporations of the country. I said to him—and I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] will agree with what I said to him—that the N. R. A. was conceived by the United States Chamber of Commerce, which was never known for its liberal views, and brought to the Congress with the idea of heading off the 6-hour-day bill which the Senator from Alabama had introduced, and which probably was going to be passed. I favored the Black bill, but I did not favor the N. R. A. because it created price fixing and permitted monopolistic practices. To the man who came to see me asking me to vote for the N. R. A. I said, "You want to get away from the Sherman antitrust law." He said, "Certainly. We go into a room and pull down the curtain and lock the doors. We agree upon the prices of these commodities, and then we no more than get outside the door than we begin cutting prices, because we know that nothing can be done about it by reason of the Sherman Antitrust Act."

Let us be honest with ourselves with reference to these facts. If I am not correct about the N. R. A. being conceived by the United States Chamber of Commerce, and if I am not correct about that measure being sent here to head off the Black 6-hour-day law, I will ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to correct me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator give his opinion as to the correctness or incorrectness of the ruling of the Supreme Court on the Agricultural Adjustment Act? Does he think that was a proper decision of the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana passes to that point I should like to recur to the case mentioned a while ago at the instance of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. In that minimum-wage case the Supreme Court apparently completely reversed itself in the Adkins case and in all probability in the New York wage case.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas is delighted because they did it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly, I am delighted.

Mr. President, as I have repeatedly said in press conferences, I have never been able to understand the legal theory on which the Supreme Court of the United States held unconstitutional the New York minimum-wage law nor, for that matter, the District of Columbia minimum-wage law, as they did hold it unconstitutional in the Adkins case.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] in an address a few days ago submitted a discussion the importance of which, in some of its aspects at least, did not appear to me to be fully realized at the time, particularly by those representatives of the press who have the responsibility of reporting the proceedings here. The Senator from Alabama made the point then that in one case, the State of Washington case, the Supreme Court had held it within the police power of a State to fix maximum hours of labor, and in a similar case coming from a different State, New York, the same tribunal had held it unconstitutional for the State to fix maximum hours of labor, that case involving conditions which presented greater difficulties to the laborers than those which were involved in the State of Washington case.

To me it has been inexplicable how the Court or a majority of the Court reached the conclusion that the Congress, exercising the police power to legislate for the District of Columbia, was unable to fix minimum wages for women and children employed within the District, as the Court held in the Adkins case.

Following that case, quite recently a decision was rendered which, more than any other, has disclosed to me the necessity for injecting some new blood into the Supreme Court. I refer now to the Tipaldo case, the New York State minimum-wage case. In that case the Court, having already decided that the Federal Government cannot regulate maximum hours of labor and minimum wages, held that the State government has no power to do it because the right of private contract is preeminent and overpowering.

Today the Supreme Court has completely reversed itself and directly and explicitly overruled the case on which the decision against the New York statute was based, namely, the Adkins case. No opportunity has been afforded to read the opinion in detail, but with the permission of the Senator from Montana, who has the floor, I should like to complete my statement.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to yield further to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Court said:

> With full recognition of the earnestness and vigor which characterized the prevailing opinion in the Adkins case we find it impossible to reconcile that ruling with these well-considered declarations.

I shall not impose on the Senator having the floor to read all of the statements in the opinion which are pertinent in that connection. I shall content myself for the present with reading the concluding paragraph in the decision rendered by the Supreme Court today:

Our conclusion is that the case of Adkins v. Children's Hospital, supra, should be and is overruled.

Mr. WHEELER. Fine!

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, fine; but what happens to the thousands of women and children in the great State of New York who are compelled to work unlimited hours in sweatshops and in factories on the basis of the decision resting on the Adkins case, the basis of the decision in the Tipaldo case, that the State legislature is without any power to deal with the subject? The Tipaldo case ought to be reconsidered and reversed.

I thank the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that I am sure he is very happy that the Supreme Court has seen the light with reference to this case.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was made miserable when the Supreme Court decided that Congress could not fix minimum wages for women and children workers in the District of Columbia. I was made more unhappy when, following that precedent, the Supreme Court said that the New York State lawmaking power could not do it in the State of New York.

I am glad that the Supreme Court has completely faced about and recognized the necessity of overruling its former decision.

Mr. President, talk about accepting in all cases Supreme Court decisions as binding and being above question! Here is a case where the minority opinion at last after many years becomes the majority opinion.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to finish my statement if I may. I had yielded to the Senator from Arkansas while he made a statement, and I was very glad to have him do so; and I wish to say that I have no quarrel with anything he said. In fact, I entirely agree with everything the Senator from Arkansas said.

The Senator from Tennessee wishes me to answer his question in regard to the A. A. A. I shall do so. I say that I think the Supreme Court was wrong in the A. A. A. case.

Mr. McKELLAR. I entirely agree with the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. There never was any question in my mind about the fact that the Supreme Court was wrong in the A. A. A. case. There never was any question in my mind about the fact that the Supreme Court was wrong in the Adkins case and in the New York case. I thought the Court was wrong in the child-labor case; but let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the case of the Lemke-Frazier Act, when the first act was held unconstitutional, Mr. Lemke and the Senator from North Dakota redrafted their bill, and drafted it in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, and it has now been unanimously upheld.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention also to the fact that Mr. Donald Richberg, in an article he published, said that the N. R. A. could be redrafted in such a way that it would come within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator referred to the fact—although I have not read the dispatches or the opinion—that the Supreme Court has held the new Frazier-Lemke law to be constitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. It is due to say that the credit for that new law should go to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. When the Supreme Court of the United States declared and held the first Frazier-Lemke law to be unconstitutional as being beyond the power of Congress to enact, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] at once drew an amendment or a correction of that legislation; and it was upon his insistence that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary favorably reported that measure. While, of course, the Court is right in its last decision, it is but fair, as we proceed, to distribute credit to those to whom it is due; and I wish at this time, with the permission of the Senator from Montana, to thank the junior Senator from Nevada for the suggestion he made, and congratulate him. I see that he has entered the Chamber. I congratulate him that the Supreme Court of the United States has adopted the suggestion made by the Senator from the Sagebrush State.

Mr. WHEELER. I am very grateful to the Senator, and I am very happy to give him credit, and I know that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and Mr. LEMKE will be only too glad to extend to him their thanks for the part he played in the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not mean to say that Mr. LEMKE and the Senator from North Dakota made no valuable suggestions; indeed, they were wise enough—as was I, I hope—to adopt the suggestion made by that learned lawyer, the junior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WHEELER. If some of the New Deal agencies had followed the suggestions of the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Democratic leader, and the advice of some of the other Senators, rather than to send here measures framed by inexperienced boys in the departments, in my judgment, the situation would have been entirely different.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. And, I might add, if the advice of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee had been followed, the situation would have been entirely different.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I had made up my mind not to enter the debate, but I find that resolution has gone; and now I am going to presume further, and ask the Senator from Montana to indulge me a moment, because he laid severe strictures upon the Attorney General.

Mr. WHEELER. I would rather the Senator would answer me in his own time.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to occupy only 3 or 4 minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well; I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Montana, with that pungency of intellect which characterizes all his expressions, not only in his speech here today but elsewhere has inveighed against the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. President, it is one of the most remarkable things in the history of jurisprudence that the able Senator from Montana excoriates the Attorney General of the United States for the character of the Attorney General's argument in the gold cases, when, forsooth, the Attorney General was successful in those cases; and yet my able friend proceeds to say that the Attorney General of the United States made a political speech in the courtroom.

Mr. President, political speeches are made even in the Senate, to say nothing of courtrooms. [Laughter.] Moreover, if my able friend is correct, the day upon which the gold cases were decided seemed to be a day for a political utterance, because one of the most learned as well as one of the most elderly Justices of the Supreme Court delivered at that time what was far and widely characterized as a political speech from the bench.

I have no criticism of him for that. He had a right to speak in such fashion if he chose; and such an able, polite, genial speaker as the Senator from Montana, who always observes the proprieties, ought to be the last to be unfriendly and critical of another man's speech, and to label it "political." I regret that he should have done that, because while I did not hear all the argument of the Attorney General in the gold cases, but only a part of it, I could not have made a better one in the case. The Senator from Montana might have made a better one, but I could not have done so. However, whether the speech was well delivered or ill delivered, it won the case, and the Supreme Court of the United States in publishing its decision—Two Hundred and Ninety-fourth United States Reports, pages 240 et seq.—published a portion of the oral argument of the Attorney General of the United States, so well did the Court think of it.

The Senator from Montana is so generous and so kind-hearted that when he comes to reflect, while he might find fault with the manner of delivery or the language of an address made by an attorney, when the attorney is successful I am sure the able Senator is foreclosed from criticism.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ASHURST. I am through. I wish to thank the Senator from Montana for yielding to me.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish merely to call the attention of the Senator from Arizona, as well as that of the Senator from Montana, to the fact that in the argument of the A. A. A. case before the Supreme Court a former distinguished Member of this body, who was an attorney in the case, former Senator Pepper, of Pennsylvania, made a very characteristic political speech to the Supreme Court in the argument for the side he represented, much more so than anything the Attorney General said of a political nature.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. On the 5th of February I delivered a speech in the nature of a homily to the United States about the propriety of a man changing his opinion when he concluded he was wrong, and as witnesses before the Judiciary Committee, now holding hearings, come before us and are confronted with statements they made last year, having now made different statements, when some of them stammer and blush and try to explain away the inconsistency, I draw from my pocket a copy of this homily which I delivered in the Senate, and ask them to read it, and they all approve it.

Mr. President, I did not send to the Supreme Court of the United States any letter or expression pointing out the vice of consistency; but, forsooth, today the Supreme Court must have learned somewhere or read somewhere of the great vice of consistency because, with an inconsistency which I admire and now applaud, they have attempted to correct their errors, and for that I have commendation. They are following the advice I so humbly gave them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to say that I agree with the Senator. He should not be condemned because of inconsistency This is the day of inconsistencies.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. Before the Senator's committee the other day I read from the second inaugural address as Governor of the State of New York of the present President of the United States, and if he had followed the deep convictions he then had, and had been placed upon the Supreme Court at that time, he would have decided that the Government of the United States could not enact farm legislation of the kind incorporated in the A. A. A., because he said in effect that Washington should keep its hands off farm legislation. He said also that it should keep its hands off what? Mr. President, you will hardly believe your ears, I know, because he said Washington should keep its hands off utilities, and that it ought to keep its hands off banking and insurance and other business and, by implication, that those matters should be left entirely to the States.

I do not criticize the President of the United States for those views, because I think he sincerely and honestly entertained them; but since he became President of the United States of America he has seen how impossible it is for the States to deal with some of these problems. When reference is made to the "needs of the day" and the "needs of the time", I desire to call attention to the fact that I have said, not for 4 years nor for 5 years nor for 10 years but for 20 years, that the needs of the times were such that something had to be done, not by the States but by the Government of the United States, to stop the great concentrations of wealth, with the result that much of the national income is constantly going into the pockets of a very few men. That was not the attitude of some of the men who now call themselves liberals. I desire to repeat here that some of us in this Chamber were fighting for the liberal cause when many of the office-holding liberals who recently came into power with the present administration were not to be found on the fighting line at all; and it will be a question of only a short time when they will go back to Wall Street and obtain fat salaries from some of the economic Tories.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator will acquit me of the appellation "liberal." I am a Democrat. "Liberal" is an English appellation. It belongs to English politics.

Mr. WHEELER. I have been called many worse things than a liberal.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon; I was diverted.

Mr. WHEELER. After the Senator gets his speech off his chest, he becomes diverted.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I am listening.

Mr. WHEELER. I say, I have been called many worse things than a liberal. It never has bothered me at all. I desire, however, if I may, to come to the subject of the Supreme Court, which I was discussing when I was diverted.

First of all, I congratulate the Supreme Court for having changed its opinion. All of us who have practiced law to any extent know that Supreme Courts frequently change their views, and frequently minority opinions become the majority opinions of the courts of the country.

That is not only true of the State courts, it is true with reference to the circuit courts of appeal and it is true with reference to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have in mind, with reference to the Supreme Court of the United States, when the first income-tax law came before that Court. They held it to be unconstitutional. The next time the income-tax law came before the Supreme Court they held it to be constitutional.

The first time the Railroad Employees' Liability Act came before the Supreme Court of the United States they held it to be unconstitutional. The next time it came before the Court they held the act to be constitutional. They did not expressly reverse their former decision, but I challenge any of the lawyers in this body to read the two decisions and to find where the first law differed in any material respect from the second law. Yet the Supreme Court changed its opinion with reference to the Railroad Employees' Liability Act. What they have done in those two cases they have done in other cases, and I am extremely hopeful that they may take the same course with reference to some of the other cases which may come before them.

I have never been one of those who, because the Supreme Court decided against me, or because they decided contrary to the way I thought they ought to decide, desired to destroy the Court or to destroy public confidence in the Court. I submit that if six more Justices are put upon the Supreme Court, in the first place, no evil of which there is complaint will be corrected, because there may still be 8-to-7 decisions, there will still be human beings to deal with, and there will still be men who can interpret the Constitution and who can make the Constitution what they say it is. The six new men can still usurp the power of Congress if it is admitted that the Court has been usurping that power. They can still do everything for which Members of Congress are denouncing the present Court.

I am unwilling to charge that the Supreme Court of the United States, which has been one of the great guaranties of the liberties of the minorities of this country, is responsible for the Dust Bowl. I am unwilling to stand upon this floor and say that the Supreme Court of the United States is responsible for the floods. I am unwilling to say that the Supreme Court of the United States is entirely wrong. When we take the case of the poor Communist who was convicted, to whom did he appeal? Who saved him from the hysteria of the State of Washington when it passed its war law? It was not the State supreme court; it was the Constitution of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States. Who was it that saved that Communist, detested and denounced by practically everyone? Not some jury, not some State court, but the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Not now. Who was it who took the side of the poor, unfortunate Negroes in Alabama? It was the Supreme Court of the United States which came to the rescue of those unheralded and unknown Negro boys.

When hysteria swept over the State of Oregon and the people passed a law providing that there should not be parochial schools, who was it who saved the parochial schools and said that people had a right to religious freedom in the United States? It was the Supreme Court of the United States.

When the State of Nebraska passed a law, in the hysteria which swept over the country during the war, providing that teachers should not teach German in the schools of this country, who was it that said that there should be freedom of religion and freedom of education, and that such laws were not constitutional? It was the Supreme Court of the United States.

Pack the Supreme Court, if you will, put six more men on it to meet the needs of the time; but what are needs of the time? The needs of the time from an economic and financial standpoint are no different than they were 10 years ago, 20 years ago, or 30 years ago. The needs of the time then demanded that we should stop the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few. We should have then foreseen what would happen, and should have taken steps to prevent a few men from controlling, with other people's money, all of the resources and all of the money of the United States. Pack the Supreme Court if you desire to put six more men on it to meet the needs of the time, but when the next war hysteria comes you are going to regret it.

I went through the war hysteria during the World War, and it made some impressions upon me which will never be forgotten. I saw legislature after legislature, I saw the Congress of the United States pass laws which I thought were wrong, which went too far. In my judgment, the Congress went so far in the alien and sedition law that it made a great mistake, and my late colleague, who was one of those who voted for it and, I think, worked for it, I am sure before he passed away came to the same conclusion I entertained with reference to it.

The war hysteria was sweeping the country at that time, and there were those who denounced everyone who criticized in the slightest degree any act of the Congress of the United States or criticized in any way, shape, or form the Democratic Party—and I was then holding office—and they wanted such critics sent to the penitentiary for the rest of their lives. These superpatriots and the great financial interests of that time were then trying to keep labor down while they were exacting huge war profits. When any labor organization in the United States would ask for higher wages, they would denounce them as pro-German, and when the farmers of the Northwest, of Minnesota, of North and South Dakota, and all through that great western section, were out fighting to get a higher price for wheat and higher prices for their other crops, what did these superpatriots do to their leaders? They tarred and feathered them, they painted their houses yellow, they drove them out of the community, they broke up their meetings. If Senators think I am exaggerating, ask either of the Senators from North Dakota, ask the Senator from Minnesota, ask any Senator from the northwest section of the country. They would have said, "The needs of the time are such that there have to be six more members upon the Supreme Court who can override the Bill of Rights and hold that during this period of time the Bill of Rights shall be suspended; and these men, notwithstanding the guaranties granted to them under the Constitution, shall go to jail."

I say the step proposed is one of the most dangerous ever suggested, and it will set the most dangerous precedent of which I can conceive. You can bring political pressure to bear upon me, you can say, "You have to go along because of the fact that the administration wants it." You can say that my privilege of appointing postmasters will not be accorded me; you can say that I will get no more projects for my State, worthy or unworthy; you can say what you please; but I say to Mr. Farley and to everyone else that, so far as I am concerned, I will vote against this proposal because it is morally wrong, morally unsound. It is a dangerous precedent, it is not liberal, it is reactionary, it gets us nowhere, it is an expedient, it is a stopgap and dictatorial, and, so far as I am concerned, if I am the only man in the Senate to do so, I shall vote against it.

I want to see reform, and I think I speak for practically every man who is opposed to the pending proposal, whether he is a Democrat, a Republican, a Progressive, or what not, when I say that we will agree to submit any amendment which the administration may suggest, and we will go further than that, for the sake of harmony, and because we believe in the objectives of the administration we will go out and campaign to have such an amendment ratified.

So far as it taking a long time is concerned, under article V of the Constitution there may be constitutional conventions. Congress can specify the time when the conventions shall be held. Congress can specify the manner of holding them and the election machinery by which their members shall be chosen; and if the Congress desires, it need not be a matter of years, it need not be a matter of 1 year, it can be a matter of 6 months if the Congress wishes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Up until today, the Senator will concede, the minimum-wage law passed by the Congress several years ago was unconstitutional, was it not?

Mr. WHEELER. What is the question?

Mr. McKELLAR. The minimum-wage law having been declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, it was unconstitutional until today, was it not?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Today the Supreme Court reverses itself and declares the same law to be constitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who amended the Constitution?

Mr. WHEELER. I have heard statements made that under the Constitution the Court had no right to pass upon the constitutionality of a law. Does the Senator take that position?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to know it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that the Chief Justice was undoubtedly right when not long ago he said that the Constitution is what the Judges say it is, and today we have an object lesson on that very subject. Yesterday, and up until 12 o'clock today, the minimum-wage law in the District of Columbia was absolutely unconstitutional, previously having been declared unconstitutional. Today the Supreme Court, in another opinion, amended the Constitution and declared the minimum-wage law constitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say that that is partially correct and partially incorrect. Some of the provisions of the Constitution itself are in some respects of doubtful character, and they have to be interpreted by somebody. The Constitution itself provided for a Federal judiciary and for one Supreme Court. I know there are Members of this body who have spoken over the radio and at other places and have said that the courts had no right to declare acts unconstitutional, but I do not believe that any lawyer of any standing in or out of this body subscribes to that view. The Supreme Court undoubtedly has placed constructions upon the Constitution, and undoubtedly will do so in the future. The present administration has asked the Court to place constructions upon the Constitution which have never been placed upon it before.

I hoped that the Supreme Court would place such constructions upon it, but the Court has not seen fit to do so. I have said that, in my judgment, the thing to do was to amend the Constitution by orderly processes and in the way which the Constitution itself provides.

In closing let me say one more word, and that is that the Constitution, after all, belongs to the people of the United States. It does not belong to me or to you or to anybody else. The people drafted it, and they have the right to vote upon the way in which they want the Constitution changed, if material changes in the Constitution are going to be made. The question that is now before us was not presented to the people of this country, and I do not believe the proponents of the action now proposed would present the question to the people for their approval or disapproval.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not contend, does he, that the question which is now before us—namely, that relating to the reorganization bill—requires an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. Let me say to the Senator, however, that there are some very distinguished lawyers who contend that the present bill is unconstitutional.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator himself does not so contend; he admits that the bill is constitutional?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Arkansas that I prefer to make my own statement with reference to that. I have not examined the present bill with reference to its constitutionality. To increase the Supreme Court by 6 members or 10 members or any other number on a permanent basis is undoubtedly constitutional. There is some question in the minds of some very eminent lawyers about the constitutionality of the proposed bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not yet seen a statement from any lawyer holding that the proposal by legislation to increase the number of Justices on the Supreme Bench is unconstitutional. I have not heard an argument and I have not read one to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. A very able lawyer came to me in Cleveland, after I had finished speaking night before last, and asked me what I thought about the constitutionality of the proposed measure. I told him I had not looked into that question. So far as concerns increasing the Supreme Court on a permanent basis, there cannot be any question about it. But the lawyer contended that the way it was sought to be done, which was not on a permanent basis, was a method which was unconstitutional, and stated that he was sending me a brief upon the question. I have not read the brief and I myself do not care to pass upon that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Montana stated a moment ago that he thought the people ought to pass on every change which is proposed in the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Every material change.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will amend the statement by saying "every material change." The Constitution authorizes Congress to regulate commerce among the States. It does not say what sort of commerce. It does not stipulate the articles of commerce that are to be regulated nor the manner in which they are to be regulated. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution every State in the Union, or in the confederation, not only possessed, but most of them exercised, the right of absolute prohibition of commerce coming into the State from other States. When the States surrendered that power they surrendered it to the Federal Government and, in my judgment, surrendered it completely. At any rate the language of the Constitution is that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the States.

The Supreme Court has amended that provision of the Constitution in numerous decisions. It has held that, while Congress has the power to regulate commerce, it can only regulate commerce of a certain type. For instance, it has held that Congress can prohibit the shipment from Chicago into Alabama of meat that is calculated to injure the health or destroy the lives of the people of Alabama, but that Congress cannot regulate the transportation of an article of commerce made in Chicago under such conditions that the health and the lives of the people who make that article may be destroyed. The Supreme Court has held that Congress can, under certain conditions, prohibit the shipment of prison-made goods from one State to another, although the goods themselves have no deleterious characteristics, are not injurious to health or life, and cannot have any immoral effect.

The same Court has held that it cannot prohibit the shipment of child-made goods from one State to another.

All these limitations and these decisions have amended the language of the Constitution, which simply gives Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States. The people were not given any chance to pass upon those amendments, which were judicial amendments and not legislative, or amendments submitted to the States and passed upon either by legislatures or conventions.

So it is utterly impossible, according to my view, for the people to pass upon amendments of the Constitution that are insidiously and consistently and constantly being written into the Constitution by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not believe that the Senator would agree with his own statement after careful thought and consideration. The Supreme Court has not, in my judgment, amended the Constitution in the way the Senator says. The Supreme Court has interpreted the provisions of the Constitution, as somebody had to interpret them. The Supreme Court had to interpret what was meant by "commerce among the States." In my judgment, the Court has not amended the Constitution.

Assuming that everything the Senator has said about the Court is correct, and even if I were willing to admit every mean thing and every bad thing that anybody ever said about the Supreme Court, yet I shall say then that the proposal to increase the Supreme Court by six members will not in the slightest degree correct the situation which has been described.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assume that the six judges, whoever they may be, should have open minds——

Mr. WHEELER. That is a violent assumption.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not the slightest information or imagination as to who they will be or who they will not be. However, does not the Senator think that if six men are selected who are impartial, who are not bound by preconceived notions or economic views, who are open-minded, who are men of ability and character, and who have been selected without any effort being made to bind them to a decision in any case, that private litigants and even the Government itself would go before such a Court feeling confident of receiving a fair and impartial hearing. Under those conditions the one who lost would feel that at least he had had a fair trial, whereas with respect to some cases in recent times most people have felt that a large number of judges had their minds made up in advance of the argument of the case.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not at all subscribe to what the Senator has said with reference to picking out six impartial Judges. I think the Senator from Kentucky voted as I did with respect to Mr. Justice Roberts. We both voted in favor of confirming his nomination. We voted against the confirmation of Judge Parker. I voted against him, and I am sure the Senator from Kentucky voted against Judge Parker because of what we felt were his preconceived ideas with reference to injunctions. Then in his place the President nominated Mr. Roberts. Mr. Roberts had been an attorney in the oil cases, prosecuting Fall and Doheny. He had done a very excellent job, and he was praised very highly by my late colleague, Senator Walsh, upon the floor of the Senate, and praised by practically every liberal lawyer in the United States. Every liberal and every progressive in this body voted to confirm his nomination, thinking that he was going to be a liberal, and no Senator on any side in the Senate ever suggested that he had any preconceived ideas, or that he was anything other than the most honest and the most virtuous and the highest type of man who could possibly be put upon the Supreme Court bench.

Mr. Hoover picked out Mr. Cardozo and nominated him. He was not packing the Supreme Court for the economic royalists in New York when he picked out Mr. Cardozo. He was not packing the Supreme Court of the United States for the economic royalists of New York when he picked out Mr. Hughes. I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Stone and I voted against the nomination of Mr. Justice Hughes. The old friend of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], Mr. Justice McReynolds, was selected by President Wilson because he had prosecuted the economic royalists; he had prosecuted the Tobacco Trust case; he had fought for the little farmer in Kentucky and Tennessee and Virginia and almost every other State. He was placed upon the Supreme Court, and yet he turned out to be about the most conservative man upon that bench. So if six more men are picked out, they will be just six human beings who will take the oath of office and go upon the Supreme Court; but unless we know what they are going to decide before we put them there, we can have no assurance as to their decisions; there is not a workingman in the United States of America who can have any assurance that they will decide any single, solitary case in his favor. Does the Senator think that any workingman or any farmer or anyone else could have any guaranty that the six men who are to be placed upon the Supreme Court, if the proposal should be adopted, would vote with the present minority on that Bench? Does he think that they would vote to uphold labor legislation that the majority has not upheld? Does he think that those six men would uphold the A. A. A.? How could he be sure that they would vote in the way desired?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the Senator that I would not vote for the confirmation of the nomination of any man appointed to the Supreme Court who would give in advance any guaranty as to how he would decide any case. I do not think the President would appoint any man who would be subject to any such approach for a guaranty as to how he would decide any case.

Mr. WHEELER. Then, what assurance would there be?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, nobody can give any assurance as to how any judge is going to decide a case.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly those of us who are in favor of this proposal are not seeking in advance to commit any Judge as to his judicial action or to commit any Judge in advance as to any possible legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. But it has been said that six Judges are desired to be put upon that Bench who will act in such a way as to meet the needs of the times. What assurance is there that they would do so?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is desirable that the 6 Judges or 9 Judges or 15 Judges, or whatever the number of Judges may be on the Supreme Court, shall be open-minded and shall take into consideration the legislation that Congress enacts, and abide by the Supreme Court's own rule that laws of Congress will be upheld unless they are unconstitutional beyond a rational doubt. My contention is, where any four out of nine men, equally learned, equally patriotic, equally sincere in an opinion go on record as believing in the constitutionality of a law, that that of itself creates sufficient doubt in the minds of reasonable men to enable the Court to uphold laws that are passed by Congress.

In the case of Judge Parker, the Senator will recall that he had a judicial record, and the Senate rejected him on his judicial record. Justice Roberts had never had any official position that I know of. Certainly, he had never been a judge.

Mr. WHEELER. He had held official position.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that he had ever been a judge; at least, he had no judicial record that was ever brought to our attention. He had done a good job in the oil cases in conjunction with former Senator Pomerene, of Ohio, who helped him to handle those matters. The Senate confirmed his nomination very largely upon the record which he had made in those cases, because most of us knew nothing at all about his antecedents. But that is neither here nor there; all we ask for, whether we get six judges or three judges or one judge, is that the men appointed to the Supreme Bench shall be sufficiently broad-minded, sufficiently modern in their outlook upon the problems of society and politics, that their minds shall not be closed in advance against the constitutionality of any law enacted by the Congress, though it may be new or different or strange from any law that has ever before been enacted.

Mr. WHEELER. What assurance will the Senator have as to that?

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize there is a certain type of mind in this country, not only on the bench but in the Senate and outside of it in private life, that is constitutionally and congenitally against any new thing—that is, against anything that is strange, anything that is a departure from custom—and I realize that now and then we get such men on the bench not only of the Supreme Court but of the inferior courts.

If I were selecting judges, I do not think that I would undertake to select men whose minds were closed to modern economic conditions; I would not undertake to vote for such men if I were voting for them. Indeed, in voting in my State I do not vote for men to go on the highest court of my own State whose views are hidebound and legalistic and who are slaves to custom or to the doctrine of stare decisis; and the Supreme Court itself has today shown that it is not a slave to any such doctrine, for it has reversed one of its own decisions.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator agrees that in placing six new men on the Supreme Court we shall still be putting six men there who may usurp the powers of the Congress of the United States, who may wrongly interpret the Constitution of the United States, and who may decide against everything the Congress of the United States wants.

Mr. BARKLEY. I grant the Senator that that is possible.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly; it is entirely possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we take our chances as to the kind of judges we are going to get, no matter who appoints them or how many there are to be on the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. We not only take chances; but if we will review the past history of the Supreme Court, we can only come to one conclusion, and that is that when six men are put upon the Supreme Court, no matter how fair they seem to have been, no matter how fair their action may have been in the past, it is no guaranty that they are not going to change either their political or their economic views after they get upon the Supreme Court Bench, and that they will not usurp the powers of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. And although both branches of Congress might agree on some amendment to the Constitution, and that amendment might be ratified within 6 months or a year by the people, through their legislatures or the States, there is no assurance that nine judges or any other number of judges of the Supreme Court will not misinterpret such an amendment to the Constitution as they have misinterpreted amendments already in the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, after all, our whole judiciary system, from beginning to end, is imperfect. The jury system is denounced by a great many people from one end of the country to the other. A great many think we ought to do away with the jury system. I am not one of those who so think, but a great many denounce juries; they denounce the grand-jury system; they denounce prosecuting attorneys; they denounce district judges, and say that it is wrong to give to Federal district judges and to the State judges such power as they have. They denounce also the Supreme Court Justices because of their decisions. I, too, have denounced their decisions; I put no halo around their heads; I say that those Justices, in my judgment, have been wrong in many instances, though in the minds of a great many other people they have been entirely right.

Mr. BARKLEY. They could not have been right all the time, for they have been on both sides of the question so many times that they could not always be right.

Mr. WHEELER. They are not any different from what the Senator from Kentucky and I have been, for we have been on different sides of a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. And we have changed our opinions as to certain laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have, but largely as a matter of policy and as a matter of conviction as to the best policy for the Congress to enact by way of legislation. It is not the part of the judiciary to pass upon the wisdom of legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is asking that the judiciary, including the Supreme Court of the United States, be superhuman.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. WHEELER. If six men or any other number of men should be placed upon the Supreme Court, there would be six more human beings on that court, and they would continue to be human beings whether they wore the robes of the Supreme Court or whether they did not.

We can criticize the members of the Court, but we have gone far beyond just criticism.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that he and the Senator from Kentucky generally agree on what is wrong, but the Senator from Kentucky advocates putting six more human beings on the bench in order to correct that wrong, while the Senator from Montana advocates an amendment which will definitely state what is wrong and how it can be corrected.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's amendment provides for a political appeal from the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. TYDINGS. I had no reference to that amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that no two litigants who carry a case through the lower courts into the Supreme Court and get a decision of that court would have ever known which one had won the case in the Supreme Court until an election had been carried and the political complexion of the Senate had been determined and Congress had passed on the political question decided by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not mean that, because my amendment applies only to constitutional questions. It does not apply to private litigants at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is bound to do so. The Supreme Court does not decide cases except between private litigants.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it does so decide.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very properly; all these constitutional questions arise in litigation between two persons.

Mr. WHEELER. No; quite to the contrary; in many instances the cases that go to the Supreme Court where constitutionality is decided are cases in which the Government of the United States is interested.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is rarely true, though it has happened; but practically all the cases that have been decided in the last 4 years which involve the constitutionality of acts of Congress, except where a man was prosecuted by the Federal Government for a criminal offense, have reached the Court because of lawsuits between individuals.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well. Then, with reference to my amendment, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky, and to the other Senators who are for the proposal as to the Supreme Court, that I am willing to vote for any amendment the President of the United States or the leader of our party in the Senate, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], will propose to meet the objections which have been raised. I have sufficient confidence in the leader of our party that if he will propose any amendment which he thinks will meet the situation I will vote to submit such an amendment. I will go further than that; I will state to him that I will go out and campaign from one end of the country to the other in an effort to have such an amendment adopted by the people of the country, and I am perfectly willing to do the same thing for the President of the United States. I will vote to report out of the committee any amendment which he will submit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator guarantee that the Supreme Court will interpret that amendment in the spirit of its submission?

Mr. WHEELER. Just as much as the Senator from Kentucky will guarantee that six new men appointed to the Supreme Court will do as he wants them to do or as he hopes they will do. They will be six human beings just as the nine present Justices of the Supreme Court are nine human beings.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, Mr. President, they could not be like that.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Indiana was in favor of a constitutional amendment until he got orders from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no; I was not.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; he was.

Mr. MINTON. I know, and I have the bill in my desk. It was to be an act of Congress, and the Senator from Montana told me he would vote for it. It was not an amendment to be proposed to the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Senator's pardon. It was another Senator who offered the constitutional amendment because he thought the bill of the Senator from Indiana would prove to be unconstitutional. Let me say that the close advisers of the Senator from Indiana on this proposition think his bill is unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator believe the Senators who are proposing constitutional amendments as a substitute for the President's program can ever get together on an amendment which all of them can support?

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to see such an amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Not only can we do it, but we will do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why does not the Senator do it?

Mr. WHEELER. We are doing it right now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where is it?

Mr. WHEELER. We will soon have it ready to submit.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Senator has not got it now?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, does the Senator from Kentucky want us to agree on such an amendment in 15 minutes?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has had several years.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; we have not had several years at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say that I think the Senator from Montana knows, as I know, that very nearly all the Democratic Members of the Senate who are not in favor of the proposal for six new Justices can agree on an amendment, and will agree on an amendment, but they are wondering, if they agree on an amendment, whether those who favor the President's proposal will withdraw that proposal and vote for an amendment about which they will not have any question in the future?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, as one of the supporters of the President's program I would not agree in advance on any amendment. While it might be possible that even some of us who favor the President's program would favor an amendment to the Constitution, I would not favor it as a substitute for the President's program at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, any such amendment that might be proposed would meet with the disapproval of the "brain trusters." We know that. We cannot propose any kind of an amendment to the Constitution that some of the brain trusters will not pick it to pieces and say it is not the right thing. They do not want it. They want the thing done just as they have drafted the bill, just as they have sent the bill here, and placed it in the hands of the Senator who introduced it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Montana expressed some doubt as to the ability of the appointing power to secure six new judges who would hold views contrary to the views of the present majority of the Court. Does he really think that?

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator state his question again?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator expressed some doubt as to the ability of the appointing power and the confirming power to find six prospective judges who, after they went on the bench, would have a different judicial slant than that held by the present Court. Does he really believe that?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. I think the President could pick from the group of college professors who have testified before the Committee on the Judiciary men who would decide anything any way any office boy told them to decide.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is judging by the witnesses who have been before the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we cannot obtain that kind of a Court, why pass the bill introduced here? I do not think anything is impossible. If we cannot get some new blood that will reverse the attitude of the judges now on the Supreme Court, what is the use of fooling with this matter at all?

Mr. WHEELER. I can tell the Senator of many hopeful boys who expect to get on the Supreme Court who will be glad to agree in advance that they will decide anything the way the office boys want it decided. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me state the issue. The so-called reactionaries have stretched the Constitution of the United States to protect every dollar in the land, but when an effort is made to stretch the Constitution to protect human life, the same reactionaries yell like the wolves on Unalaska's shore. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4720) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. BOYLAN of New York, Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky, Mr. HIGGINS, Mr. DALY, Mr. TABER, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1088. An act for the relief of the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co.;

H. R. 1089. An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins;

H. R. 1091. An act for the relief of Capt. J. H. Merriam, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

H. R. 1094. An act for the relief of Clark F. Potts and Charles H. Barker; and

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution declaring Joseph P. Kennedy eligible for appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 17, 1937:

S. 936. An act to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia.

On March 24, 1937:

S. 361. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.;

S. 996. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the towns of Decatur, Nebr., and Onawa, Iowa; and

S. 997. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the cities of South Sioux City, Nebr., and Sioux City, Iowa.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is my intention to discuss very briefly some of the statements made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] in connection with the letter of the Chief Justice.

Naturally I have listened with great interest to my good friend, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], commenting upon the "brain trust." I must confess that I had never anticipated that I would hear my good friend from Montana join in the attacks on the "brain trust." To hear him talking about those who are opposed to the President's plan reaching an agreement on a constitutional amendment is most interesting to me. I have been wondering how the Senator from Montana and the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who are both vigorously opposing the President's plan, would get together on a constitutional amendment. Perhaps they could do so. I say nothing against either of these distinguished Senators, both of whom are gentlemen of ability, eminent in their States and eminent Members of this body, but we all know that on most questions involving economic problems in this body, any Senator who has been here a few years can sit at his desk, take a list of the Senators, and jot down how they will vote on a particular question when it comes to a vote in the Senate.

That is frequently done by the representatives of the press. They often publish in their newspapers a statement as to how Senators are likely to vote the next day on a certain question. It is not necessary for them to talk to those Senators on a question involving economic differences and economic predilections. It is simply a matter of plain common sense and mathematics. That was recognized by Chief Justice Hughes in his book on the Supreme Court in which he said it is fortunate that the Supreme Court members have never in their history been tied down by political machines while they were on the bench. Of course, he does not intimate that many of the eminent members on the bench were not connected with some kind of a political machine before they got on the bench, but he says it is fortunate that as members of the Court they have not been tied down to political machines and become a part of political campaigns in their respective States. It is true that they have not since the early part of the history of this country, although history does tell us that very shortly after the first members of the Supreme Court were appointed a session was missed at one place where they were to hold court because two of the judges were in their States campaigning for the Federalist ticket.

However, the point I intended to state is that, as we all know, it is no charge against the integrity of an individual, as a Senator or as a Congressman or as a judge, to say that we believe that in the performance of his official function he will continue to follow the natural bent of his mind. He is still a man. He was a baby once, just as everybody else was a baby. He had to be waited on as a baby just as every other baby in the country was waited on by its mother. Later he probably went to the same kind of school as other boys and studied the same kind of books. The probability is that he went to the polls and voted the first time, just as others did, for the party which most likely was the party to which his father belonged. The possibility is that he began to get interested in politics and took part in some political gatherings. The likelihood is that he was not ashamed of it at all, but was proud of the fact that he was a member of a political party.

As a result of all this the likelihood is that before long he was elected to office. Sooner or later he came to Congress, to the House or to the Senate, or was promoted to an important office somewhere else. That very man, who was once a baby like other babies, perhaps became a member of the judiciary. He had the same mind that he had before he went on the bench, with the same human tendencies and the same human inclinations.

Most men would be unable to change their natural bent of mind in connection with an economic question because, as Chief Justice Hughes said in his book on the Supreme Court, those men are already of mature mind and mature convictions. He said further that they are likely to continue to have those convictions after they go on the bench, and we know that they do. We know that they have in the past, that they do now, and that they undoubtedly will in the future. So there is no charge against the integrity of any prospective judge on the ground that it is anticipated that with reference to economic predilections after he goes on the bench he will still be the same man that he was before he went there.

What I wished to discuss was the letter of the Chief Justice with reference to the cases on the docket.

I have never claimed that the Supreme Court at the present time has a clogged docket. I have claimed that in line with the President's proposal it is necessary that more cases be decided by the Court. Some years ago, when I was in the Supreme Court of the United States presenting a case, I was amazed to hear the Chief Justice reprimand, or at least admonish, counsel who cited the denial of the writ of certiorari as an argument in favor of his side of the question.

The Chief Justice said to the attorney, "Do you not know that the mere fact that certiorari has been denied is no indication that there is not error in the record?" As a matter of fact, it is true in numerous cases that certioraries are denied where there is error in the record. All of those who go to the Court are not economic royalists, either. I recall very well having a case there of a man who had worked for a railroad and had lost his leg. He was not an economic royalist. His case came up there at his request, and it was one among the hundreds where certiorari was denied.

Some time ago, in some casual reading on the subject of the cases that went before the Supreme Court, I came upon a case which went up from the State of California in the year 1915. The case was entitled Southern Pacific Co. against Pillsbury et al. It was a case brought by the widow of a railroad employee who was killed while at his post of duty. Application for certiorari in that case was denied by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of California had held that the man was engaged in interstate commerce and therefore could not recover under the California compensation law. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and certiorari was denied. Five years later, on October 4, 1920, the Supreme Court of the State of California rendered another opinion directly and unequivocally overruling the previous decision, as recorded in One Hundred and Eighty-first California, page 1; and it based its action on a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States 4 months before the denial of the original application for certiorari. It cited the case of Minneapolis-St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Winters (242 U. S. 353).

The California court also cited other Supreme Court opinions. For 5 years in the State of California, by reason of the denial of that writ of certiorari, men had been denied recovery under the State compensation law. Widows had been denied recovery. They were not economic royalists. They were employees, or widows of employees, working for the industrial companies of that State.

When the matter came to the Supreme Court the last time, they said:

> It is urged by petitioners that the denial of the petition for certiorari in the Ruth case should be regarded as authority—

That is the case where they had denied the recovery—> and therefore the decision of this Court should control in the case at bar. It seems clear that our decision in the Ruth case cannot be reconciled with that in the Winters case. * * * As we said in the Ruth case, no fixed rule for the construction of this statute has been laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States. But, as we have shown, that Court has since had occasion to construe the Federal Employees' Liability Act, and we must accept its declaration on the point in question as the settled law.

What happened during that period of 5 years? It may be true that the case was not one of great constitutional importance to all the people of the Nation. It was a case of great importance to the individuals who lived in the State of California, and who were injured while in the employment of their masters. It was a case of great importance to the widows whose husbands were killed, but under the system of choosing the cases of greatest importance, with a docket crowded with numerous applications, this one went the way of hundreds of others. So for 5 years, because the Supreme Court of the United States had denied the petition for certiorari, it was the law of California in cases of this character that widows could not recover, under California law, when their husbands were killed, and injured persons could not recover.

In that connection, I am reminded of the bill which I introduced in 1935, which was a very simple bill asking for more expeditious decision of constitutional questions.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I have been following the Senator's speech with close attention, and before he leaves the California case I should like to ask him a question. The able Senator indicated that the Supreme Court of California, after some 5 years, reversed its former decision.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Was not that done by reason of a constitutional amendment adopted by the State?

Mr. BLACK. It is directly stated in the opinion that it was done on account of the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States, citing three different Supreme Court opinions, one of which, by the way, was rendered 4 months before the original application for certiorari in the first case had been denied.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the subsequent case was not predicated upon any amendment to the constitution of the State of California?

Mr. BLACK. It was predicated upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and not upon any change in the laws of the State of California.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a petition for certiorari was presented to the United States Supreme Court after the original decision in the California case, and the United States Supreme Court refused to take jurisdiction under the writ of certiorari. It denied the writ, so that left the litigant without any remedy whatever.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The State court had decided that it could not award damages; and, notwithstanding the fact that the State court had declined to move in the matter, the Supreme Court of the United States denied the writ.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. And there is no way of knowing how many cases like that are embraced within the several hundred cases where writs of certiorari are applied for and denied without any written record being made.

Mr. BLACK. It is wholly impossible when, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes in his statement before the Judiciary Committee in 1935, about 700 applications for certiorari were disposed of during the previous year.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama when the writ was applied for?

Mr. BLACK. The first writ to which I referred?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In 1915.

Mr. GEORGE. Will not the Senator from Alabama say that that was before the present Chief Justice went upon the bench?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. GEORGE. And before Mr. Justice Roberts and several of the other Justices went upon the bench?

Mr. BLACK. Unquestionably. I may say to the Senator that it is not a question of individuals. The idea I have, and have had since long before the President's message came to this body, is that it is wholly and completely impossible for the judges, with the amount of work they have to do, to give to the individual applications for certiorari the close personal attention which is absolutely essential.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator knows, I take it, that the Court itself passes upon applications for review under acts that we have passed, and under acts of the Congress which authorized them to promulgate rules.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. The act was amended the last time in 1925.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator also knows that the Court does not grant the writ merely because error has been committed.

Mr. BLACK. That is what I stated in the beginning.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator also knows that a case in which the writ has been applied for has been tried by a jury either in a State court or in a Federal court, and that the right of appeal has been given to the litigant either to the highest court of resort of the State or to the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction over that particular area. Is not that true?

Mr. BLACK. This case came from the State supreme court.

Mr. GEORGE. And there had been a jury trial in the nisi prius court in California. Of course, I do not know anything about the facts of the case. Then there had been an appeal to the supreme court of the State.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. And the Supreme Court of the United States simply declined to grant the writ.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct. I may say to the Senator that the point I was making is that a study of the record will disclose that there are hundreds of other cases of a similar nature.

I take the position that there should be an adequate number of judges physically and mentally qualified to give fair and just consideration to the cases which come to the Court in order that when manifest error appears in the record, the case should not be sent back. I realize that under the law they select the cases which are the most important; but the case to which I have referred was a case of great importance to those who were engaged in the litigation, as are many other cases.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Alabama that I do not understand the rule to be that they select the case that is most important within itself. Of course, there are various qualifications, but I understand the general rule to be that the court will grant the writ if some principle of wide application is involved, whether the case be small or whether the case be large. It will also usually grant the writ if there are conflicting opinions of the circuit courts of appeal, for instance, for the purpose of harmonizing the judgments of those courts.

Mr. BLACK. I used the word "important" because I had read it only a few moments ago from a statement by Chief Justice Hughes before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEORGE. Important, however, in the sense I have indicated, I think the Senator will agree.

Mr. BLACK. Important because of the question of law involved and the desirability of having an authoritative decision by the tribunal having jurisdiction of an important question.

Mr. GEORGE. And when there are conflicting decisions.

Mr. BLACK. In a case involving liability to hundreds of thousands of injured persons there should be a sufficient number of judges who can devote enough time to the particular question so that the Court would never be compelled, on account of rush of business, to decline to look carefully into a manifest error in the record.

Mr. GEORGE. I would agree with the Senator on that point, but I do not see how the number of judges would necessarily determine the matter; because, after all, the addition of other judges would only delay final decision on the question of the granting of a writ.

Mr. BLACK. It would, if we assume that certain facts are true.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not assuming any facts to be true.

Mr. BLACK. That out of a thousand records all of the judges carefully read all of those records. That would be over three per day for each judge. I do not believe they do any such thing, when I consider the time necessary to be spent on the bench by the judges. For months they sit in the courtroom listening to the arguments of attorneys.

Mr. GEORGE. The point I am trying to make to the Senator is that he wants the United States Supreme Court to resolve itself substantially into a trial court of error—and I would have no objection to that if that is the function of the Court—to look through the entire record to see if the lower court has committed some error. But I think that under our system of establishing a Supreme Court, either in the Nation or in any State, the theory of our law is that there must be at some time a termination of litigation. If it is desirable to make the Supreme Court a simple court of error of fact or error of application of law, without regard to whether the question at issue is one of wide general application, or without regard to the fact that there may or may not be any conflict in the decisions of the Court itself, that is another question; but it seems to me the Senator is arguing for that point.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator the point I am arguing. I know, and the Senator is familiar with the fact, that the Supreme Court of the United States has passed on numerous cases of injured employees. Many such cases have come to the Court. I have no complaint that they have passed upon those cases. It is my own belief that when a case reaches that Court, if there are errors in the record, errors which might result in inflicting injury upon hundreds of others in the country, the case should be passed upon by the Court. In other words, I believe that would raise the case to the status of importance essential even under their own rules. But I also believe, and believed long before the President sent his message to this body, taking into consideration the number of judges on the bench, and considering the time they are required to listen to oral argument, knowing, as all of us do, that even when they go on vacations they carry literally trunkfuls of records, knowing the length of those records, that additional judges are needed, judges who are physically and mentally active enough to speed up the work of the Court instead of delaying it.

I do not concede that it would delay the work of the Court. I can understand fully that, insofar as those cases are concerned where arguments are made before the Court, and where the judges go back and sit together, it might sometimes be true that additional opinions would come into the conferences and might bring on delay.

But it is my judgment that a study of the records of the Court and a consideration of the cases they pass on will lead anyone irresistibly to the conclusion that the seven or eight hundred cases in which writs of certiorari have been denied cannot represent the unanimous opinion of all the nine judges after a complete study of the record before the certiorari was denied.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN of Michigan in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. On the question of delay necessarily resulting from the increase in the number of judges, I may say to the Senator that under the Constitution of the State of South Carolina, whenever a constitutional issue is before the court, unless the decision of the court is unanimous, the circuit judges of the State are called in, the court sits en banc to hear the arguments, and that means that 13 circuit judges are called in to sit with the 5 justices of the supreme court. It has never resulted in delay, and no question has ever been raised about the provision of the constitution. It has worked satisfactorily. Whenever a constitutional question is raised in the court, before the judges consider it, on the motion of two members of the supreme court all of the circuit judges are called in to sit with the justices of the supreme court. It has facilitated the decisions, and certainly the people of the State have never questioned the wisdom of the provision.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In line with what the Senator from South Carolina has just stated, in Kentucky under our constitution we are permitted to have only seven judges of the court of appeals, which is our court of last resort. The business of the court so increased that the legislature passed a law enabling the court of appeals to appoint commissioners to sit with the court to render decisions, and they, to all intents and purposes, are additional judges of the court of appeals. There are now two commissioners, practically making nine judges of our court of appeals. Not only has the increase of the number not tended to clog business but the business of the court has been greatly facilitated by the addition of these two commissioners, who have practically the same power as judges. The increase, and the system under which the judges operate, has given great satisfaction to the State.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his contribution.

In 1935 I introduced a bill in this body which would have required that where any inferior court set aside an act of Congress under an injunction or restraining order, the entire record should go to the Supreme Court within 10 days. I insisted that that was proper when Federal laws were held up and suspended by acts of inferior courts.

When the bill came before the Committee on the Judiciary three of the Supreme Court Justices appeared before the committee—Chief Justice Hughes, Justice Brandeis, and Justice Van Devanter. Those three opposed the bill. I insisted that unless such a law were enacted it would be impossible to know how many years would elapse before a ruling could be obtained on the legality of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Those Justices came before us and stated that the enactment of a law requiring that such a case should be brought to the Supreme Court within 10 days would bring about delay.

Let me read to the Senate the reason they gave for opposing the bill. Mr. Justice Hughes said:

> The next consideration that I would call to your attention is that this bill, we think, would impose a very heavy burden upon the Supreme Court.

Why would it impose a heavy burden upon the Supreme Court? All it required was that when the laws of Congress were held up by injunction, the cases should be brought up to the Supreme Court in 10 days; and yet we were met by a statement from the Chief Justice and the other two Justices saying that it would burden the court.

Let me read, Senators, what they said about it:

> I do not desire to emphasize the burden upon the Court. Our responsibility is very heavy and it is duly appreciated. We had last term about 1,000 cases that we disposed of. About 700 were applications for certiorari which were disposed of. A little short of 300, I think 293 to be exact, were disposed of on their merits. If we are to perform our duty of giving the careful consideration which is required to these very important subjects, we should not be burdened by cases that are not properly before us. They should not consume our time.

All my bill suggested was that when a law of Congress was restrained by injunction somewhere in the Nation, it should go up to the Supreme Court. The Justices of the Supreme Court came before the committee and pleaded that their burdens were so heavy that that bill should not be passed.

The closing argument which was made against it was as follows:

> I think that I have presented to you and have invited your consideration of the points which the members of the Court think of special importance, which are: First, we regard the bill as unnecessary; second, as dilatory in effect; and, third, as imposing an unnecessary and unwarranted burden upon the Court.

Since that time, 2 years have elapsed. The people near the Tennessee Valley Authority still are restrained by the very injunctions that were in existence at the time I was insisting before the Committee on the Judiciary that there should be the right to an immediate appeal. The Supreme Court of the United States was represented at the hearing by these three distinguished and eminent members who said that we should not impose on them the burden of deciding those cases. Why should not the burden be imposed if it was so light and so easy to handle as we would be led to believe it is today?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am happy to say to the Senator that decisions were handed down last Saturday in cases which had been brought by various power companies against the T. V. A. in the State court, and had been appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee. The supreme court of Tennessee in its decisions in those cases upheld the T. V. A. upon the facts; it upheld the contracts with cities, and the rights of cities to construct distribution systems and use power from the T. V. A. However, we are tied up by reason of an injunction issued by a district judge holding the act of Congress unconstitutional.

In this connection, Mr. President, let me say that on Saturday I received a telegram from Hon. Watkins Overton, mayor of Memphis, Tenn., indicating what the State supreme court had done. It is as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 27.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building:

Tennessee Supreme Court has just upheld contract between the city of Memphis and Tennessee Valley Authority; also our contract with Public Works Administration for grant to aid in construction of electric distribution system. Power company's application for an injunction was denied and bill dismissed. We are delighted, and again I thank you for your splendid assistance.

(Signed) WATKINS OVERTON, Mayor.

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Tennessee means much to the electric-light users of Memphis and of all our sections. I sincerely hope that the Federal courts will follow the lead of the Tennessee courts. More than 2 years ago Memphis voted 17 to 1 in favor of taking electricity from the Tennessee Valley Authority, but the matter has been tied up in the courts almost ever since.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will note that on March 25, 1935, 2 years ago, the Supreme Court, through its three distinguished members, objected to the passage of a bill which would have required an immediate decision on those cases, on the ground that it would unduly burden the court. Now 2 years have passed. The Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee has just decided a case; but, of course, before the decision becomes final and binding, I assume that the power companies will drag the case to Washington. They will also drag the case from New Orleans to Washington; and by that time perhaps the burdens of the Supreme Court will have been lightened to such an extent, if we give them some additional judges, that they will be able to decide upon these cases. I am in favor of giving them some relief from the burdens about which they talked on March 25, 1935, 2 years ago.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does not the Senator from Alabama think that possibly his bill might meet with a more favorable reception in view of the evidence of repentance on the part of the Supreme Court today? As evidence of possible reformation of the Court, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] pointed out that the Court reversed the Adkins case, which as late as last June, as I remember, they accepted not only in full in passing upon the constitutionality of the law of the State of New York, but in that case they accepted the Adkins decision to such an extent that they would not even consider the question whether the New York statute should be distinguished from the District of Columbia statute. In view of the fact that we have had this very wonderful exhibition of flip-flopping upon the part of the Supreme Court today, perhaps, if the Senator can induce the Justices of the Supreme Court to appear before the Committee on the Judiciary now, they may be willing to accept the bill which the Senator has in mind. I suggest that he reintroduce the bill and try to get the Justices to appear before the committee and see if this is a true repentance on their part or just a temporary repentance.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator from Washington that the bill has been reintroduced, and is again before the Committee on the Judiciary. I, of course, should welcome a letter from the Chief Justice writing me as an individual Senator that he now favors the bill, and that the Court's burdens are not so heavy as he thought they were.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why does not the Senator from Alabama ask the Chief Justice for a letter?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Why not let the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] ask him for one?

Mr. BLACK. It might be better to request some other Member of this body to ask him for a letter. I might get one then.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Be sure not to request a member of the Committee on the Judiciary to ask for a letter, because members of the Committee on the Judiciary, which is supposed to know, apparently are not eligible to receive word from the Supreme Court about matters pending before it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, what I really rose to do was, in view of the very clear exposition made by my good friend, the Senator from Tennessee, to call attention to the fact that hearings have been denied on cases which were of vital and supreme importance to individuals concerned. I have cited a case where certiorari had been denied, and 5 years thereafter the supreme court of the State where the case was originally decided was compelled to retreat from the position it had taken because of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Just think how many women and children since 1923, when the Adkins case was decided, have been denied the benefits of an act of Congress fixing minimum wages in the District of Columbia simply by reason of the fact that at that time Mr. Justice McReynolds, Mr. Justice Sutherland, Mr. Justice Butler, and Mr. Justice Van Devanter thought there was no rational doubt that the act of Congress was unconstitutional. They still had no rational doubt last June. Now all that rational doubt has disappeared, and the act is constitutional, and the people of the District of Columbia now are entitled to be protected by the act passed by Congress governing minimum wages in the District of Columbia; but, because of the rational doubt these men entertained in 1923, the people of the District of Columbia have been denied the benefit of this act for 14 years.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Senator to yield in order that I may point out the situation so far as my own State is concerned.

In 1913 we passed a minimum-wage law for women. Oregon, our neighboring State, at the same time passed a law of almost precisely the same kind. Our law was never brought up to the Supreme Court, but the law of our neighboring State of Oregon was, and it was declared to be unconstitutional. Mr. Justice Brandeis had worked on the brief in the Oregon case, and therefore did not sit in the case; but since five out of the nine judges of the Supreme Court in 1916, as I remember the date, believed that our law was constitutional, clearly it was constitutional. Therefore we had a constitutional statute from 1913 to 1923. Then our law became unconstitutional because five out of the nine Justices held the District of Columbia statute, which was the same in important particulars as ours, to be unconstitutional. So from 1923 to 1937 our law was unconstitutional. Today the Supreme Court, making another change back, has declared our law to be constitutional.

We start out with our law and have 10 years of constitutionality, 14 years of unconstitutionality, and now I am wondering how long our law is going to remain constitutional. Yet there are many persons in the country who raise their hands in holy horror when we talk about amending the Constitution in any other manner than by having two-thirds of the Congress present the question for action by at least three-fourths of the States, and they criticize the President in his position because they say he desires to take away from the people the right to amend the Constitution.

The law in question, so far as my State is concerned, was for 10 years constitutional, 13 years unconstitutional, and now is constitutional again without Congress ever passing upon it, and without the State legislatures or State conventions ever passing on it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, because he is making an interesting and able speech; but on that point I ask the Senator to permit me to make a statement for a couple of minutes.

I seldom listen to the radio; but a month or more ago I was listening, and I heard a statement on the radio, but did not know at the time who made it. It was a learned speech, delivered with considerable force, and this phonographic memory of mine recorded the following sentence:

> The great question is, Shall we change the Constitution to fit the views of the Supreme Court, or shall we add new blood to the Supreme Court to fit the Constitution?

So impressed was I with that statement that the next day I caused my secretary to run it down, and found it was a speech delivered by the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I have searched in vain for a sentence that would more properly lay before the country the issue that he put in one sentence in that speech.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I beg leave to interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that the result of what I have pointed out, and what the Senator from Indiana has pointed out with reference to the changed attitude of the Supreme Court upon these questions, certainly should not relieve any Member of the Senate in the future who might be accused of being guilty of inconsistency of any embarrassment in a matter of this kind?

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator from Washington is absolutely correct.

Mr. President, the only point I desired to discuss was with reference to the docket of the Supreme Court and the effect of the addition of Judges so as to make it possible for each case to have that calm and deliberate consideration which it is entitled to have when it reaches that Court. I do not believe that it can receive it today. I do not believe that each case has received such treatment. I do not say that in criticism of the Justices. I think that they have done their very best; that they have worked longer hours frequently perhaps than many of them should. It is clear that when they take hundreds of records with them on their summer vacations they are studying the records with reference to certiorari; but the statements which have just been made are only other illustrations of the truthfulness of the contention that our Constitution is not the Constitution exactly as it was written over 149 years ago; it is the Constitution that the Judges have made it from time to time.

For over a hundred years it was constitutional to have an income tax. Then, suddenly, in the twinkling of an eye, it became unconstitutional. We were told that an income tax was likely to lead to socialism and destruction and communism, although for 100 years we had operated upon the basis that it was constitutional. The Supreme Court said it would correct a century of error, a century of unconstitutional living on our part.

Then, as stated with reference to other cases by the distinguished leader on this side, the senior Senator from Arkansas, when we think of the fact that it has been and is now unconstitutional to have a 10-hour day for workers in the State of New York but it is entirely constitutional to have a 10-hour day for workers in the State of Oregon, we can see the absurd extreme to which the Court has gone with reference to its interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. From 1922 until a few hours ago it was unconstitutional for a State to have a minimum-wage law for the protection of women and children from oppressive conditions pertaining to their employment. Now, within the last few hours, it has become entirely constitutional to have such a law; and yet the Constitution has not been touched. So that what Mr. Justice Hughes said is in a sense correct, namely, that the Constitution is what the Judges say it is; and it will be very difficult for those who have been howling their heads off against any criticism of the decisions of the Supreme Court to justify their action when the condition that has just been pointed out is made entirely clear. Without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t", the District of Columbia statute which was held unconstitutional by the Court in 1922, has become entirely constitutional on this good day in 1937.

Mr. BLACK. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is some doubt as to that, for the reason that a number of years ago the Court held unconstitutional the minimum-wage law of the District of Columbia, and since that time it has been illegal to enforce it. Today, in an entirely different case, arising from a different jurisdiction, the Court has held that it was wrong in the other case. What is the law in the District of Columbia? Do we have a minimum-wage law in the District of Columbia or do we not? Will we have to reenact another law?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, yes, we have a minimum-wage law in the District of Columbia, because the Supreme Court, time and again, has said that it does not veto and strike down an act of Congress; that, as between the rights of the parties involved in the litigation, the Constitution rules rather than the act of Congress. So the law lives.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, but the Court has already spoken, and when the Court speaks that is final on a case. It has already said, like the oracle at Delphi, that that law in this District is unconstitutional; and I insist that we will probably have to reenact that law.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is the question that I wanted to propound. That law having been dead for 14 years by a decision of the Supreme Court, can it revive it and bring it back to life by a touch of its hand after 14 years of burial?

Mr. BLACK. The question is whether or not they can resurrect it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether they can resurrect it or whether we will have to do it here.

Mr. MINTON. It was not dead, but only slept.

Mr. BARKLEY. How long will it have to sleep before it is dead?

Mr. MINTON. So long as the courts have a spell over it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in all frankness and fairness, when the Supreme Court rendered the decision that the statute of Congress fixing minimum wages for certain classes of workers in the District of Columbia was invalid and unconstitutional, the law became inoperative. It is very doubtful to my mind whether, with that decision still in force, and merely admitted to be wrong in another case involving the statute of a different jurisdiction, the recent decision revitalizes the statute of the District of Columbia. In other words, it may be true that Congress will be compelled to pass again an act that it had the right all the time to pass, an act which, after many years, it is now conceded was valid from the beginning. But it is by no means certain that the decision in the Washington case would put life back into the statute which was invalidated in the Adkins case. What the Court has done now is to admit that its decision holding the District of Columbia statute unconstitutional was wrong and it should be corrected; but it has no jurisdiction in that particular case. The case in which the District of Columbia statute was involved was a case going up from the District of Columbia. It does not seem to me that a case going up from Washington could revive a statute applicable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, if they struck it a mortal blow at that time and killed it——

Mr. ROBINSON. New legislation would be required.

Mr. BLACK. It would still be dead and could not be revived.

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless some way can be found to review the Adkins case, and in that case make the correction as to the decision directly affecting the District of Columbia law.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the decision in the Adkins case would be the law of that case, but the statute which the Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional then, and which it now says is constitutional, is still the law?

Mr. ROBINSON. If a new case should arise under the District of Columbia statute, and someone should seek to carry out the District of Columbia statute, it would depend upon the frame of mind of the Supreme Court at the time that case reached the Court. If five of the members of the Court were still of the mind that the statute was valid, it would be validated, but, in the meantime, if a change should occur and only four of them should be of that mind and five of them should be of another mind, we would again have the statute invalidated.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question in reference to the minimum-wage decision in the case arising in the State of New York. Is it not true that in some cases that issue will have to be brought again to the Supreme Court as a result of an effort to enforce the law in New York?

Mr. BLACK. When a State law has been stricken down, and the Court has held that particular law unconstitutional in that State, it would be difficult to secure the conviction of anyone violating it. How would the citizen know what to do? Of course, it should be considered that it might be held to be perfectly constitutional to have a minimum-wage law in one State and not in another State, because the Court, as the Senator will recall, has already held that it is within the Constitution to have a law fixing maximum hours of labor in the State of Oregon and unconstitutional to have such a law in New York.

Mr. BYRNES. The question I wanted to ask the Senator is how this decision will affect the situation in Arizona, New York, and other States, where minimum-wage laws have been declared unconstitutional?

Mr. BLACK. For many years we have had a situation where the Court has held it unconstitutional to have regulation of hours of labor in the State of New York, but constitutional to have it in Oregon and Utah. It may depend on the climate of a given State. It might be perfectly healthy to work 10 hours a day in New York, but injurious to the health to have to work 10 hours a day in Oregon. The same principle might be held to apply with reference to minimum wages.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is it not clear that there is something in the decision of today which will resurrect the New York case? The New York case was decided on the basis that the New York Supreme Court had declared the law unconstitutional and therefore the Supreme Court of the United States, even though the Supreme Court of New York based its decision upon the Adkins case, had no right to go into the merits of the controversy so far as the New York statute was concerned. The Senator will remember the rather bitter criticism by Chief Justice Hughes in his dissenting opinion where he said:

> This involves an important public question, and I think the Supreme Court should pass upon the question.

There is nothing in the decision today to indicate the five members of the Supreme Court are still not of the opinion that the Supreme Court of the State of New York, accepting the Adkins case declaring the law to be unconstitutional, has the right to go into the question of the constitutionality of the statute itself.

Mr. BLACK. I have not read the opinion. I shall have to read it. I shall have to be very clear before I become convinced that four members of the Court have changed their minds.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Supreme Court of the State of New York based its opinion on the Adkins case, as to which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared a change of mind, so that the basis of the New York State decision has been changed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. With reference to the District of Columbia act, is it not the situation that the Supreme Court, when it passes on one of these cases from a constitutional standpoint, does not veto the act in the sense that the President vetoes an act of Congress, but it refuses to enforce it? It says, in effect, "the law in this particular case before the Court is not applicable in view of the Constitution, and we will not enforce it." That statute remains on the statute books, if it has not been repealed, and is just as much a statute today as it was in 1923.

It is true, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] suggested, that if another effort were made to enforce the statute in the District of Columbia, a case involving it might go to the Supreme Court, and if the Court has changed in the meantime, either by having six new Judges added or otherwise, it might change its mind and again hold that statute unconstitutional.

Consequently the decision is not binding. So far as we are concerned that statute is still on the books, and all that has been decided by the Supreme Court in the particular case before it, Adkins against Children's Hospital, was that they would not enforce the statute in that case. However, the law is still on the books, I assume; and if the enforcing officers care to do so, they may undertake to enforce it unless the Supreme Court of the United States in another case should go back and reaffirm its previous holding.

It seems to me it is fair to the Court to state that the Supreme Court as constituted today is not the Supreme Court as constituted when it passed on the Adkins case in 1922. There have been changes on the Court since then. It is also fair to state that all the laws which have been passed upon by the Supreme Court are not identical in their wording or in their terms.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. On the precise point raised by the Senator from Texas about the different kinds of statutes, it must be recognized that the statute in the State of Washington, which has been upheld today, was a harder statute to declare constitutional than was the New York statute, because of the fact that the New York statute was written after the Adkins case was decided, and an attempt was made in enacting that statute to meet the objections which the Supreme Court had to the District of Columbia Act, as set forth in the Adkins case.

Mr. BLACK. Let me ask the Senator a question in that connection. Since the decision today and since various other arguments have been heard, is not the Senator now convinced absolutely that Chief Justice Hughes was right when he said the Constitution is what the Judges say it is?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. The only thing that is worrying me is how long the Washington State statute will remain constitutional. We have had three different changes in the matter. I think the people in the State of Washington are entitled to know just how long this new order of things will continue and how long their law will remain constitutional.

The fact is that after the Oregon case arose, the authorities in the State of Washington thought their law was constitutional and started to enforce it, and began to arrest people for violation of it, and obtained some convictions. The law was recognized as constitutional, and we went ahead in the regular way. After the Adkins decision the authorities in the State of Washington, reading the Washington law and reading the District of Columbia law, said, "Certainly our law is unconstitutional." The Washington law had never been before the Supreme Court until that time. We were resting upon the Oregon decision. But when the Supreme Court held the District of Columbia law unconstitutional, the authorities in the State of Washington simply stopped attempting to enforce it, and it has been a dead letter since that time. There has been no attempt to enforce the law since 1922 or 1923. I presume we will start to build up machinery again for enforcing it, and I am wondering if our Governor may not ask me to give him some opinion as to how long our law will remain constitutional under our present system.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should like to know what answer the Senator will make to that question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The answer will be, "I do not know."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, all of this is but a clear illustration of the fact that we live under a Constitution and that the Constitution is what the Judges say it is at the time they last say it. It is a further illustration of the truthfulness of the statement made by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes in his book on the Supreme Court that even the laws which we enact in their final analysis are not what we say they are, but what the Judges say they are.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the appeal of my good friend from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in connection with the Bill of Rights. I am sure that he was sincere and genuine in the apprehensions which he expressed.

There has been no distinct line of demarkation in the opinions of the courts of this country on the Bill of Rights. There has been no distinct line of demarcation on cases with reference to free speech. There has been no line of demarcation clearly separating the Justices of the Supreme Court on cases affecting freedom of religious worship. There has been a clear line of cleavage—as clear as that between the Mississippi and the Missouri as they run on down toward the Gulf—on all cases relating to property decisions and human decisions. That line has been as clear as the line between Governor Landon's party at the time of the last election and President Roosevelt's party. That line has been as clear as the line between President Woodrow Wilson's party and Mr. Harding's party.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe the able Senator from Alabama has announced something that should have been announced before this time. The antagonists of the President's plan—and they are able and sincere, and they shout from the housetops with eager and earnest and eloquent arguments—have asserted that the Bill of Rights is in danger; but the able Senator from Alabama has pointed out that there never has been in the history of the Republic any line of cleavage on the question of the Bill of Rights, with the possible exception of what might have been said in the Dred Scott decision. But although from the foundation of our Government to this day no Justice of the Supreme Court has presumed to interfere with the guaranties and immunities of citizens set up by the Bill of Rights, the able antagonists of the proposal shrewdly hide behind religion and say, "Your religion will be overthrown if the President's bill passes. Citizens will be drafted into an army." They take refuge behind religion, and behind the skirts of women do they find arguments against this bill; whereas the able Senator from Alabama has performed a great service in pointing out that a remote excursion of the imagination does not find any cleavage on the question of personal rights, liberty, and free speech in this country.

It is on economic questions that the cleavage appears, and always has appeared. Those who say, "We fear that the President's bill may overthrow our freedom of religion; we fear that the President's bill may destroy the parochial schools", either have a leaky brainpan or assume that the Nation has a leaky brainpan when they argue such folly. [Laughter.]

Nobody honestly fears that the President's bill will destroy anybody's right of religion. Some of the opponents of the bill fear that it may destroy somebody's right to a profit which he illegally extracts. That is their real fear; but are they going to say, "Mr. President, my profits, or the profits of some industry, may be imperiled, and it may be required to pay more taxes?" Certainly not. That is the real reason why they are opposed to this bill. It is sham and folly, and will be so designated in the years to come, for anybody to pretend that the proposed new Judges, as soon as they take the Bench, will overthrow somebody's religion.

I think the able Senator from Alabama has performed a distinct public service in pointing out that the opponents of the President's proposal have set up a straw man when they contend that the new Judges, if any, will overthrow and trench upon somebody's personal liberty, when nobody has ever presumed to say that there was a cleavage of opinion in the Supreme Court as to the privileges and immunities guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and the other parts of the Constitution.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator from Arizona for his contribution to the discussion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. In this connection it seems appropriate to point out that, among the thirty-odd amendments to the Constitution that have been proposed in the two Houses during the present session of Congress, there are a number which give the Congress itself unlimited power to repass its legislation notwithstanding a decision by the Supreme Court that the legislation is unconstitutional; and in none of the resolutions which have been presented and which have come to my attention has any distinction been made as to the so-called Bill of Rights. In other words, under the form of the resolutions as proposed, Congress by two-thirds vote could reenact any law it saw fit to pass by a majority vote, even though that law might involve questions pertaining to freedom of worship, freedom of speech, or freedom of the press.

That is to say, those who fear that an increase in the membership of the Supreme Court in order to reflect in its membership more modern views and principles would endanger the security which our citizens enjoy under the Bill of Rights, themselves propose to give the Congress the power to exercise judicial authority, and say that it would be constitutional to repass any law which Congress once passes, even though conceivably that act might involve freedom of religion, freedom of the press, freedom of speech, or some of the other rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. In other words, they think that a mere increase in the membership of the Supreme Court would endanger the Bill of Rights, but they do not see the slightest danger in giving Congress power to pass any bill that it chooses to pass.

I am not saying that Congress would pass a bad bill, although I have the suspicion that sometimes in the past we have done so; but the amendments to which I am now referring—one of which was offered by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]—would give Congress unlimited power to pass an act involving any question, and conceivably any deprivation of rights which could in the first instance secure a majority vote, and in the second instance secure a two-thirds vote.

Of course, the only answer to that is that Senators and Representatives are too devoted to the sublime principles embraced in the Bill of Rights to endanger it in one degree; but there might be a suspicion even in the Supreme Court, and that suspicion might extend to other spheres, that it is far more dangerous, so far as the Bill of Rights is concerned, to give Congress the power to pass any statute that it pleases, provided it can secure a two-thirds vote, than it is to increase the membership of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLACK. I fully agree with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield just on that point so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator from Arkansas realize that the proposal in reference to the amendment to which he has referred is merely to lay before the people of this country the question whether they wish to change their Constitution and vest that power in Congress, and not a question of approving the passage of any acts to which he has referred?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator surely does not mean to say that the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the able Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], who joined in offering this amendment, are practicing that sort of thing—that they are offering to amend the Constitution when they are not in sympathy with their own amendment.

Of course, Congress has no power to amend the Constitution. All it can do is to submit an amendment, and all this joint resolution does is exactly what every other joint resolution relating to a constitutional amendment does, all that thirty-odd others do, namely, provide for submission of the proposition to the States. But I do not assume that any Senator in order to escape the issues arising in the bill which has caused all this controversy would propose an amendment to the Constitution in which he himself did not believe. If he did so, he would impeach his own good faith.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield just for a further comment?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I do not presume to speak for the Senator from Montana, but for myself I say that I am perfectly willing, in the light of the statements made on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere that the overwhelming sentiment in this country is in favor of a new interpretation of the Constitution, to let the people of the country pass on that question, and in the only proper, legitimate way provided by the Constitution, which is by voting on an amendment, and not by the kind of a proposal which the Senator from Arkansas favors, to add members to the Court in order to bring the result about in an altogether improper way.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Senator understands that under our Constitution there is no way by which the people may be given a vote on either an act of Congress or on an amendment to the Constitution. The only way in which the Constitution may be amended is by submission of proposed amendments to the States for ratification either in conventions or by the legislatures of the States. The people do not vote on them under any circumstances directly, and, of course, there never has been a referendum on a congressional statute. I understand fully that the Senator from Nebraska means to say that consideration of the subject by a convention or by the legislature is a passing upon the subject by the people of a State, but that, of course, is not entirely accurate.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, let us examine that. When the matter of voting on the repeal of the prohibition amendment was submitted to the States for decision, by the convention method, in my own State of Nebraska we voted in the election for one of two candidates in every district in the State, one candidate having pledged himself to vote for repeal, the other candidate having pledged himself to vote against repeal. So that for all practical purposes we had the identical matter of a referendum of the people of the State on the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was a representative system of determining the matter, just as there is in the Congress. In the Senate, particularly since Senators have been elected by popular vote, and always from the beginning of the Government in the House there have been Representatives of the people, and the Members of Congress are just as much representatives of their people as are members of the State legislatures, or delegates to conventions. The Senator raises a distinction without a very great difference.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think the original question submitted by the Senator from Nebraska should be permitted to pass without more consideration, and I desire to say that I am sorry that it was the Senator from Nebraska who asked the question, or made the statement, because, as the Members of the Senate know, I not only have a very affectionate feeling for that Senator, but also very great respect for his integrity, and I know that in this particular fight he is entirely sincere. But I think that in his question he voiced not his own ideas upon the subject but he voiced the absolute insincerity of the great mass of the opposition to the President's proposal.

When they talk about an amendment they say, "We want a constitutional amendment submitted to the States; we want it submitted to the people of the country." The question which the Senator asked in reference to the argument of the Senator from Arkansas was whether the Senator from Arkansas did not realize that it was simply a matter of submitting the matter, not a matter of adopting it.

The forces of entrenched wealth in this country, which have stopped every bit of progress we have ever sought, and which are opposed to the President's proposal at the present time, do not want an amendment, and the same forces in this country which are today raising funds for the purpose of spreading propaganda against the President's proposal would raise funds for the purpose of defeating a constitutional amendment. I think that unwittingly, and not representing his own point of view or his own thought upon the subject, the Senator from Nebraska has expressed the insincerity of those forces in this country in this fight.

Mr. MINTON rose.

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for just a moment?

Mr. BLACK. I have promised to yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to make just one comment?

Mr. MINTON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. Does not the Senator from Washington have confidence that the people of this country can determine whether they want to strike down the limitations in the Constitution as they have stood, and vest additional powers in Congress, in spite of anything that entrenched wealth and greed and "defeatist" lawyers and others may be able to say to them? Does he not show a lack of confidence in the integrity and judgment of the people of the country?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have entire confidence in the people of this country; but I know, and the Senator from Nebraska knows, and everyone else here knows, that a constitutional amendment is not going to be submitted to the people, it is not going to be submitted through the medium of constitutional conventions in the States.

Mr. BURKE. Why not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If we submit a constitutional amendment at this time it will necessarily go to the State legislatures, and we know what has happened to the child-labor amendment in the State legislatures for the last 14 years.

The Senator from Nebraska asks "Why not?" I answer, because of the fact that there are not a sufficient number of States which have permanent machinery for constitutional conventions to make it possible to put such a matter before them until 1939.

Mr. BURKE. How many of the States had their machinery for constitutional conventions when the repeal of the prohibition amendment was submitted? Not one. And now there are 16 States which have the machinery all set up, and there is no reason for thinking that the other legislatures could not be called into special session, if necessary, particularly in view of the suggestion made that the expense of submitting this matter to State conventions, and setting up the constitutional conventions in the States, should be borne out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think it is generally conceded that the State legislatures which have refused to ratify the child-labor amendment certainly are not going to ratify an amendment which would go further than the child-labor amendment. I think the prevention of child labor is a subject toward which there is more of a feeling of friendliness than any other issue which might be presented. If we have not been able to get the legislatures to ratify the child-labor amendment, if the forces within the States which have used the old arguments before the legislatures have been successful, why should we hope to get action on one of the suggested amendments? I heard over the radio 2 or 3 weeks ago one of the great lawyers of the State of New York arguing with the mayor of the city of New York and employing precisely the same old arguments that have been heard through the years. If the legislatures were not willing to ratify the child-labor amendment, certainly they would not be willing to pass laws to set up the machinery for constitutional conventions. The forces against progress can control the legislatures on that question in the same way in which they can control them on the subject of child labor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BLACK. I have promised to yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WHEELER. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that the Congress itself can set up its own machinery.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. On that question I think the Senator from Montana is totally and absolutely mistaken, and I do not believe there is the slightest semblance of possibility of getting such a thing through.

Mr. WHEELER. Article V of the Constitution provides for conventions. The Constitution having provided for conventions there can be no question—and some of the ablest lawyers in this country have so held—that the Congress has the right to set up the machinery by which to carry out the provision of the Constitution. One of the conservative Justices of the Supreme Court has said that the time may be fixed, and that there can be no question about Congress having the right to set up the machinery. There cannot be any doubt about that.

The child-labor amendment has been discussed. The Senator from Washington knows, and I know that some of the churches of the country have objected to that amendment because of the fact that the amendment provided certain things which frightened some of the church people of the country, and because the age was fixed at 18 years. A law can be enacted which to all intents and purposes will effectively stop child labor in this country, and it can be held constitutional.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I remember that I introduced such a bill a few years ago, and tried to interest Senators in it; but everyone said it would not work, and that there was no use in spending time on it.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know to whom the Senator spoke about it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Those who themselves have introduced similar bills said that about it.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not one of those who said that, and I have introduced such a bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; the Senator is not one who said that.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no question that an amendment can be adopted which will effectively stop child labor in this country; and if Senators and Representatives want to get behind it, they can have such an amendment adopted.

I am going back to the provision of the Constitution we were discussing a moment ago. I submit that there is no lawyer of any prominence in this country who will say to the Senator from Washington that the Congress itself cannot designate the election machinery by which those elections shall be held in the Senator's State, and it will not be necessary to apply to the legislature.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not know what the Senator from Montana would consider a "lawyer of any prominence." I have satisfied myself that it is absolutely impossible. It is a fundamental rule of law that a constitution is not a self-executing document; that statutes must be enacted to carry out the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course; and the Congress enacts laws to carry out the provisions of the Constitution. It is not the States but the Congress which does that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. We cannot enact laws for the purpose of regulating and controlling elections within the States.

Mr. WHEELER. It is perfectly absurd to say that we cannot. Who drafted the Constitution? To whom does it belong? If the Senator will read the Constitution he will find that it does not say that the States must carry out the provisions of the Constitution.

A constitutional provision which calls for constitutional conventions of necessity implies that the Congress of the United States has power to provide the means to carry out the provision.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana, through the Senator from Alabama, yield to let me ask one further question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to have the Senator from Washington state for the RECORD what he conceives to be the pernicious, selfish, degraded interests in the State of Nebraska that prevailed upon the one-house legislature which has recently come from the people of Nebraska by virtue of the amendment sponsored by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], providing for a one-house legislature, a few days ago to refuse to give its consent to the ratification of the child-labor amendment. What were those pernicious influences?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In answer to the Senator from Nebraska I will say that many things happen to those in political life in Nebraska that I cannot understand, because one of the things I have read so often, and that I cherish so much, and used so successfully in my campaign, was the definition of the New Deal written by the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I now present the Senator with an additional copy.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will read it again. If I cannot understand the junior Senator from Nebraska, knowing him and liking him as I do, how can he expect me to look into the minds of the legislators of Nebraska?

Mr. BURKE. That is a very good answer.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Nebraska has spoken about amending the Constitution, and he is one of the great exponents of that theory of dealing with our important problems. Now his suggestion that the Constitution be amended has been met by the proposition that we do not need to amend the Constitution, but we need to amend the Court. In other words, everybody has said that in declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional the Court has been usurping the power of Congress to legislate.

Suppose in order to meet the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Adkins case we had submitted an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the enactment of a minimum-wage law, and while that amendment was wandering around through the mazes of ratification in the States along with the child-labor amendment, suppose the Supreme Court had come along with its decision of today and held that after all we could have minimum-wage laws in this country. Then there would have been no need for the amendment, and we should have been in the ridiculous situation of trying to amend a Constitution that we did not need to amend.

Mr. WHEELER. There would not be any need of packing the Court, either.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is mistaken about that. The mere fact that the Court today held that a law was constitutional would not be any reason why we should not have proceeded with our amendment, because it might hold differently tomorrow, or next week, or next month, or next year.

Mr. WHEELER. That is no reason why you should pack the Court, either.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator seems to be very much disturbed about packing the Court. He has been running for Senator from the State of Montana for a number of years, and has been getting elected. I myself think the people have been very wise to reelect him. I approve their choice.

Mr. CONNALLY. Now? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I still do, even though the Senator has made an error in this case. But why has the Senator been elected in Montana? He has been trying to pack the Senate with persons who believe in the views he expresses.

Mr. WHEELER. I have been unfortunate at times.

Mr. BLACK. That is what the Senator has been trying to do; and he told the people he believed in certain things. There were certain political things that he stood for and that he is going to fight for. He believed in minimum wages and he believed in minimum hours. He believes in all those things. Then, the first time he gets a plan that will work, it frightens him, just like boys who are going through a graveyard are frightened.

State judges are elected in almost every part of the Union. In my State the supreme court judges are elected. I do not know whether they are elected in the Senator's State or not. I presume, if so, the voters pack the court. I presume they pack it on the side the Senator likes or the side he does not like; I do not know which.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that not only do the people in my State elect judges but I have gone out in the campaign and defeated some Democratic candidates for judges because of the fact that I did not like their views.

Mr. BLACK. Fine!

Mr. WHEELER. So far as my being afraid is concerned, I do not think anybody in my State has ever accused me of being afraid, and I am not afraid now. I am not afraid of being denied some patronage by Mr. Farley, and I am not afraid of being denied patronage or pap from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. I know that when the time comes, the people of my State will stand behind my views on this question just as they have stood behind me in many other fights I have made in the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is very unfortunate, and in my judgment has been since the beginning, that a great many persons talk about somebody trying to use patronage, or question the motives of those on the other side. It is most unfortunate. In many instances it is wholly indefensible, wholly inexcusable, and without the slightest foundation in fact. I regret that my good friend has seen fit to use that method.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, and yield the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no. I know that the Senator would not be guided by anything of that kind; but I say it is unfortunate that the Postmaster General should go around the country making speeches as he has made them. It is unfortunate, in my judgment, that men who are on the Government pay roll should go into my State and at public expense go around to the labor unions and urge them to send protests down to me on this proposal. It is unfortunate, in my judgment, that men who are on the Government pay roll should go around into the various States and urge farm organizations to send protests to their Senators with reference to this proposed legislation. I say that is wrong. That is not in accordance with democratic principles. It is not in accordance with good government. I am sure the Senator from Alabama will agree with me that those things are not right and should not be done.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, so far as Mr. Farley making speeches is concerned, he is an American citizen, and has as much right to make a speech as has the Senator from Montana or the Senator from Alabama. I deny that because a man is Postmaster General or because he holds any other position he is deprived of the privilege of making a speech as any other American citizen might make one. What is it, because a man becomes Postmaster General or because he is an officer in a party, that would deprive him of the right to go out and use his voice to speak in favor of that in which he believes? If that is wrong, why should not a Senator remain silent? Why should not his tongue be stilled? I do not subscribe to any such doctrine.

Mr. President, so far as all the talk about patronage is concerned, let those who say it prove it. Let those who charge that there is an effort made to buy a Senator or a Congressman by patronage prove it.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. For 14 months I was not even consulted about any appointment in my State. Immediately after the President submitted his proposal I was called by a high official——

Mr. BLACK. Who?

Mr. HOLT. I will tell the Senator in a moment—an official in the Department of Justice—Judge Keenan, of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLACK. Let us hear what he said.

Mr. HOLT. He very generously wanted to know if I was interested in suggesting someone for Federal judge in West Virginia. He talked about the present administration. He did not say, "I am going to give you a judge for your vote." I hope he did not think I was that dumb, but I knew what he meant and he knew what he meant. He meant if I went along on the President's proposal, I would get a judge.

Mr. BLACK. I would be ashamed to rise on the floor of the Senate and admit that I had a reputation that would justify anybody in thinking I could be bribed with a Federal judgeship. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I know Joe Keenan. He is a man of intelligence. I consider him to be a man of integrity. In the first place I think he is too intelligent to have tried any such thing. In the next place I have too much respect for his honesty and his patriotism as a citizen to believe he would try to do such a thing.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding about my viewpoint, I would consider that a man who made a proposal to me upon the theory that he could get my vote by giving me a job of any kind in the world, was trying to bribe me. I would not wait a week or 2 weeks or 3 weeks, but I would go to the Senate or to a grand jury and raise the question.

It is easy to talk and make all kinds of intimations and insinuations. Why is it necessary in debating a very vital and great question affecting the people of the country to descend to any such low and base plane? Why is it not possible for us to consider these matters upon their merits?

I raise no question about the sincerity, for instance, of my good friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], a man whom I greatly admire, whose integrity is above reproach, who, in my judgment, has taken the position he occupies because of the fact that he honestly believes in it. I raise no question about the sincerity and integrity of my good friend from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I praise him for following the course dictated by his own conscience, let it lead him wheresoever it may.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. If Mr. Keenan, of the Department of Justice, should telephone the Senator from Alabama to ask him about some gentlemen to be considered for appointment as judge in Alabama, would the Senator from Alabama believe that he was being bribed?

Mr. BLACK. If I thought so, I would not talk about it over the radio.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want to say that I resented it at that time. I made a statement that very day. Knowing some in the Department of Justice groups as I do know them, I had the conversation on the telephone taken down, both ends of it.

I want to say that the situation is such over the country that the Senator from Alabama knows and the whole country knows that as long as one does not go along with the national administration he is going to be punished, and Mr. Farley himself at Chapel Hill threatened punishment to those who would not go along.

Mr. BLACK. I read Mr. Farley's speech and I saw no such statement. I deny that the country knows any such thing. So far as I am personally concerned I wish to state that I would have no respect for anybody who would try to use any such influence, and I have less respect for the man who would permit it to be offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think the country is worked up into a frenzy over whether or not Senators have any patronage?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLACK. There is a real genuine vital issue involved in this question which is entitled to be considered on its merits. Why is it necessary to attempt to bring in all kinds of intimations and insinuations in order to discuss a matter affecting the American people in connection with their constitutional form of government? There is ample argument to be made on a high, clean, and wholesome basis on either side of the controversy. I do not dispute that.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. Who was the first man to bring this issue down to a partisan basis?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know who was the first man who brought it down to a partisan basis. I do not understand, so far as I am concerned, that it is on a partisan basis. If I were against it, I would vote against it. I am for it, and therefore shall vote for it.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator disagree with the Postmaster General when he says it is a partisan issue?

Mr. BLACK. The Postmaster General has a right as a citizen to have his views, even though the distinguished Senator from West Virginia may disagree with them and might want to criticize them. As a matter of fact, he seems to want to criticize almost everybody recently, and the Postmaster General, of course, comes within the broad sweep of his criticism.

Mr. President, there are vital issues in which the people are interested. There are some who are really genuinely disturbed over the proposal that has been made by the President. They are entitled to have the matter presented to them upon a fair, clean, honorable basis of argument. First, is it within the Constitution? Second, if it is within the Constitution, is it good policy? That is the sole issue in this controversy. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no doubt that it is within the Constitution. Certainly I am convinced that those wise men who framed that great document intended to give the Congress a check upon the Court whenever that Court should get so far away from the viewpoint of the people as the man whom my friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said was getting away from the viewpoint of the people of Montana when he was campaigning against him for judge.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] directed an insinuation against "Judge" Keenan. I am sure he meant Joseph B. Keenan.

We have our differences in the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. We fight hard and faithfully, and I think we are to be commended for it. I have grown to love each member of it. Only last Saturday none other than my able friend the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], with whom I associate from day to day, and for whom my esteem grows higher daily, although an opponent of the President's bill, was so just that he denied and repudiated any insinuation made against Mr. Keenan.

I would be—I will not say cowardly, but woefully lacking in what is proper if I did not at this moment say it has been my fortune and privilege to work with Mr. Keenan in some respects for nearly 4 years. A more accurate gentleman I never knew. A man with higher ideals I never knew. I fear that the Senator from West Virginia simply labeled himself as a Senator who is willing to wound but afraid to strike.

If the Senator will permit me, the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]—who is always willing to strike if he wishes to wound, who never hides behind any insinuations—in the course of his able speech a couple of hours ago went on to say that in his opinion Congress could provide for conventions to ratify an amendment.

Mr. President, I have known the Senator from Montana longer than I have known anyone else in the Chamber, with the exception of my beloved colleague [Mr. HAYDEN], and I have a great respect for the legal talent and the ability of the Senator from Montana. He went on to pay a just tribute to the merits and legal attainments of the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, who has gone beyond these raucous voices where there is some peace. The Senator from Montana went on to say at some length that the late Senator from Montana, if he had lived, would not have made such an argument as the Attorney General made before the Supreme Court of the United States in the gold cases.

The late Senator from Montana, if he were alive, could not have done more than Mr. Cummings did—win the cases. But, Mr. President, the late Senator from Montana, if not upon the last day he ever served here, certainly upon the penultimate day he served here, participated in a debate, in which I joined, as to the power of Congress to set and fix the date and method and manner of holding conventions in the States to ratify amendments. I then took the position, and I now maintain it, that Congress has no power to force upon a State any convention, or to say to a State in what manner or method or at what time or place its convention shall act. That is within the jurisdiction of the State, and I advert to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1933, page 4150.

Omitting some superfluous matter:

> Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would gravely doubt the validity of a ratification that depended upon a convention in any State not called by an act of the legislature thereof.
>
> Mr. BORAH. I am quite free to admit that is the orderly way in which to call a convention; there can be no question about that.
>
> * * * * * * *
> Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me the way is open to them to elect a legislature which will call a convention instead of themselves holding a mass meeting, as it might be called.

Mr. President, I join with the able Senator from Montana in his tribute to our deceased colleague, by whose side I sat so long; but I am still of the opinion which Senator WALSH had at that time, that it is not within the power or proper province of Congress to say to Kansas and Kentucky and Nebraska and Maryland what kind of conventions they must call, and when they shall call them, and how they shall compensate their members, and so forth. Those matters are purely within the province of the States. I differ upon the subject with the Senator from Montana with great deference, because I know his ability and his scholarship.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say just one word in reply to what the Senator from Arizona has said.

I am sure my late colleague, Senator Walsh, for whose opinion I had great respect, had never given this matter serious consideration. I have in my office at the present time two briefs, one written by a former Attorney General and another by a very able lawyer who is a great friend of the administration, pointing out very definitely that the power in question exists in the Congress of the United States; and it seems to me very clear, from a close examination of the Constitution and the decisions, that that is the case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from Alabama. Will he let me answer?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield. I shall finish in about 2 minutes. That is all I want.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Montana says he doubts very much if his former colleague, the late lamented Senator Walsh, had sufficiently reflected upon that question, and had briefed it. That is a statement that is fair, because I care not how able you may be, Senators; I care nothing about your erudition or your ability; unless you have looked up the question, your offhand opinion—what lawyers call your horseback opinion—is not worth much.

It so happens, however, that on the day when the late Senator Walsh made that statement, just prior to the time he made it, I had in my pocket an opinion rendered by the former Attorney General, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, an able lawyer; and I discussed that opinion with Senator Walsh. I said, "Have you seen this opinion? Have you read it?" He said, "I have; and whilst I have a high opinion of General Palmer's character and his ability, I do not agree with him at all. I have investigated the matter, and I have no doubt of my position."

So, instead of the late Senator Walsh not having investigated the question, he had investigated it. Indeed, Mr. President, one of the strongest features about the erudition and the ability and the successes of the late Senator Walsh was that he never spoke without first investigating the subject. If he spoke upon that occasion without investigating it, it was the only occasion upon which I ever heard him speak without adequate preparation.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLACK. Let me have just 2 minutes. Then I will yield the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say just one word.

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course the Senator from Arizona knew my late colleague much better than I did.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not say that.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knew him much better than I did, and I am willing to agree with what the Senator says; but I say that one of the ablest lawyers in New Yory City, who is a great friend of the administration, and who is supporting it in this matter, has written a brief to the opposite effect which it seems to me is quite conclusive, and I have investigated it. I think there can be no question about it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I desire at this time to thank the very able Senator from Arizona for assisting me. The Senator will remember that just a few minutes ago the Senator from Montana suggested that I should not be able to name any lawyer of any standing who would take the position I was taking upon this subject; and I am very glad to find that the very able and reputable lawyer who is the chairman of our Judiciary Committee does agree with my statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a word. I heard the remark of the able Senator from Washington, and was struck with it, and that is what caused me to make this research into tomes that have lain covered with dust since that day. I think the Senator from Washington is correct in his conclusion.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, were I not fearful that something I have said might leave the wrong impression with reference to my good friend from Montana, I should not have asked even for 2 more minutes.

I fully realize that the Senator from Montana has always been bold and courageous in his political life. I realize that he is bold and courageous in his political life today. I have been disappointed that he should become fearful about the word "packing", when I thought it was so much out of keeping with his uniform courage and boldness in stepping forward with reference to obtaining the things that he believed should be accomplished for the people of the Nation.

Mr. President, I do not think I, myself, have occupied much of the time, but much time has been occupied while I was on the floor. I beg the pardon of the Senate for having occupied even as much time as I have; but I do not believe we need to fear. Our Nation will continue to go along in spite of all the fears and all the apprehensions that have been sounded. I sincerely hope, as I said a while ago, that we shall keep the debates on the issues as to whether or not this bill should be passed, and whether or not constitutional amendments should be submitted to the people, on a high plane of reason and logic, instead of indulging in personalities, which mean nothing.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4720) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN of Michigan in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of Brig. Gen. Carl Ashby Badger, Utah National Guard, and Brig. Gen. Harold Richards Barker, Rhode Island National Guard, to be brigadier generals, National Guard of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Lt. Col. Millard Fillmore Harmon, Jr., to be colonel in the Air Corps of the Regular Army with temporary rank from April 1, 1937, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committee, the calendar is in order.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Erle R. Dickover, of California, to be consul general of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dr. John N. Bowden to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dr. Robert D. Mansfield to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FOCHT, OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 167

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
March 29, 1937.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, Representative FOCHT had a long and honorable record of public service. He was a Federal and State legislator, a State executive officer, and a military leader. In private life he was a publisher, a fraternalist, and an orator of note. Pennsylvania, by his passing, has lost a loyal and noble son; the country a wise lawmaker.

Born in New Bloomfield, Perry County, Pa., the son of a Lutheran minister, "BEN" FOCHT, as he was known to all, was educated at Bucknell University, at Pennsylvania State College, and at Susquehanna University, which conferred on him the degree of master of arts. He began the publication of the Lewisburg Saturday News at 18 years of age, and was president of that journal at the time of his death. "BEN" FOCHT was a pioneer in progressive legislation. While a Member of the House of Representatives in 1915 he introduced an old-age pension bill, urged its passage, and recommended that the eligibility age be set at 65 years. His length of service in the House of Representatives approximated 20 years, and he had the distinction of being the only Republican Member of the House of Representatives in the present Congress who entered it in 1907. To his widow, daughter, and son I extend my deepest sympathy.

I send resolutions to the desk, which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 106) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the second resolution the Chair appoints the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] as the committee on the part of the Senate.

RECESS

Mr. DAVIS. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 30, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

We praise Thee that Thou didst not suffer Thy Holy One to see corruption. We rejoice to know that life is ever lord of death and because He lives we shall live also. Still, still with Thee when purple morning breaketh and fadeless day gilds the sky and clothes the cheerless, desolate tomb with the glory of the risen Lord. We praise Thee, O Lord, for returning springtime; fill our lives with kindred joy and promise; awaken in us that life which care, sorrow, and trouble have often caused to die out. O give unto us that spiritual vision by which we behold the beauty of divine things. Through the dispensation of Providence death has again entered our family and taken a faithful servant; with fidelity and honor he served the public. May the glow of Easter day be the undying hope of those who knew and loved him. Through Christ our glorified Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 25, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1088. An act for the relief of the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co.;

H. R. 1089. An act for the relief of Charles M. Perkins;

H. R. 1091. An act for the relief of Capt. J. H. Merriam, Supply Corps, United States Navy; and

H. R. 1094. An act for the relief of Clark F. Potts and Charles H. Barker.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3630. An act for the relief of E. C. Willis, father of the late Charles R. Willis, a minor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 323. An act to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands in Arizona, New Mexico, or California", approved March 4, 1913, as extended by the acts of April 11, 1916, June 30, 1919, and March 10, 1928;

S. 420. An act for the relief of A. D. Hampton;

S. 436. An act for the relief of owners of property damaged by high waters in the Blackfoot Reservoir;

S. 590. An act for the relief of the estate of Grace M. Moore, deceased;

S. 1590. An act for the relief of Warren J. Fox;

S. 1631. An act for the relief of Commander William I. Causey, United States Navy, and Lt. Comdr. Earl LeRoy Bailey, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

S. 1632. An act for the relief of Capt. Benjamin Dutton, Jr., Capt. C. H. J. Keppler, Commander Leo H. Thebaud, and Lt. Comdr. Gordon S. Bower, Supply Corps, United States Navy;

S. 1721. An act authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma;

S. 1831. An act to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds;

S. 1901. An act to amend the last two provisos, section 26, act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248); and

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement just issued by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, condemning sit-down strikes, and I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD sections 5299 and 5300 of the Revised Statutes, which, in my opinion, make it mandatory for the President to stop sit-down strikes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table tomorrow morning, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting the request, the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that there is already a special order for 30 minutes on tomorrow.

Mr. FULLER. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for 10 minutes following the special order for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, and in connection therewith to insert an excerpt from a speech by the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein extracts from the Methodist Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, following the special order for today, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, and to include therein a few paragraphs from the report of the committee about which I shall speak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

TOM MOONEY AND THE SUPPRESSED REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE WICKERSHAM COMMITTEE

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, for almost a quarter of a century a labor organizer, Tom Mooney by name, has been a prisoner in the California prison of San Quentin, and during that time there has been the ever-widening belief that his trial and conviction was a shameful miscarriage of justice.

A few weeks ago the Assembly of the California Legislature passed a bill granting Mooney a free, unconditional pardon.

This bill was defeated in the California Senate.

When President Hoover appointed his National Committee on Law Observance and Enforcement in 1929—the so-called Wickersham committee—the interest in it was very great, and when its findings were published the public had every reason to suppose it was being given the full and complete report.

Such was not the case.

A subcommittee of this commission had been appointed to make a study of "lawlessness in law enforcement", with Judge Kenyon, of Iowa, as its chairman. Because of the sustained public interest in the Mooney case, that was chosen as the subject of study, but the findings of the subcommittee were not included in the commission's published report. They were deliberately suppressed.

Senators Walsh of Montana, Cutting, and Costigan were so roused by the omission that there was introduced in the Senate a bill calling upon President Hoover to produce the suppressed report. This bill was passed, but the report, nevertheless, remained locked in the Senate Judiciary Committee, and not until the Hoover administration came to an end did it become accessible to the public.

Here it is with a foreword written by Senator WHEELER, and anyone reading the findings of that subcommittee will be convinced that Tom Mooney is the victim of a monstrous injustice—the victim of lawlessness in law enforcement.

All the facts of the case are now known to labor throughout the country, and I commend this little book to the Members of Congress because of its possible bearing upon the prevalent sit-down strikes with which we are so much concerned just now, and its possible bearing, also, upon that "strange unrest" noted by Mr. Justice McReynolds in an after-dinner speech recently made by him.

Edmund Burke, in a letter to Fox, wrote:

> People crushed by law have no hope but from power. If laws are their enemies, they will be enemies to law; and those who have much to hope and nothing to lose will always be dangerous.

The suppressed report of the subcommittee on lawlessness in law enforcement concludes:

> 1. There was never any scientific attempt made by either the police or the prosecution to discover the perpetrators of the crime. The investigation was in reality turned over to a private detective, who used his position to cause the arrest of the defendants. The police investigation was reduced to a hunt for evidence to convict the arrested defendants.

2. There were flagrant violations of the statutory law of California by both the police and the prosecution in the manner in which the defendants were arrested and held incommunicado, and in the subsequent searches of their homes to procure evidence against them.

3. After the arrest of the defendants, witnesses were brought to the jails to identify them, and their identifications were accepted by the police and the prosecution, despite the fact that these witnesses were never required to pick the defendants out of a line-up or to demonstrate their accuracy by any other test.

4. Immediately after the arrests of the defendants there commenced a deliberate attempt to arouse public prejudice against them by a series of almost daily interviews given to the press by prosecuting officials.

5. Witnesses were produced at the trials with information in the hands of the prosecution that seriously challenged the credibility of the witnesses, but this information was deliberately concealed.

6. Witnesses were permitted to testify at the trials, despite such knowledge in the possession of the prosecution of prior contradictory stories told by these witnesses, as to make their mere production a vouching for perjured testimony.

7. Witnesses were coached in their testimony to a degree that approximated subornation of perjury. There is a strong inference that some of this coaching was done by prosecuting officials, and other evidence points to knowledge by the prosecuting officials that such coaching was being practiced on other witnesses.

8. The prejudice against the defendants, stimulated by newspaper publicity, was further appealed to at the trials by unfair and intemperate arguments to the jury in the opening and closing statements of the prosecuting attorneys.

9. After the trials, the disclosures casting doubt on the justice of the convictions were minimized, and every attempt made to defeat the liberation of the defendants by a campaign of misrepresentation and propaganda carried on by the officials who had prosecuted them.

The interest in the Mooney case has persisted for nearly a quarter of a century, and will continue until justice is finally done to this victim of "lawlessness in law enforcement." [Applause.]

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE REAL-ESTATE BONDHOLDERS' REORGANIZATIONS

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House just made, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, for the first time in 30 years' service in this body I rise to a question of personal privilege. I am deeply grieved that it becomes necessary for me to do so.

On Thursday last my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] saw fit to make a calculated attack upon me, to malign my character, and to impugn my actions as chairman of the Select Committee to Investigate Bondholders' Reorganizations.

In fairness to myself and because I can show that his accusations are without foundation and his entire statement a distortion of facts to mislead the House and the country, I must take up your time. Otherwise I would not do so.

He has charged, first, that I failed to do anything to obtain passage of legislation to eliminate the abuses which our committee has investigated, but sought to continue the committee itself, and second, that the people of Chicago are sick and tired of the investigation.

Replying to the latter charge, I acknowledge that there are those who are most anxious that our investigations cease. The gentleman does not speak for the hundreds of thousands of bondholders who have suffered at the hands of the houses of issue, trust companies, receivers, and protective bondholders' committees. The reverse appears to be the case, and it would appear to me that he speaks for the houses of issue, for the trust companies, for the receivers, and for the protective committees. I most emphatically declare that the people of Chicago, with the exception of those who prey upon the bondholders, do not want our work discontinued.

To support his attack the gentleman from Illinois relies upon a newspaper article from the Detroit News, dated November 27, 1934; one which appeared in the Chicago Tribune on December 9, 1935; and another from the Chicago Daily News of about the same date.

This was at a time when the last two named newspapers gave the select committee quite a bit of publicity through the courtesy of Judge Barnes, and I see that the articles did not escape the attention of my colleague [Mr. CHURCH]. However, the public answer of my firm denying these charges apparently did escape his attention.

Perhaps it is only a coincidence that the gentleman had all of this information for upward of a year and a half, but did not feel it his duty to bring it to the attention of the House until the eve of the hearing upon my bill, H. R. 9, which is designed to put an end to the very abuses which he himself admits exist.

Of course, he has a remedy to prevent these abuses. He proposes to stop them by stopping the committee's work and halting further investigations.

Can it be that he seeks to prevent our filing a final report on the hundreds of pending reorganizations on which the committee is working—cases involving the investment of bondholders to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars? If these reorganizations are properly handled and taken out of the hands of the racketeers, the investments of the bondholders will be conserved and in many instances net them fair returns. By following the suggestion of Mr. CHURCH, there will be only the houses of issue and their ilk to protect these bondholders. They did not do such a good job of it in the past.

Much as I should like to go into reasons why the committee should be continued and its bill passed without delay, I will confine my remarks to answering the direct charges of the gentleman. I will answer them in detail in the order in which he made them. The gentleman quotes from newspapers, but I will quote from records.

In no instance since the creation of the select committee has my law firm represented the Chicago Title & Trust Co. in any matter in which it had an individual interest in the debt. Prior to that time it did represent that company in some matters.

In Cook County, Ill., the Chicago Title & Trust Co. is almost universally trustee under all mortgages and bond issues, under which mortgages it has the exclusive right of action. In very few instances where it is made trustee has it a personal interest; otherwise it is merely nominally the trustee to institute proceedings or release the mortgage when the debt is paid. When foreclosure is started on a mortgage or trust deed, the Chicago Title & Trust Co. is a necessary party.

In litigation in which the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein appears, and where the Chicago Title & Trust Co. happens to be trustee, it does not follow that my law firm represents that company. Mr. Perlman did handle some business for the company prior to the creation of the select committee; but I tell you, Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, since the select committee has come into existence Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein in no case has taken business from the Chicago Title & Trust Co., excepting where the firm represented the real party in interest—the holder of all or part of the mortgage debt, thus representing the Chicago Title & Trust Co. merely as the nominal plaintiff.

I deny that my firm has in any way profited, financially or otherwise, because of my chairmanship of the select committee. In fact, the contrary is true, since my firm has consistently avoided business that had the remotest connection with matters in which the select committee was active.

THE $6,400 FEE IN THE NORTHWEST BUILDING CORPORATION

The gentleman from Illinois quoted a newspaper article, one sentence of which read as follows:

Federal Judge Barnes has refused to allow payment of a fee of $6,400 to the law firm of Representative ADOLPH SABATH—Sabath, Perlman, Goodman, & Rein—in a receivership case involving the Northwest Building Corporation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I explain this matter of the $6,400 fee I must digress a bit. I became associated with the law firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein on October 15, 1931. Mr. Perlman previously had practiced in real estate and chancery law for some 25 years. He had established a large clientele which, of course, he carried with him. He is regarded as one of the leading five or six attorneys in his field in Chicago.

On October 25, 1932, foreclosure was instituted against the Northwest Building Corporation in the State court. A year later Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein appeared as counsel for the reorganization committee. Please note, Mr. Speaker, that that was almost a year before the select committee was created. Later a bankruptcy proceeding was started under section 77B before Judge Barnes.

HARDING THEATER CASE

On July 10, 1935, George S. Marks, a staff attorney of the select committee, intervened in the Harding Theater case which was also before Judge Barnes. Because of the connection of Mr. Barnes with the Chicago Title & Trust Co. just prior to his elevation to the Federal bench; and his concurrence in the transfer of $2,900,000 of cash belonging to bondholders from the Garard Investment Trust in exchange for impaired securities in the portfolio of the Garard Bank so that its officers could avoid prosecution by lapse of time; and because of Mr. Barnes' fee for representing the Chicago Title & Trust Co., receiver in the matter of $35,000 for sixty-nine 8-hour days and later of another $25,000 fee paid to Judge Barnes' brother in the same case, Mr. Marks asked for a change of venue. This was refused and Mr. Marks appealed.

Personally I had no knowledge of this matter, that is, that the application for change of venue would be asked.

Because Judge Barnes refused to allow Mr. Marks to file his intervening petition in the first instance, the circuit court of appeals found Mr. Marks not properly before it, and on that technicality denied his prayer for appeal.

GARFIELD ARMS HOTEL

About the middle of November 1935, in the Garfield Arms Hotel case before Judge Barnes, a new lease to the old lessee was being given consideration. The select committee received complaints that the lessee was conducting a questionable business on the premises, was keeping two sets of books, and was filing perjured statements of income with the court to avoid paying sufficient rental.

Mr. Powers, of the select committee, cautioned the trustee to investigate before agreeing to a new lease. Judge Barnes heard of it and summoned Powers and inferred that Powers intimidated the court or the trustee.

The judge demanded information held by the select committee. When the chief investigator endeavored to discuss this with the judge he was arrested on a contempt charge. All details are contained in the printed records of the select committee, available to whoever cared to know the truth.

Now mind, Mr. Speaker, and note the dates: The change of venue matter was in July 1935; the contempt incident November 1935. Then suddenly a new angle developed. The Northwest Building Corporation case before Judge Barnes had previously been concluded and fees allowed. Sabath, Goodman, Perlman & Rein were in the case since October 1933, 9 months before the creation of the select committee.

On October 1, 1935, the firm was allowed this fee of $6,400. Suddenly, on December 5, 1935, the judge vacated approval of the $6,400 fee.

The vacating of that order gave the newspapers an opportunity they had been seeking, to lay great stress upon the fact that the judge had vacated an order he had originally entered months before for a fee in a $600,000 reorganization matter.

What was the reason for this?

The property had been reorganized with the approval of the judge some time before, right after the change of venue and the contempt incidents.

Later the court must have repented. On April 27, 1936, he found—and I quote part of his order:

> That Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein have rendered services in this matter * * * that said services were of value * * * and that said services are reasonably worth * * * the sum of $2,500.

But there is an aftermath that I must mention. During the time of this "off again, on again" matter of the fee the judge started a one-man inquisition of the legal fraternity to ascertain who was soliciting 77B cases and which lawyers were splitting fees. He appointed a "friend of the court"; he developed a 2,300-page, legal-size, stenographic record. No prosecution followed. The friend of the court was paid $3,000, the court reporter $400, all out of the bondholders' estate. Out of the 2,300 pages, 187 appertain to the Northwest Building Corporation case; the rest has nothing to do with it. But the bondholders paid the bill.

TUPY'S LETTER TO HOLDERS OF FORMER BONDS

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois asserts his aversion to the practices of shyster lawyers, and by the introduction of a letter sent to ex-bondholders in a certain case by Mr. Tupy raises the suspicion that our own committee attorneys engaged in similar practices.

The gentleman has only to inquire of any fair-minded judge to be advised that the activities of this committee have to a great extent eliminated this class of lawyer.

A brief statement as to the reasons for that letter sent out will be enlightening. It was actuated because many ex-bondholders complained to the select committee that their savings had been wiped out by a legal maneuver.

In retrospect, perhaps Mr. Tupy acted incautiously, but he was actuated by the highest motives. There is but one criticism that may be made against him. He was overzealous.

I heard of the letter two or three days later here in Washington, and immediately telephoned Mr. Tupy to stop all action in the matter and cautioned him that there were those who would welcome an opportunity willfully to misconstrue his good intent into wrongdoing. Mr. Tupy followed orders. The replies from these victimized people are in the files of the select committee. No lawyer was given anything. No suit was filed. No bonds were deposited. Mr. Tupy still insists that these people should fight for their rights.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that the select committee never accepted a bond or any other security for deposit. It never urged deposit with anyone else; it never turned any lawsuit over to any attorney; it never permitted any of its own attorneys to accept a single cent of pay for the committee's work, nor to utilize committee information for personal gain.

In connection with this matter I ask that letter, dated April 12, 1935, addressed by the committee to Mr. Charles Lefevre, be appended to my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SABATH. At the same time I ask unanimous consent that from time to time I may be permitted to insert letters directly affecting the record; verified court records.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the latter part of the gentleman's request.

Mr. SABATH. I ask unanimous consent that from time to time I may be permitted to insert letters directly affecting this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not ask that now?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; unanimous consent that I may be able to insert certain letters in connection with the charges and certain statements and telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman, will as he comes to them, designate the particular letter, I do not believe that I shall object.

Mr. SABATH. It is only in connection with these matters.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's general request, but will not object to the specific requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the latter part of the request. Is there objection to the first part of the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now. I will say this: That was where the gentleman read from the hearings before the committee. He did not state on the floor that I explained that application for the $25,000 and how it came about, but it is now in the RECORD.

Mr. CHURCH. No revision was made after I left the floor on that part.

Mr. SABATH. But the gentleman did not state it on the floor.

Mr. CHURCH. No revision was made after I left the floor of that part.

TRUST NO. 17400 INVOLVING CHICAGO TITLE & TRUST CO.

Mr. SABATH. In reading the statement I made before the Judiciary Committee on March 6, 1936, when that committee held a hearing on the conservator bill (H. R. 10634), the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] omitted many of my answers and explanations.

I do not like to charge that the omission was for the deliberate purpose of misleading the House, but I do think that it had that effect.

His revised remarks, as they now appear in the RECORD, does include one of my answers and clarifies that situation.

I refer to my statement wherein I explained that Mr. Mecartney, acting as friend of the court and not as a representative of the select committee, filed a claim for $25,000 only as a means of bringing an important case before a higher court on appeal. We knew, and everyone else knew, that the fee would not be allowed. He took what appeared to him the only course by which this matter of great importance to bondholders could reach the circuit court of appeals.

Nevertheless, I saw the danger of Mecartney's act being misinterpreted and criticized. Immediately I directed Mr. Tupy to notify the court that Mr. Mecartney was acting contrary to the rules of the committee, which Mr. Tupy did.

I am appending to my remarks a letter from Mr. Mecartney dated March 26, 1937, which more fully explains this case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to insert the letter referred to?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Here is a letter, written by myself as committee chairman, dated January 30, 1936, addressed to Judge Wilkerson, stating that Mr. Mecartney's fee should not be allowed because of any connection with the committee. I ask unanimous consent, as the time will not permit me to read it, to embody that letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1936.

In re: Chicago Title & Trust Co., Trust No. 17400.
Hon. JAMES H. WILKERSON,
Judge of the United States District Court,
Federal Courthouse, Chicago, Ill.

HONORABLE JUDGE: It has come to our attention that Mr. Newell Mecartney has filed a petition in the above-entitled cause asking for an allowance of a fee for services rendered by him as amicus curiae.

Although Mr. Mecartney has given a great deal of his time and effort to this select committee in its work, it was expressly understood that all such services rendered to this select committee were to be entirely voluntary and gratuitous, with no obligation on the part of this select committee to reimburse him for same. This has been the universal rule of our committee with reference to all attorneys who were kind enough to assist the committee in its work.

Respectfully yours,

A. J. SABATH,
Chairman of Committee.

Mr. SABATH. In this case, known as Trust 17400, the gentleman from Illinois implied that my law firm represented the Chicago Title & Trust Co. To set him right, let me state that Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein represented intervening bondholders from April 1933, more than a year before the select committee was created.

They did not represent the Chicago Title & Trust Co.

Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein petitioned for a fee in June 1935. In July 1935 the select committee interested itself in the case. Immediately my firm withdrew its request for the fee, Mr. Mills, of my firm, stating in open court that because of the select committee's interest in the case the firm of Sabath, Perlman, Goodman & Rein preferred voluntarily to withdraw its petition for the fee.

The gentleman from Illinois was not even fair enough to give credit to my firm for its voluntary waiver of fees in open court in the only case where there might be a claim of diversity of interest—even though my firm rendered services long before the select committee was created and long before it interested itself in the case.

The gentleman from Illinois could have obtained these facts from the court record had he wanted to recite the truth.

Although he has offices in the same building in Chicago as I do, and although he is my colleague in Congress, he elected to base his charges on garbled and unfair newspaper articles instead of seeking to compare notes with me to learn the true facts.

The gentleman knows Mr. Mecartney, and he will not state that he is not an honest, upright, efficient lawyer. He lives within a short distance of him.

Mr. CHURCH. I agree that Mr. Mecartney is an honest, upright lawyer.

Mr. SABATH. Still you have attacked him because he was trying to do the right thing, the righteous thing, the honorable thing, not only in behalf of the American Legion but of the bondholders and the people who have suffered so much at the hands of these racketeers.

L. L. HOLLANDER MATTER

The gentleman from Illinois accuses our volunteer attorneys of soliciting business through the select committee. Surely he could have ascertained the falsity of that statement had he read the court records concerning Mr. Hollander.

Mr. L. L. Hollander is a young lawyer on the select committee's staff. While new at the job some bondholders asked him in the Chicago office to recommend a lawyer through whom they might intervene in the Churchill Hotel case. Mr. Hollander informed them that the select committee regulations prohibited his so doing. He did mention another lawyer who was then intervening for other bondholders, and to him these people went.

One of the large law firms in the case heard of this and reported it to Federal Judge Sullivan. I immediately wrote the court a letter in full explanation. Later the court examined Mr. Hollander, exonerated him completely, and I understand, commended him on his work. The truth of this is available in the court records.

But the moment my attention was called to his mistake in that one particular case I sent a letter to Judge Sullivan demanding a thorough investigation of that matter or any other matters of a similar nature.

I asked unanimous consent to insert that letter addressed by me on December 3, 1935, to Judge Sullivan in the Hollander case.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., December 3, 1935.

Re: American Bond & Mortgage Co. issue, Churchill Hotel. In the matter of the Churchill, Inc., a corporation, bankrupt. In the matter of Churchill Hotel Co. Before Charles A. McDonald, master in chancery.
Hon. PHILIP L. SULLIVAN,
United States Courthouse, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR JUDGE: I was greatly surprised to read in the late edition of the Chicago Daily News of December 2, 1935, on the front page, an article headed "Sabath Board Lawyer Accused of Soliciting Clients; Quiz On." This morning in the Chicago Daily Tribune, December 3, 1935, I read a further article headed "Aid of Sabath Faces Federal Court Inquiry", and was very glad to read in the last sentence of the article a statement by you saying, "I don't think the Sabath committee would countenance such action." You no doubt will readily understand that it is an impossibility for me, personally, to follow all the details of activities of this select committee's office in room 703, United States Courthouse. Because of the news articles I had Mr. Tupy, our chief investigator, report to me the data relating to this matter. This information I am glad to give you in brief form:

Some time in April 1935, Mr. Max R. Kargman, attorney, came to our committee's office complaining about the manner in which the above-named case was being handled both in the State courts and in the Federal court under 77B, inferring that the attorneys of record, outside of himself, were holding up the process to the detriment of bondholders. He stated that in the State court this matter had been pending for about 5½ years and that a suit on the same subject was started in the Danville Federal court about 8 months prior, from where it was transferred to the Chicago Federal courts, where it then lay without any action. However, 6 months prior to that a similar case was filed in the Chicago Federal courts, and on the date of Mr. Kargman's call at our office both of these Federal cases, as well as the State case, were pending. Mr. Kargman further stated that there was a serious question about whether or not certain purchasers of alleged first-mortgage bonds were being justly treated in view of effort being made at court to establish their holdings in the record as subordinated bonds. Mr. Tupy referred Mr. Kargman to Mr. L. L. Hollander, one of our staff attorneys working at that time without compensation, to go into the matter. Mr. Hollander evidently concluded that if other bondholders of interest knew about these allegations that they might set themselves up more firmly to protect their interests. In his honest desire to help protect bondholders' interests he drew from our files four names of persons who registered their complaints with us and telephoned them to come in. He then explained the matter to them, stating that Mr. Kargman had already interceded and that if they wished they could join his petitioner for the purpose of joint action.

I believe you are better acquainted with the subsequent process through your court than I am. But I am informed that later on an effort by all other attorneys, excepting Mr. Kargman, was made to dismiss the proceeding before you, and that upon Mr. Kargman's objection you referred the matter to the master, where indirect charges have been made that this congressional committee is aiding attorneys through their connection with this office to build up lucrative business for their own personal benefit.

After L. L. Hollander discussed this matter with registrant complainants he referred them to his brother's office, S. W. Hollander, who acted on his brother's recommendation in obtaining from the bondholders powers of attorney authorizing him to sign a petition on their behalf to intervene. Mr. Kargman then drafted a petition in which Mr. Hollander's bondholders joined with Mr. Kargman's bondholder. Thereafter neither Mr. L. L. Hollander nor Mr. S. W. Hollander had taken any action in this matter, nor did they at any time expect to get paid for any work to date. Both Mr. L. L. Hollander and Mr. S. W. Hollander at that time felt that they were making it possible for uninformed bondholders to have opportunity to protect their interests in this way.

After April 1935 none of these matters were brought to the personal attention of our Mr. Tupy until October 10, 1935. At that time some attorney in the case accused Mr. Tupy's office similarly to what appeared in the newspaper articles. He immediately took the matter up with Mr. L. L. Hollander by letter, of which a copy is attached, sending a similar letter to Mr. S. W. Hollander. On October 12, 1935, he sent out a general letter to all our staff attorneys, about 40 in number, a copy of which is attached.

You will note from these letters that Mr. Tupy was very emphatic in reiterating the rules of this committee about using any of our data for any personal benefit of any attorney. He also discussed the matter with Mr. Kargman and Mr. Kargman stated at that time that in view of the apparent criticism of this select committee by other attorneys on the other side in the case, he was willing to dismiss his case, but felt that the holders of the alleged junior securities should get better treatment than they were being offered in the plan of reorganization, and that he felt it would be improper to withdraw all of a sudden and leave the petitioners in the lurch.

Mr. Tupy advises me that after delving into all these facts his opinion was that no direct harm was caused anyone, particularly in view of Mr. Kargman's assurance to him that he was ready to finish his work without any charge to anyone. And that he felt, because this matter had been pending for so many years in one court or another, that the rights of bondholders would best be served if the adjudication of the matter would be permitted to proceed without any action on our part. He states that he felt that if Mr. Kargman had any basis for his points he would be upheld in them, or that if he failed to substantiate his allegations he would be denied them, and that in neither case the bondholders would be any worse off.

Mr. Tupy further states that this matter was fully explained to the firm of Sennenschein, Berkson, Lautmann, Levinson & Morse in effort to void any public misconstruction against this committee, but that evidently it was the desire of someone to use this purely unselfish intent on the part of L. L. Hollander to discredit this select committee.

I wish to assure you that I have repeatedly emphasized to all our staff, whether attorneys or others, that data in our possession must never be used for any selfish purposes of anyone, or that it may not be divulged other than in our public hearings or by proper presentation through our specifically accredited attorneys to the courts.

With this determined desire on my part I will thank you, as well as any other judge, to inform me whenever any indication appears that this rule of this select committee is being imposed upon by any of our staff attorneys or employees.

It will give me pleasure to have our Mr. Tupy, as well as both of the Messrs. Hollander, to appear before you and under oath in public hearing restate these facts or any other facts that you may desire to have. In view of the publicity given this matter I would appreciate if you could hear this within the next few days, since Mr. L. L. Hollander is taking his sick father to a hospital in California early next week.

Respectfully yours.

THE CHICAGO PARK CEMETERY MATTER

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Illinois charges Mr. Tupy with defrauding bondholders, with refusal to pay rent, and of being a member of a protective committee which asked for a fee of $45,000, and other things. Not a single one of those statements is true.

I have known Mr. Tupy and his family for 35 years. I regard him loyal.

Two years before the select committee was created Mr. Tupy assisted in reorganization of a $150,000 bond issue secured by a mausoleum in the Chicago Park Cemetery. For his services Tupy received not one cent and never asked for one.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield for a short question.

Mr. CHURCH. I stated that the agreement provided for a fee to Tupy's committee of 30 percent, which will amount to $45,000, and the gentleman has not and will not deny that.

Mr. SABATH. I do deny that, and I will show by proof that you have been misinformed; that the people you have employed and who have been getting this information have misled you. The money you have spent has gone to people who do not know what honesty means.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I will come to that some other time.

Mr. CHURCH. Finish that up, please.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. Tupy was not a member of the protective committee but worked with it to accomplish the outcome. He never was a member of any protective committee and is not now. Let me read you a telegram, dated March 25, 1937, addressed to me, which speaks for itself:

Following telegram sent to honorable Congressman CHURCH tonight: "Your statement regarding Chicago Park Cemetery appearin Chicago newspapers today absolutely without foundation, the writer being recognized a representative businessman in fruit and produce industries Southwater Market, Chicago; happens to be large stockholder Chicago Park Cemetery mentioned. We have turned over entire operation of cemetery to bondholders for a period of years, with absolutely no fees to Tupy or anybody else connected with bondholders committee. Not a single member of this bondholders' committee has or ever can receive a dime compensation. This kind of half-cocked publicity certainly will make Democrats of us few remaining Republicans." This certainly is rank injustice.

(Signed) CHARLES W. IRRGANG.

I never heard of this gentleman, and I do not know him.

Also I desire to read a short extract from a letter sent me by the Berwyn Agency & Loan Corporation dated March 26, 1937:

The facts in the case are so different from those stated by Representative CHURCH that I take the privilege of writing to you that justice may be done to Mr. Tupy and Congressman SABATH's committee.

Mr. Tupy worked for this corporation from December 1932 to July 1934, and during that time he worked out the details of the reorganization of the bond issue in question in which an apparently worthless bond issue was turned into an issue worth 100 cents on the dollar without one penny in cost to the bondholders.
